"The production of pictures in South America itself has made little headway. There is some production on a small scale, but it doesn't compare in quality with the American product There isn't enough capital back of the producing end and there is a lack of directors and motion picture actors. Meanwhile the people are satisfied with the imported product and I think they will be as long as it continues to give satisfaction"

Goldwyn Plans Big Campaign

GOLDWYN PICTURES CORPORATION'S intensive exploitation campaign on Rex Beach's special production. "The Silver Horde," to be shown at the Capitol theatre, New York, the week of May 9th, is in full swing. Window displays have been installed in many stores in different parts of the city, and choice locations are being secured for the striking "Silver Horde" paper. In all there will be approximately 1,000 boards

The ingenious lobby and window display is a mechanical arrangement that represents a horde of fish caught in a net A play of colored lights on the silvery bodies of the fish, so arranged that they are moved by a breeze blowing through the net, gives a brilliant appearance to the animated display. It will occupy a conspicuous position in the lobby of the Capitol.

Arrangements are being made with the publishers of "The Silver Horde" in novel form, to ship books to a long list of drug and stationery stores where they will be used in a window display. The active co-operation of book dealers in pushing the sale of the book in connection with advertising of the New York run of the film, has been secured.

Co-operative advertising in newspapers is being arranged with dealers whose goods make a tie up campaign feasible. For example, retail fish stores are being induced to make a special feature of salmon, advertising using "The Silver Horde" as a catchline, whereas a number of sporting goods concerns are preparing to push the sale of fishing tackle, making "The Silver Horde" window display the central point of interest in their advertising layout Grocery stores have an opportunity to boost their canned goods in connection with "Silver Horde" exploitation.

Another phase of the campaign that has been favorably received by a number of the leading hotels and restaurants is the featuring of "The Silver Horde" salmon on their menus Negotiations are now under way with Alfred McCann, the food expert, with a view to having him endorse the production in a way that will arouse interest in the industrial aspect of the fish industry in schools and colleges and especially among those who are taking courses in domestic economy

For street exploitation, a float carrying an Arctic scene is being prepared, also an automobile rigged up with a metal body representing a fish During the week of the engagement at the Capitol these displays will be seen on Broadway, Fifth avenue and other important thoroughfares A booklet, entitled, "The Story of Rex Beach, the man who wrote 'The Silver Horde,'" will be distributed in large quantities from the floats and by boys assigned to different parts of the city.

The exploitation campaign is being planned and carried out by Howard Dietz, manager of publicity for Goldwyn, and G. L. Brightman, manager of the exploitation department

Through special arrangement with B. C. Whitney, Vitagraph has secured the services of Mrs. Evan Burroughs Fontaine, a featured dancer in Ed Wynn's New Carnival, now playing at the New Amsterdam theatre, for a big special banquet cene in an Alice Joyce production now being filmed.

Things are just humming with us so the letter in the back of the book cannot appear until next week.

First Run Exhibitors Book "Deep Purple"

A number of important first run exhibitors gathered this week in the projection room of Realart Pictures Corporation to view "The Deep Purple," an R. A. Walsh production, presented by Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, and declared the picture to be the best of the noted director's career.

Edward Bowes, managing director and Thomas F. Walker, director of film, of the Capitol theatre, were present and at the close of the showing announced that they would run the feature in the big Broadway theatre during the week of May 2nd.

Goldwyn Campaign Surprises Philadelphia

Co-operating with the Stanley Company of America, the Philadelphia office of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation inaugurated the initial presentation of Will Rogers' "Water, Water Everywhere" at the Victoria Theatre, with the most intensive exploitation Philadelphia had ever witnessed. The campaign opened two weeks prior to the showing, with every angle of attack in force to arouse the curiosity of the people.

"The Honey Bee" Gains Increased Favor

The following statement has been submitted by the American Film Company on the way that its release "The Honey Bee," featuring Mme. Marguerita Sylva, is being received by exhibitors:

"'The Honey Bee' is going forward with a cumulative popularity which is most interesting. Its fame is spreading and it will soon go on its own impetus with scarcely the need of salesmen's introductions. The proof of this is the come-back list from those who conservatively booked for a few days."

Look out for the letter in the back of the book next week. Rushing business prevented me writing this week.

Campaign Creates Interest

European Magazines Wants News of Paramount Pictures for Fans

THE interest aroused by the world wide publicity and advertising campaign for Paramount Artcraft pictures conducted by the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of P. E. Shauer, was emphasized during the week by the receipt of a cablegram from Film og Kino, one of the leading Scandinavian film magazines, requesting immediate shipment of many stories and photographs for use in early issues of the magazine, in addition to the regular photograph and story service supplied exclusively to this magazine.

The magazine is published at Christiania, Norway, and has a wide circulation throughout the Scandinavian countries. It is regarded as one of the most artistic and popular fan magazines published in Europe, and is noted for its art work. For months this magazine has been using a large amount of space for stories and photographs of Paramount Artcraft pictures.

The March issue devoted twenty-four pages to film stories and photographs, of which sixteen were given to Paramount Artcraft, two of English productions, three to Scandinavian, one to other American and two to general film news. The last two pages carried a general story on the salaries of leading film stars, and much of this space discussed the earnings of Paramount Artcraft stars. This number was not an exception to the general rule, for Paramount Artcraft has been allotted more space than that given to all other American and European productions.

Star Returns to the Studio

Bessie Love Back After Taking Exteriors in Rio Vista Valley

BESSIE Love and the cast of her first Andrew J. Callaghan Production have returned to their Los Angeles studio this week after a long period devoted to exterior shooting in the Rio Vista country. The demands of "The Midlanders," the Charles Tenney Jackson novel which the star is adapting to the screen were such that special emphasis was laid on accurate and colorful location work.

Directors Ida May Park and Joseph de Grasse, who have created a new departure in film circles by collaborating in supervision of Miss Love declare that the exterior scenes made in Rio Vista will give the first production of the star a unique tone in that aspect of the film alone.

In many of the exteriors Miss Love was able to get over her appealing ingenue character with touching effect and these, according to her directors, will stand out as the best work this capable young actress has ever done.

In accordance with their plan to develop all branches of production activity with the same care for quality, the Callaghan organization announces this week that Bernard McConnville, who wrote the continuity for Mary Pickford's "The Hoodlum" and "Heart of the Hills," will do the continuity for the Bessie Love company.

This is Frances Guihan, Pathe's star continuity writer, who has just completed the script for Ruth Roland's new serial, "Broadway Bab"

Scripts Ready for Two Vitagraph Pictures

C. Graham Baker, associate editor of the Vitagraph scenario department at the Brooklyn studio, recently finished writing the picturizations of special vehicles for Alice Joyce and Corinne Griffith, two of that company's first-string stars. The two stories referred to are "The Vice of Fools," by Francis James, and "The Whisper Market," by W. E. Scutt. These will be put into production at an early date.

"The Vice of Fools," in which Miss Joyce will appear, is a society comedy drama and "The Whisper Market" is a tale of South American intrigue.

Comedy Is Bought for Lyons and Moran

"Fixed by George," one of Edgar Franklin's recent novels, has been bought by Universal, for Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran. It will be produced as a five-reel comedy. Franklin has come to be recognized as one of the leading writers of farce plots. Two of his stories recently put into films were "Everything But the Truth," a Universal film, starring Lyons and Moran, and "Don't Ever Marry," a Marshall Neilan production.

"Fixed by George" will be the third, five-reel, Lyons-and-Moran comedy. The first was "Everything But the Truth," and the second a screen version of Fred Jackson's funny, musical comedy, "La La Lucille." "Fixed by George" will be put into production early in the summer and will be released next fall by Universal as one of its Star Series pictures.

Schomer-Ross Agent Is Touring Key Cities

Agnes Egan Cobb is touring the country in the interests of the Schomer-Ross Productions and the Joe Brandt products. On her way West, Mrs. Cobb will attend the Chicago Convention. The purpose of the trip is to get in touch with exhibitors and state rights buyers in the principal cities, including Pittsburgh, Detroit, Columbus, Cleveland, Chicago, Minneapolis, Denver, San Francisco, Omaha, Kansas City, Salt Lake City, Seattle, St. Louis, New Orleans and Atlanta.

American Cinema Picture Ready Soon

"Stolen Moments," starring Marguerite Namara, is rapidly nearing completion, announces the American Cinema Corporation. The players at the present time are in the South, filming exteriors at Savannah, Georgia, and St. Augustine, Florida. Miss Namara's role in the new production is described as one of wide histronic scope. Smart and ultra-fashionable gowns are also said to be a feature. Her second picture for American Cinema is to be started immediately upon the completion of this first production. It will be based on a script written by her husband, Guy Bolton.

Backer Leaves for South

Jans, Sales Manager, to Visit Exchanges to Sell New Productions

ANNOUNCEMENT has been made from the office of Jans Pictures, Inc., that F. E. Backer, general sales manager for the concern, left last week on a flying trip through the Southern States in the interest of the first two Jans Picture releases, "Love Without Question" and "A Woman's Business," both featuring Olive Tell in the leading role.

The purpose of Mr. Backer's trip, it is said, is to bring the Independent Exchanges of the South into closer co-operation with the home office. He expects to introduce these pictures in localities where they are unknown and also adopt measures whereby the South may be benefited by the exceptional opportunities offered by Herman F. Jans, president, to those who sign up for these attractions.

It is understood that Mr. Backer will place before the attention of the Southern Independent Exchange the value of both productions from the standpoint of interest to the motion picture public. He will also explain the contrast of the two features, assuring exhibitors who sign up for the entire Olive Tell series that they will be getting pictures with a wide scope of appeal and avoiding any sameness in production.

Both pictures, according to Mr. Backer, carry a distinctly different appeal, and it is further stated by Mr. Backer that the same plan will be followed out in all future releases featuring Olive Tell.

Sporting Review on Screen

Bill Forman's "Pink Sheet" to Be Released Monthly by Capital Film

CAPITAL FILM COMPANY announces through its new executives, president Hugh Woody and B. Herbert Milligan, general manager, that it has just acquired the rights to and will distribute Bill Forman's Sporting Page "The Pink Sheet of the Movies," a novelty which they declare is sure to appeal to all sport-loving Americans. This announcement follows the announcement of last week that Capital had acquired "Winds Gold," the five-reel feature, made in the Texas Oil Fields by the M. A. Dodge Film Company and demonstrates that Capital, under its new management, is to become one of the important factors in the industry.

"The Pink Sheet of the Movies" will constitute a periodic sport review of the screen, produced and edited by William S. Forman, the widely known sporting editor of the Chicago Evening Post, and will be a monthly release. Twelve releases are now provided for and will cover every form of sport which at present is popular in the United States including, baseball, football, boxing, wrestling, golf, tennis, basketball, hockey, swimming, skating, bowling, billiards, skiing, horse racing, hurdling and auto racing.

Every sport that can be found in the sporting pages of the daily newspapers can be seen in realistic action at the proper time in the Capital Film Company's "Pink Sheet of the Movies" it is stated. Territory is now available for the sport reels, and releases will be made immediately by The Capital Film Company.

Radin Series Sold For Southern Territory

Radin Pictures have sold the series of "Real Star Dramas" to the South Eastern Film Company of Atlanta, Ga., for the Southern territory, comprising Georgia, Alabama, Florida, Virginia and North and South Carolina. The featured players in this series include such prominent stars as Violet Mersereau, Francis Ford, Ruth Stonehouse, Mary Fuller and Grace Cunard and are two reels in length.

Arthur F. Beck Closes Big Contracts

Arthur F. Beck, president of Gibraltar Pictures, who has just returned from a three weeks' sojourn on the Pacific coast announces the definite conclusion of arrangements with four different units for the production of sixteen big special feature pictures. Mr. Beck has made studio arrangements in Los Angeles for the production of Miss Leah Baird's next picture.

Mr. Beck further declared: "Another important achievement was the closing of contracts with three of the best known scenario writers in America. We also have signed one of the biggest male stars on the screen, concerning who our activities I will make announcement in a few days. Three well known plays have been purchased for our uses, and we have nearly finished casting our first cost production."

Status of Foundation Film is Explained

In order that there be no misapprehension about the status of the Foundation Film Corporation, following the organization of the Fine Art Pictures, Inc., Murray W. Garsson, who is president of both companies, in an announcement this week explains the operation of the two companies. According to Mr. Garsson, Foundation will handle industrial and educational film business exclusively, while Fine Art will handle the feature subjects and the regular run of short subjects.

Mickey Film Requests Item Be Corrected

The Mickey Film Corporation of Chicago advises that it controls only the American and Canadian rights to "The Woman He Chose," and not the world rights as was incorrectly stated in the issue of April 24th, page 3658.

Helen Pierce Signs Up with Character

The Character Picture Corporation announces the signing of Helen Pierce in "The Isle of Destiny." Miss Pierce is well known to the picture goers, having appeared in many of the large feature productions in the last few years.

Baptist Minister is New Comedy Star

One of the film oddities of the year are the two-reel comedies produced by the Paragon Pictures Corporation of Long Beach, Cal., starring the Rev. George Le Roi Clarke, a Baptist clergyman who has turned from the pulpit to the screen. Rev. Clarke, who for eleven years, was a Baptist evangelist, is the only known preacher, regularly ordained, now in motion pictures. He is being directed by Fred Jefferson, and his support includes Marian Pickering and Johnny Hayes. As soon as he has finished the last of his twenty-six pictures, which will be distributed by the Romayne Super-Film Company of Los Angeles, Cal., Rev. Clarke will return to his work as a Baptist minister.

Christie Gives Vernon Long Term Contract

Bobby Vernon, who has long been a star comedian in Christie film productions, has just made another contract with the Christie Film Company, having completed the previous arrangement whereby he was featured exclusively in Christie comedies. Vernon's new contract with the Christie's is understood to be for a period of several years.

Vernon was drafted into pictures from the stage several years ago when he was playing "kid parts" with Kolb and Dill.

Inter-Ocean Disposes of Foreign Rights

Inter Ocean Film Corporation, through Gus Schlesinger, manager of the Department of Foreign Film Sales, closed last week for the major portion of the foreign territorial rights to "An Adventuress," according to a statement issued yesterday from the New York offices of the company. While the name of the buyer is not mentioned in the text of the statement, it is understood that he is the accredited representative of a large export house distributing motion pictures in foreign territories.

Wm. Collier, Jr., Engaged by F. P.-Lasky Forces

William Collier, Jr., has arrived at the Lasky studios, Hollywood, Cal., to start work in an important role in William D. Taylor's forthcoming special production for Paramount-Artcraft. Collier, Jr., has been especially engaged by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for the stock company. He is the son of William Collier, at present starring in "The Hottentot" which is playing in New York.

"Gift Supreme" Sold in South America

"The Gift Supreme," recently acquired by Inter-Ocean Film Corporation for exclusive foreign distribution, has been disposed by for physical distribution throughout seven Latin-American territories, according to a statement issued this week by Gus Schlesinger, Manager of the Department of Foreign Film Sales for Inter-Ocean.

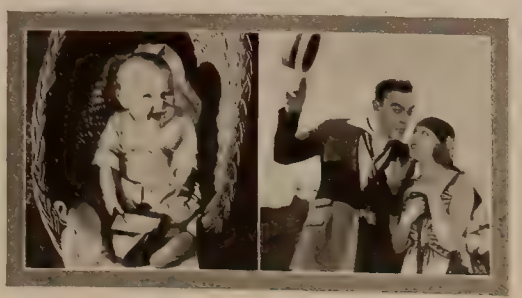
Definite Title Announced

"Up in Mary's Attic," Not "Some Baby," Title of Fine Arts Film

FINE ARTS PICTURES, INC., Murray W Garsson, president, in an announcement this week, states that the five-reel comedy purchased from the Ascher Enterprises, Inc., by Fine Arts, will be released under its original title of "Up in Mary's Attic" instead of "Some Baby," as was first planned. Several reasons prompt this move, chief among which is that more than a score of prominent exchangemen and theatre owners declared themselves favorable to the longer title.



This announcement is expected to set at rest conflicting rumors in the trade that Fine Arts is releasing a feature under the title "Some Baby!" which title has been used in the past, and is therefore unavailable for current offerings.

"Up in Mary's Attic" is described by Fine Arts as "the most rollicking comedy production ever produced. It is of a different type of material than any other feature ever before attempted, its clever and original story being depicted upon the screen in a whimsical and farcical manner which will create good will wherever shown. In producing it, care was taken to maintain the story throughout, so that the elements of thrill, suspense and interest are found at top pitch in every reel," says Fine Arts.

The cast includes Eva Novak, sister of Jane, Harry Gribbon, Minnehaha and a bevy of beautiful girls. More than 30,000 feet of negative was exposed in taking the various scenes, it is stated, and this has been turned over to Elmer J. McGovern for final cutting and editing.

Charles F Schwerin, general sales manager for Fine Arts, announced this week that a trade showing would probably be held within 10 days. Every effort is being made to have the feature in shape for a showing at that time.

Fine Arts Pictures, Inc., are said to be spending a large sum of money to aid exhibitors put this feature over in the broadest possible manner. Exploitation aids of all kinds, as well as co-operation in advertising, have been planned, it is stated, and are being prepared by the Fine Arts advertising department. The exploitation of "Up in Mary's Attic" will make it known in every household in the country, says Fine Arts.

"Madonnas and Men" Is Almost Completed

The final scenes of the Jans Pictures Inc., "Madonnas and Men" are now being filmed. It is said that some of the most elaborate and unusual sets will be shown in this feature which tells a dramatic story of ancient and modern times. As soon as these final scenes have been completed, the picture will be assembled and shown privately to the officials of the Jans organization.

B. A. Rolfe of Jans Pictures Inc., under whose personal supervision "Madonnas and Men" is being made, promises that it will be the finest piece of screencraft he has ever turned out.

Priest Reports Sales on Three Pictures

Robert W. Priest reports the following sales through the Film Market, Inc.: "Who Shall Take My Life" to Associated Feature Film Company, Indianapolis, for the State of Indiana; "The Spoilers" to Independent Master Films, Inc., Detroit, for the State of Michigan; "The Spoilers" to F. J. Ober, Thermopolis, Wyo., for Colorado, Wyoming, Utah and New Mexico (by assignment); "The Spoilers" to Harry F. Grelle, Pittsburgh, for Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia.

"The House Without Children" to Pearce Films, New Orleans, for Louisiana and Mississippi.

"Empty Arms" Sold To Pioneer in New York

"Empty Arms," the sensational production from the studios of Park and Whiteside has been purchased by the Pioneer for the territory of New York and northern New Jersey.

At its first showing at the Pioneer New York Exchange, Sidney Cohen, president of the Motion Picture League, booked the picture for long showings in every house on his circuit which included the North Star, Empire, Tremont and McKinley Square, all of New York. "Empty Arms" has been given an extensive exploitation campaign in New York.

Fidelity Pictures Has Features Under Way

William G. Smith of the Fidelity Pictures Company, 117 West 46th Street, announces his next forthcoming release, which is now in the course of making. The story was written and is directed by Louis Harrison. Starring in this production are Thomas J. Carrigan, who is featured in Wm. Fox's "Checkers," and Miss Vivian Osborne, who is now starring in the stage play of "The Bonehead," at the Fulton Theatre. This production will be handled on a state-right basis.

Surprise Exploitation Promised By Numa

Numa Pictures Corporation, who have been reticent in announcing the disposition of "Return of Tarzan," now announce that a unique and startling exploitation campaign will be launched simultaneously with the release of the production.

National Studios Active

Increased Production for 1920 Makes Coast Center a Busy Place

WITH the difficulties attendant to the recent changes made at the National Film Corporation studios a thing of the past, Harry M. Rubey, National's president, now has things in shape again and reports that production activities will now go ahead in keeping with the prearranged increased program for 1920.

The "Buddy" Post unit is now steadily engaged in turning out twenty-six two-reel comedies which Goldwyn will release as Capitol comedies. In addition to this the many Marion H. Kohn Productions units are making things hum on the National lot.

Preparations for the forthcoming National serial, "The Son of Tarzan," are rapidly nearing completion. Roy Somerville has already prepared the continuity for the first three episodes of this Edgar Rice Burroughs serial, which Harry Revier will direct. The company is awaiting the arrival of Joe Brandt at the coast before sailing for the South Pacific Island where the main scenes of the serial will be filmed.

"Kentucky Colonel" is now ready for release, but there will be a little lapse before another feature picture is started because of the illness of William A. Seiter, who will direct the next of the "All American" series.

Marion H. Kohn Makes Announcements

The Marion H. Kohn Productions, which is now making "The Illiterate Digest" by Will Rogers, the Polly Moran comedies, Grace Cunard westerns and "Smiling Bill" Jones comedies, has been granted articles of incorporation by the State of California to produce motion-pictures. The main office will be in San Francisco, production will be conducted at the National Film studios, Hollywood.

Mr. Kohn states that it is his intention to devote especial care to the construction of real logical plots for his short length pictures. He believes that the story is the thing that gets the picture over, and accordingly has added several more writers to his scenario staff.

According to latest reports from the Kohn office, the Polly Moran comedies will be released as two reelers instead of single-reelers as was originally announced. Polly Moran is now engaged on a series of "Sheriff Nell" pictures, the territory on which has already been disposed of to a considerable extent, according to word from Joe Brandt, eastern representative of the Kohn interests.

Love and Mystery in "Secret Formula"

"The Secret Formula," a five reel feature, is now being sold on the states right basis by the Essanel Film Corporation, according to an announcement of that company. The picture is described as being full of thrilling incidents and red blooded action. In addition to the dramatic action involved in the search for the lost chemical formula, there is woven in a heart interest love story. The picture also contains some carefully worked out and excellent photography.

Wheeler Oakman Made Sol Lesser Star

As a result of his work with Anette Kellerman in her new modern comedy drama, she has just completed for Sol Lesser, Wheeler Oakman, who was her leading man, will become a star in his own right under the Sol Lesser banner. Oakman has played the leading masculine role in such big productions as "The Spoilers," "The Net," "Do Well," "Mickey," and "The Virgin of Stamboul."

Miss Kellerman, according to an announcement of Mr. Lesser, has refused an offer to return to the stage.

Jans Tells of Titles Advertising Value

In selecting the title for the Olive Tell picture, "A Woman's Business," special attention was given to the exploitation possibilities, according to Herman F. Jans, president of Jans Pictures. "A Woman's Business" will permit of co-operative campaigns with merchants selling gowns, lingerie, millinery and other woman's goods.

News Notes from the West Coast

By J. C. JESSEN

METRO

THE Metro Film Corporation has taken over the former Metro studio which for the past year and a half has been used by the Capital Film Company, and will use this exclusively for the making of comedy productions. Lou Anger will be production manager of the Keaton Films, and work is to be started there immediately upon completion of "The New Henrietta," in which Keaton is now being co starred.

Edward Cline, for several years director for Mack Sennett and for the past year director of Fox Sunshine Comedies, has been released from his contract with the Fox organization, and has accepted the position of supervising director of Metro Comedies. Mr. Cline takes up his new work at once.

With but one exception, all of the Metro producing units are now at work on their new series of pictures. "Held in Trust," adapted by Sarah A. Y. Mason from the George Kibbe Turner story, is being made by John Ince. This film stars May Allison with Darrell Foss as her leading man and Walter Long playing an important role.

The C. B. Shurtleff, Inc., Company, which is producing "The Mutiny," is now at San Francisco, where many of the scenes for this film will be made on the exact locations described by the author, Jack London. Mitchell Lewis is star of this film, and Helen Ferguson is leading woman. This cast will include William V. Mong, Cassou Ferguson, Noah Beery, J. P. Lockney, and others.

The most elaborate East Indian palace reproduced from photographs of the Palace of the Maharaja of Baroda has been built at the Metro for many of the important scenes in the Bert Lytell picture, "The Temple of Dawn."

VITAGRAPH

"THE Flower of the North" has been selected as the next subject to be filmed by Director Davis Smith for the series of James Oliver Curwood stories for Vitagraph. The final work on the script is now being done by Robert North Bradbury, and the work of filming will be started shortly.

Scenario is now being finished for the screen version of "The Purple Hieroglyphic," by J. Grubb Alexander, which is to be the next vehicle for Earle Williams, who, with Director Chester Bennett, have found suitable locations in the vicinity of San Diego for many of the scenes of this film.

Director Tom Terriss and company are spending a week filming interiors at the studio for "The Girl From the Sky," an adaptation from the Gouverneur Morris story, and will leave in a few days for Catalina Islands, where remaining scenes for this film are to be taken. The complete cast in support of Wallace MacDonald and Marguerite de la Motte includes Arthur Hoyt, Joseph Swickard, Marcella Daley, Joseph Singleton and Percy Challenger.

Ford Beebe, writer for newspapers, magazines and a number of screen plays, has been engaged to write comedies for Director Jesse Robbins for the Jimmy Aubrey Big V series.

The Antonio Moreno serial company has returned from Balboa, where many exciting scenes were filmed for "The Veiled Woman," by Webster Cullison. During the taking of storm scenes, a schooner being used, broke loose from its tow, and for a time it was feared the vessel would be dashed against the rock lined coast. All members of the company were completely drenched in using the life boats to get the troupe ashore. The only injury was that received by a property man, whose hand was broken.

An unusual scene was obtained by "The Hidden Danger" serial company while on location in the mountains this week. In this Jean Paige leaps from a log bridge and is caught in midair by lariots thrown by Joe Ryan and the supporting Cowpunchers. This is believed to be the most thrilling roping stunt ever done for films.

Considerable interest was taken in viewing the rushes for the William Duncan serial scenes taken at the specially constructed two hundred foot span bridge. The rushes show the bridge to be on fire, and when the smoke had risen to a height of 200 feet, William Duncan drove an automobile across just ahead of the timed blast which completely destroyed the bridge. Duncan is now working on the twelfth episode of "The Silent Avenger."

Joe Rock is doing a burlesque on aviation for his current comedy.

BRUNTON

THE Betty Compson Company, under the direction of Arthur Rossen, has gone to Monterey and San Francisco to photograph exteriors for the initial Compson release, "The Test." The work in the north will require several days.

Two new producing companies have selected the Robert Brunton studios as their producing home. The Gibraltar Film Company, backed by Sidney Gerrett and Martin Beck, will make a series of subjects featuring Leah Baird. It is probable this company will add several additional units later. The dial Film Company, producing for W. W. Hodkinson, under the direction of Roy Clements, has also leased space to work at this plant.

The largest building of its kind in the world, the new enclosed stage with a clear floor space of 37,500 square feet, is nearing completion and will be christened this week by Dustin Farnum for interior scenes for "Big Happiness" and the Betty Compson picture, "The Test." Farnum is being directed by Colin Campbell, and Elliot Howe has been added to the producing organization.

Robert Brunton has completed arrangements for the filming of another serial for Pathe, which will feature Charles Hutchinson in a series of stunt pictures. Jack Cunningham, scenario writer for Frank Keenan, George Loane Tucker and Jack Kerrigan, is preparing the script for this serial, and the direction will be by W. S. Van Dyke, who was responsible for the making of the Dempsey "Dare-Devil Durant" serial. Josie Sedgwick has been engaged to play opposite Hutchinson.

The J. Warren Kerrigan Company, being directed by Ernest Warde, has gone to the Mojave Desert for exteriors of "The Coast of Opportunity," an out-of-door adventure play adapted from the Paige Phillips novel. Members of this cast are Fritzi Brunette, leading woman; Carl Stockdale, C. E. Jennings, Ed Hearn and Ruth Langston.

Joseph Montrose has resigned from an executive position at the Robert Brunton to accept the general managership of the James Oliver Curwood Productions to be made for First National under the direction of David Hartford.

Work is progressing on the filming of the next Mary Pickford subject, and announcement is made this week of the change of title to "The Duchess of Suds." The story is adapted from "'Op O' My Thumb."

UNIVERSAL

THE new regime at Universal City, headed by Isadore Bernstein, Production manager, took charge of the producing organization of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company this week, and while no change in policy is announced, it is most probable the new arrangement will materially alter the manner of production.

President Carl Laemmle, who is now on the coast and expects to spend a portion of his time here, will retain the position of general manager. Isadore Bernstein, former head of the Universal west coast producing organization, and builder of Universal City, has been appointed to the position of production manager. Sam Van Ronkle will be his assistant, and Louis Loeb, former auditor, will be the financial manager.

Isadore Bernstein was tendered a reception, arranged for by Carl Laemmle, on Monday evening, April 19th, which was attended by all the members of the producing staff and their friends, at which the Universal stars and directors served as an informal reception committee. One of the big stages was converted into an interior setting where a negro jazz orchestra of ten pieces gave inspiration to many feet and some shoulders. A

SIMPLE SOULS

An intensely human story, wonderfully interpreted by star, director and a really remarkable cast.

In the mansions of the rich or the shabby apartments of the poor, always is it true to life, always is it beyond criticism.

Life, love, drama, laughter and tears; you'll find them all in "Simple Souls!"

buffet luncheon was served late in the evening, and motion pictures were made of the party.

"I have no statement to make other than I am very glad to be back in this position at Universal City," Mr. Bernstein said. "We are going to try and make the best pictures, and plans that we have already formulated insure that these subjects will be made by the happiest people of filmdom."

Much of the producing activities at Universal City are centered around the serial and short subject companies. Henry McRae is making the final sequences for the serial production started in the Orient on which the producing company, headed by Marie Walcamp, has been working since last September. It is estimated this work will require but three or four weeks. The cast in support of Miss Walcamp includes Harlan Tucker, Otto Lederer, Wadsworth Harris, Elinor Fried and others.

Two serials are nearing completion. That of Eddie Polo titled "The Vanishing Dagger," made under the direction of Edward Kull; and "The Moon Riders," starring Art Acord under the direction of Albert Russell. The latter has episodes that were made in the Grand Canyon, Mojave Desert, and many scenes in the high Sierras.

Four units are busy on two reel subjects. Jack Ford is making, "Under Sentence," with Bob Anderson, Ethel Ritchie, J. Farrell Macdonald and others. Jacques Jaccard has started on the northwest mounted police tableau drama which will feature Leonard Clapham and Virginia Fair. The first of the series is titled. "The Scarlet Rider." "Hoot" Gibson has begun work on "The Bronco Kid," and Yvette Mitchell is leading woman. The direction is by Mack Wright. The fourth company is that directed by Phil Rosen making "Neath Purple Skies," in which Alfred Regnier and Magda Lane are featured.

Norman Dawn, whose most recent work was the direction of the Tsuri Aoki in "A Tokio Siren," has been chosen to direct "Marama," which will feature Edith Roberts, and be put in production as soon as this actress' present subject, "Alias Miss Dodd," is completed.

There are five feature productions in the making. Lyons and Moran are beginning on the screen version of "La La Lucille;" Lynn Reynolds is directing the filming of "The Red Lane;" Rollin Sturgeon is at work on "The Girl in the Rain" with James Liddy and Ann Cornwall, and Harry Carey, directed by Reeves Eason, is making "Human Stuff" The cast includes Mary Charleson, Ruth Fuller Golden, Fontaine La Rue, Charles LeMoyne, Joe Harris and others. The fifth is that titled "Alias Miss Dodd," with Edith Roberts as star.

Two former "slap stick" artists, Fatty Arbuckle and Bebe Daniels, who are making good in dramatic productions under Paramount-Artcraft guidance

F. P. LASKY

DIRECTOR GENERAL C. B. DE MILLE this week, for the first time, gave out the title for his forthcoming production which is now completed so far as the making of scenes is concerned, and unless a change is made, the picture will be known as "Something to Think About." Aside from the title, Mr. de Mille continues to make a dark secret of his picture.

Two very elaborate settings are in use this week at the Lasky studio. One is that being used by Director George Melford for interior scenes in "The Translation of a Savage," which will be finished this week, and then Mr. Melford will begin the making of "The Old Homestead" The other setting is that of an English cottage and surrounding grounds serving Director William C. de Mille for "Conrad in Quest of His Youth."

Replicas of New York street scenes are being built for the Roscoe Arbuckle picture. "The Life of the Party," scenarioized by Walter Woods.

"Burglar Proof" is to be Bryant Washburn's next production which will be put in the making as soon as the present film, "A Full House," is completed under the direction of James Cruze, and Ethel Clayton will return to the studio after a short vacation to work in "The City Sparrow," which will be directed by Sam Woods. Miss Clayton has just completed the screen version of the Samuel Merwin story, "All in a Night," which was directed by Paul Powell.

Frank E. Woods, production manager of the Lasky plant, is planning to leave for New York in a week or two on his annual trip to that city to go over with New York executives material suitable for pictures.

Famous Players Lasky have purchased through N. W. Aaronson Agency, the screen rights for the E. Rooney Weir novel, "Merry Andrew," which is spoken of as one of the best sellers of the past year.

A Ben Aimes Williams story has been selected as the starring vehicle for Jack Pickford and was put in production this week under the direction of Al Green, who has just directed "The Double Dyed Deceiver" with this star. The title of this story is, "The Man Who Had Everything," and the cast for the picture has Priscilla Boner playing opposite Pickford, and a cast composed of Lionel Belmore, Alec Francis, Shannon Day and William Machin

J. Mason Hopper began the direction of the Mary Roberts Rinehart story, "Empire Builders" this week with an all star cast. Clara Horton, Cullen Landis, Molly Malone, Howard Ralston, Ralph Bushman and Otto Hoffman are the principals.

"The Black Pawl," a Ben Ames William story, which was recently purchased, is to be filmed as an all star production by Reginald Barker who has just completed making "The Branding Iron."

NATIONAL

WORK of filming the National Film Corporation serial, "The Son of Tarzan," is scheduled to be started shortly, it was made known this week when the announcement of the engagement of Harry J. Revier to direct the picture, and Roy Summerville to write the screen adaptation, was announced. Revier and Summerville arrived in Los Angeles this week, and a cast headed by Jack Hoxie in the leading role is now being selected. Revier recently directed the "Return of Tarzan" for the Numa Pictures Corporation. Summerville is a former writer for the screen, but for the past year has been giving his attention to the writing of a novel, several vaudeville acts, and a speaking stage play

The initial release of the Buddy Post Capital Comedies, to be distributed by Goldwyn, is titled, "Oh Girls!" This subject has now been completed, and gives Post the part of a lumbering yokel. Helen Howard, Hap Ward and Harry Madison are principals who worked under the direction of Mark Goldaine. Madison is a former vaudeville actor who has played all the variety circuits of this country and Europe. A water setting, having a capacity of five thousand gallons, has been constructed at the National studio to be used in the initial Polly Moran "Sheriff Nell" two reel comedies. The first releases of this comedienne made for Marion H. Kohn by the National were of one reel length in which she played an entirely different characterization than that of Sheriff Nell. The third release has been titled "Sheriff Nell Surrounded" and is from an original story by Harry Wulze comedies is now in the making, and is to be titled, "A Fishy Affair." Many of the scenes for this were taken at Pacific beaches, and the film will serve to introduce the Kohn beauties.

CHRISTIE

AL. CHRISTIE has started in to make a two reel comedy for release about July, which will have the biggest cast of any two-reel subject to come from this plant. The cast includes Bobby Vernon, Neal Burns, Teddy Sampson, Vera Stedman and Charlotte Mirian.

Another two reel subject is in the making under the direction of Wm Beaudine with a cast that includes Fay Tincher, James Harrison, Charlotte Mirian and Eddie Baker.

The Christie Company this week renewed the contract of Bobby Vernon, which provides that he will stay with this firm for the next two years.

Frederick Sullivan, director of comedies for Christie, has been loaned to the Selig Company for the making of a five reel comedy drama. This work will be carried on at the Selig studios.

VIDOR

THE King Vidor Company is back from two weeks in the river district of Stockton, California, where they made exteriors for the Ellis Parker Butler story, "The Jacknife Man," and are now working at Jasper's Hollywood studios. While in the north a number of scenes were made in the village of Murphys in the mining district. The film now being made is spoken of as a gripping tale of a shiftless nomadic existence of a river vagabond. Character actors selected for this play are Harry Todd, Willis Marks, Fred Turner, Charles Arling, Lillian Leighton, James Corrigan and Claire MacDowell.

J. PARKER READ

THE new J. Parker Read Productions are now in the making at the Thomas H. Ince studios at Culver City. Hobart Bosworth is playing in a South Sea Island subject titled, "Bucko McAllister," in which the principal supporting roles are taken by Anna Q. Nilsson and William Conklin. The company is leaving for a two-weeks location trip which will take them to the Santa Cruz Islands, 100 miles north of Los Angeles.

The Louise Glaum Company is working in a story, title of which has not been announced. Wesley Ruggles is the director. James Kirkwood has been engaged to play the mail lead; Joseph Kilgour takes a leading character role, and Omar Farrell has been cast for a role in this play.

HAMPTON

ALL three of the Jesse D. Hampton Production units are at work on as many subjects. The Blanche Sweet play is, "Leona Goes a Hunting," and many of the exterior scenes were filmed recently by Director Henry King at San Diego when the Prince of Wales was an interested spectator. Frank Elliott plays opposite Miss Sweet, and the cast is made up of Jay Belasco, Thomas Jefferson, Frank Leigh and Mayme Kelso. Sensational scenes are added to this photoplay by the use of airplanes, hydroplanes and motor boats.

The first Robert Thornby production will be an adaptation from the novel "Half A Chance," and Mahlon Hamilton will play the featured role. The Fremont, a boat that has been used in a number of motion picture productions, has been leased for the filming of many scenes of this picture, and has been completely camouflaged to suit the needs of the story. The marine portion of the film will be taken at Balboa Beach. This play is from the book by Fred Isham. Milton Taylor and Sidney Ainsworth are the only members of this cast so far selected to support Mahlon Hamilton.

Dwight Cleveland, in charge of the Hampton scenario department, is in New York for a conference with Howard E. Martin, Mr. Hampton's eastern representative, in the selection of a number of stories suitable for Blanche Sweet, H. B. Warner and William Desmond, as well as big stories appropriate for special productions to be made by Robert Thornby and Henry King. A recent purchase by Mr. Hampton is "Big Dick," the most recent success of Frank Spearman.

Jesse D. Hampton has selected "The Brass Bottle," a stage play by F. Anstey, as the next vehicle for H. B. Warner, which will give this actor a different role from anything he has previously played for films. Edwin Stevens, who created the role of the Genii in the original stage production, has been engaged to portray that character in the film version.

BRUNTON

CONTINUITY has been prepared for the tenth and last Robert Brunton production under the present contract with J. Warren Kerrigan, and Director Ernest C. Warde will shortly go to Texas to make exterior scenes for this story, "The Toast of Opportunity," by Paige Phillips. Fritzi Brunette has been engaged to play opposite Kerrigan.

The B. B. Hampton production of Zane Grey's novel, "The U. P. Trail," has been completed under the direction of Hugh Ryan Conway. The principals of this cast are Roy Stewart, Marguerite De La Motte, Kathleen Williams, Robert McKim, Joseph Dowling and Virginia Caldwell.

WARNER

THE Al St. John unit of Warner Brothers producing organization has two Al St. John Comedies completed and ready for distribution through the First National exchanges. The first release will be April 15th, and is titled, "Trouble."

Washington Heights Section of New York to Have Large Theatre

Moss to Have Coliseum Ready for June 1st Opening

SO rapid has been the development in motion picture theatre construction in New York and vicinity that a new theatre causes scarcely a ripple on the phlegmatic surface of old man Knickerbocker. In fact, the city has been pretty well covered with an excellent line of motion picture houses. But now comes B. S. Moss with a theatre on Washington Heights at 181st Street that has the distinction of being the largest house outside the Times Square district. This latter is a point worthy of a moment's attention.

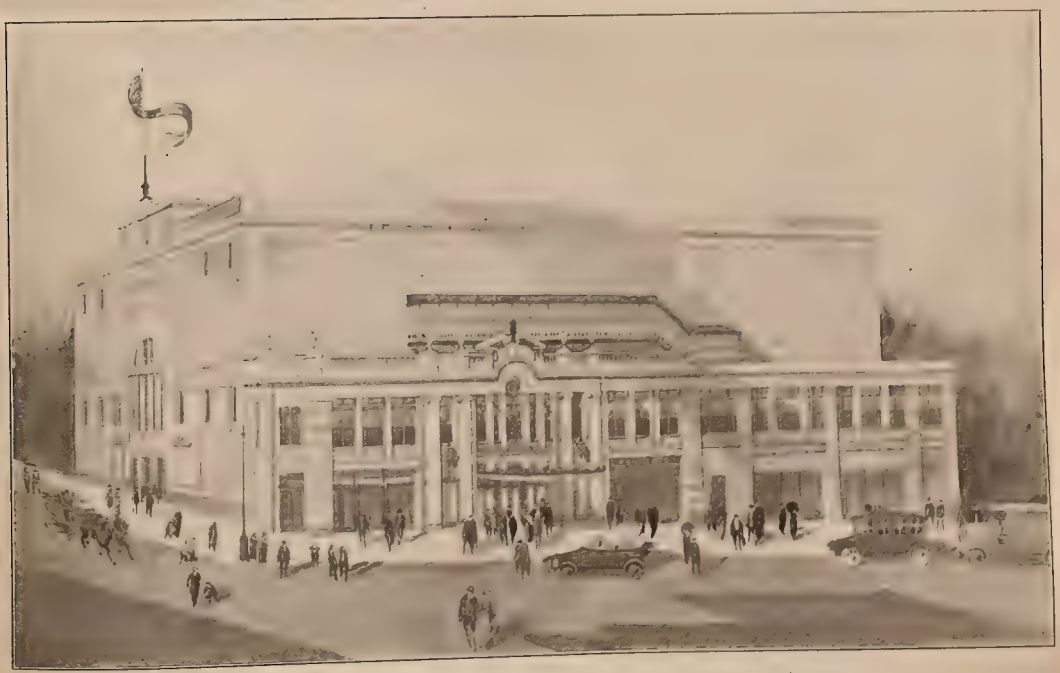
The foundation for the Coliseum, as it will be called, was started quite a few months ago but further progress was slow, due to the slump in the building industry. During the last few months, however, the contractors have gone ahead fast and now intend to have the opening night on Memorial day, May 30th.

A general idea of the house, its layout, seating arrangement and appearance can be gained from a perusal of the drawings and illustrations on pages 4036 and 4042 The building, which will seat over 3000, was designed by Eugene De Rosa, architect of New York City. The Fleischman Construction Co., also of New York, were the contractors.

The Coliseum is situated on one corner of the intersection of 181st street and Broadway, and its front of white granite and speckled semi-glazed white brick causes it to stand out from its neighbors like a jeweled setting.

Front of building constructed of granite and highly expensive speckled semi glazed white brick.

The lobby is very spacious, being 85 feet long and provided with marble floors, bronze doors and marble walls, with French plate glass mirrors inserted. The entire lobby is treated in the Adams style and fitted with the very finest of crystal chandeliers in the ceiling. The side walls are provided with electric light brackets having diagonal mirrors.



The interior of building has two grand staircases of marble leading to the first mezzanine. The marble newels of these staircases are surmounted by beautiful electric light standards. The interior has a marble wainscoting all around, with panels above of the best and most expensive silk.

The promenade on the first mezzanine has an open well looking down over the orchestra below. The well has a marble balustrade and railing and is elliptical in form. The walls of the promenade are provided with black and gold columns and with Circassian walnut panels surmounted with tapestry panels. The ceiling of the promenade has an elliptical dome, with concealed lights in four (4) colors. In the centre of the dome is suspended a beautiful crystal chandelier in four (4) color lights. Opening on to the promenade is a rest room, with beautiful mantel, ladies' retiring rooms, telephone room, writing room, marble drinking fountains, cloak rooms, etc. From this promenade access to the balcony is had by three large and beautifully decorated corridors

The balcony is one of the best designed in the country, having the best sight lines, and giving the most comfort to the patrons. It has spacious loge boxes, comfortable upholstered seats and ample aisle space and exits.

The proscenium opening has a beautiful golden silk curtain flanked on both

Framingham to Have Fine House When St. George Theatre is Finished

Blackhall, Clapp and Whittemore Have Designed Beautiful Structure

GROUND will be broken and work will begin on what is intended to be one of the best equipped theatres in New England and one of the most prominent structures outside of Boston. Framingham has long needed a new up-to-date theatre, and this house is intended to fully meet the demand. It will be a first-class structure in every way and its location is such as to insure its serving the public in the best possible manner, it being on the busiest part of Concord street, only a short distance from the railway station and opposite the city buildings. The exterior of the building will form part of a long line of stores and offices which will be built at the same time, the theatre entrance being carried out in harmony with the rest of the front and showing a broad archway flanked by heavy piers and crowned by an elaborate pediment, the whole being carried out in a free treatment of the late Gothic style. Beyond the entrance a handsome vestibule 20 feet wide leads to the main foyer, which is marked in the centre of the theatre by a rotunda carried up through a mezzanine story, and giving a very striking effect both from above and below. The vestibule and foyer will be elaborately finished with marble dado, mirror work and a tesselated pavement. Stairs to the balcony lead up from each side of the rotunda, reaching a broad mezzanine story encircling the rotunda on all sides, the ladies' room, coat rooms, etc., being just off of the mezzanine. From this mezzanine access is had to the central portions of the balcony through a wide auditorium, the main stairs continuing up to the rear of the balcony. All of the exits are easy and liberal, the stairs are ample and not steep, and every convenience of the public has been considered in the elaboration of the details of arrangement and finish. The interior of the house is designed in an adaptation of the Adam style, with a profusion of delicate tracery ornament and scheme of color which includes a pale turquoise blue as a foundation, relieved by dull gray green and pale yellow gold. The main curtain will be a rich tone of pale mauve and the hangings will be in a deeper tone of the same, verging on crimson. The electric lighting will be so devised that at all times the house will be illuminated without in any wise detracting from the clearness and intensity of the picture on the screen. This will be accomplished by a cleverly devised system of colored lights in specially arranged fixtures, so that at no time will the house be in darkness. The 1,800 seats will be mahogany, upholstered in Spanish leather.

The theatre, while intended primarily for use as a picture house, will have a complete stage equipment and an ample stage both in depth and height, so that the theatre could present any form of theatrical or dramatic entertainment. The heating and ventilation is worked out most carefully to insure the comfort and well being of every spectator. Every seat is a good seat. The sight lines were studied most carefully and there is not a seat anywhere that fails to have a good view of the whole stage.

The theatre will be equipped with an organ costing over $25,000 of one of the best manufacturers in the country. It is intended that every function of the theatre shall be first class of its kind and gives to Framingham what it has never had before, a thoroughly modern, handsome theatre, worthy to be compared with the best metropolitan houses.

The theatre has been designed and will be built under the direction of Blackall, Clapp & Whittemore, architects, and will be owned and operated by the George A. Giles Company, who operate a chain of theatres throughout New England, including the St. James theatre in Boston. Mr. Giles is president of the Greater Boston Exhibitors' Association, and one of the coming big men in the theatrical world. The policy of the house will be to present the very best attractions of their kind for the public and to keep up the high standard which the company has maintained in its other houses.

Laying of Corner-Stone for New Stanley Theatre to Be Big Event in Philadelphia

Impressive Ceremony to Take Place on May 8 in Presence of High Officials of Pennsylvania

THE most important event in the annals of the photoplay industry and theatrical history in Philadelphia will be the laying of the corner-stone, with appropriate seriousness, of the New Stanley theatre, at the corner of Nineteenth and Market streets, which is announced by Jules E. Mastbaum, president of the Stanley Company of America, to take place at three o'clock on the afternoon of Saturday, May 8th.

Elaborate arrangements are being made for the exercises attendant upon the corner-stone laying, and these include a concert from two to three o'clock by the well-known Hummell's Military Band, under the direction of Silas E. Hummel. During the dedication program addresses will be delivered by the Hon. William R. Sproul, Governor of Pennsylvania; Hon. J. Hampton Moore, Mayor of the City of Philadelphia; the Hon. Horace Stern, Judge of Common Pleas Court No. 2, and others. The actual laying of the corner-stone will be executed by Mrs. Fanny E. Mastbaum, mother of Jules E. Mastbaum and the late Stanley V. Mastbaum.

These ceremonies will be attended by a distinguished gathering of statesmen, jurists, United States, state and city officials, theatrical and motion-picture producers, directors and stars and, while these will come from all sections of the country, there will be such a large contingent coming from New York, including many stars, that a special train will be necessary to convey them alone.

The building was designed by the Hoffman-Heenan Company. It is a handsome fireproof structure in the Italian Renaissance style of architecture. It will measure 143 by 176 feet, and will seat 4,000 persons, being the largest place of amusement of its type in the city. The work upon the super-structure is now being rushed as rapidly as is consistent with careful construction, for the first performance is scheduled to be given in the New Stanley on Labor Day, September 6th, 1920.

A leading feature and one that will strike patrons most favorably is that there will be an unobstructed view of the stage or screen from every part of the house, because of the fact that the building is constructed with a floor space of 142 feet, without columns. The exterior walls will be of brick and terra-cotta while the house will be one of the finest in the city from an exterior point of view, and its interior will strike the beholder as among the richest and most costly buildings he has ever seen. The walls will be finished inside in foreign marble and in addition no expense has been spared in decorations and decorative features which will be most elaborate.

Other exclusive features are the specially built grand organ, which will be installed at a cost of $75,000; inclines instead of stairs will be used to the balconies; a very spacious promenade on the mezzanine floor; ladies' retiring room and parlor; men's parlor and smoking rooms.

Development of the Mazda Lamp for Projection Purposes

A New Series of Interest to All Projectionists

The lamp that has been developed for use in commercial motion picture theatres, operates at 30 volts, 30 amperes (3) a 900 watt lamp, (4) and appears to be the limit in the present design. Experimental and commercial lamps of higher wattages have been found to deliver but very little more effective light on the screen, with our present means of directing, controlling and utilizing the light.

The filament is now near to the melting point of tungsten, and hence the brilliancy is almost at a maximum (5).

Since the lamp filament is running so hot, it follows that forcing more than 30 amperes thru the filament, will be extremely harmful to the lamp.

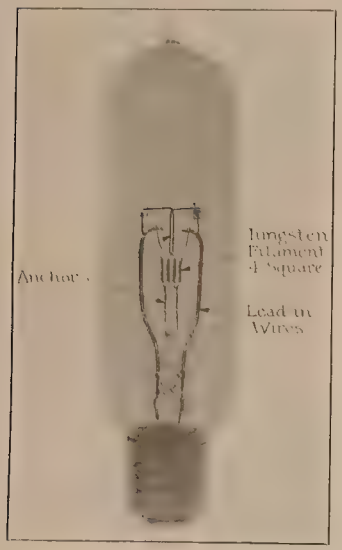

Fig. 3. 900 Watt (Edison) Mazda lamp for motion picture projection, showing novel features of construction

The first two or three times a lamp is run over amperage, no visible result is noted. Consequently, many projectionists think that no harm has been done to the lamp.

The lamps are rated, when run at exactly 30 amperes, to give an average life of 100 hours; running the lamps above rated amperage, gives the following approximate results:

30 amperes	.....	100 hours
31 "	.....	50 "
32 "	.....	50 "
33 "	.....	12 "

This is the second installment of an exhaustive article on the Mazda Lamp and its application to Projection. The author is H. Freeman Barnes, which is proof enough that the data is authoritative.

Naturally, the increased amperage will give increased light, but not enough to compensate for the decrease in the life of the lamp.

THE OPTICAL SYSTEM AND ITS DEVELOPMENT

When the problems of Mazda projection arose, the first trials were naturally made with the then present arc equipment. It soon became apparent, however, that the Mazda lamp and the Carbon arc were to be as totally different in their method of application as were the light sources themselves.

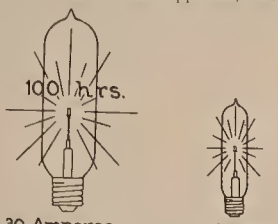

Fig. 4. The shortening of the life of a lamp by being run over amperage is shown here graphically

With the Mazda lamp, light is emitted in practically all directions—in much the same manner as water comes out of a common lawn sprinkler; as much light is emitted away from the condenser as toward it, so in order to utilize economically, the greatest per cent of light from the new light source, a special optical system was developed.

The first thought, naturally, was to conserve the light thrown out towards the back by putting a mirror behind the lamp, redirecting the light towards the condenser, and subsequently on the film.

A spherical mirror was chosen. Different diameters and different radii of mirrors are used. The two in most common use are $7\frac{1}{2}$" in diameter and of 5" radius; (6)—5" diameter and $3\frac{3}{8}$" radius.

If we had taken a hollow glass ball, silvered it on the outside so that the silvering reflected towards the inside of the ball, and then cut off a section of the ball, the section cut off would be our spherical mirror.

The mirror functions, when placed at the correct distance back of the filament, (a distance equal to its radius) to throw an inverted image (7) of the filament near the filament itself. The filament is a series of spaced coils, so it is possible with a little adjusting to so arrange the image of the filament that it will fall directly between the coils, filling up the spaces. If we might compare the filament itself to a section of a picket fence, the addition of the mirror fills up the holes between the pickets and changes it to a practically solid board fence, thus producing a fairly uniform light source.

The image, thrown by the mirror, should fit into the actual filament in much the same manner that it is possible to fit the four fingers of the right hand into the four fingers of the left.

If the mirror itself were a perfect reflector, the image would be of the same brightness as the filament, but as even the best mirrors absorb a certain portion of the light, the image is not quite as brilliant as the actual filament.

The mirror will add from 50% to 75% to the light on the screen obtained with the use of the lamp alone.

To obtain this increase, it must be adjusted properly, but when once set, should require no further attention beyond cleaning. Cleaning, it might be mentioned, is of the utmost importance. A very slight film of dust will practically cut the usefulness of the reflector in two.

Foot Notes

3. Ordinary lamps such as are used in the house or for industrial work are rated in volts, i. e., we buy 110 or 115 volt lamps of so many watts. Motion picture lamps, however, while rated in volts are also rated in amperes.

With filaments run at such a high temperature as are these, the amperage is the important thing.

4. Watts equals volts times amperes.

5. The filament at present is running slightly over 3000° centigrade. The melting point of tungsten is in the neighborhood of 3600° centigrade.

6. Technically the term radius is called O. R. C. meaning outside radius of curvature. As the glass has a certain thickness, we must specify that it is the outside and not the inside surface of the glass, although it reflects through the glass towards the inside of the original sphere.

7. An ordinary mirror such as we have on our dresser at home, does not throw an inverted image, but a spherical mirror, in other words, a mirror which is concave, throws back an image which is upside down, in much the same way that a lens inverts an image.

Read What Josiah Pearce & Sons Say About Our Goods

Gentlemen

Now that you have completed equipment in our new theatres here in New Orleans and Houston, Texas we want to take this means of expressing to you our appreciation of the manner in which we have done business with you, also as to the character of your goods. You have, without exception, filled our orders just as promptly as we could ever expect and probably quicker than we had anticipated, and the fact of your having supplied us with brass frames and various other equipment in our fifteen theatres is evidence that we are pleased with your goods, for they are the most attractive, durable and practical that we have as yet found. We wish you good luck in the prosecution of your work

Yours very truly,

Over $90.00 a Week His Average

Another Theatre Owner Tells How This Machine Pays

"I have operated two of your Butter Kist Machines for two years and will say that they are the best money-makers I have. Have averaged over $90.00 a week. I recommend the Butter-Kist machine to any one operating a picture house or vaudeville show." (Written to us by theatre manager in West Virginia. Name gladly sent on request.)

Runs Itself. No Extra Help or Expense.

The famous machine that manufactures Butter-Kist Pop Corn and sells Roasted and Salted Peanuts.

$600 to $3,120 From a Little Waste Space

Pays Four Ways
1—Motion makes people stop and look.
2—Coaxing fragrance makes them buy.
3—Toasty flavor brings trade for blocks.
4—Stimulates all store sales or theatre attendance.

The Butter-Kist Pop Corn and Peanut Machine brings new profits and new trade to stores and theatres.

We have the actual figures to prove that the Butter-Kist Machine pays from $600 to $3,120 a year net profits. This means an extra $600 to $3,120 in clear cash profits from the use of a little waste space, 26 in. by 32 in.

But that is not all you can count on making with the Butter-Kist Machine. It draws trade. It multiplies all your other sales. It will amaze you to see the full possibilities Let us tell you all that this wonderful machine means to you. We'll send you proof of profits, photos of stores with the machine, etc.—all free and post paid.

BUTTER-KIST
Pop Corn and Peanut Machine

Everyone is fond of pop corn and peanuts. The Butter-Kist Machine makes these goodies doubly inviting. You only have to average 90 nickel bags of Butter-Kist a day to make about $1,000 a year profit. Per on every sale you make 150%, profit.

sides with the well designed boxes having marble columns and Mulberry hangings, with delicate French gray background.

Over the proscenium opening is a beautifully decorated sound-board springing and arching over to the main ceiling, which is provided with an immense dome, having concealed lights and a beautiful chandelier.

The theatre is provided with the finest and most up-to-date organ that money can buy. There will also be a forty (40) piece orchestra.

The seating capacity is 3,500 seats, 2,000 on orchestra floor and 1,500 in balcony.

One of the finest and most commodious projection rooms in the city has been provided as a location for the projectors. A separate generator room will contain the Westinghouse motor generator and control devices.

Balcony plan, Coliseum

New Theatre For La Crosse, Wis.

La Crosse, Wis.—With the completion of the new Rivoli, now under construction in this city, La Crosse will have a motion picture theatre second to none in Wisconsin, and one which will rank high among movie houses of the Central West. The opening date has been tentatively set for September 1st, it was announced by Frank L. Koppleberger, general manager of the La Crosse Theatres Company, for whom the building is being erected.

The Rivoli theatre building, a handsome four-story structure, 151 by 122 feet in dimension, is located on North Fourth street, but half a block from the centre of the city's retail district. It will cost approximately $175,000. The theatre proper will be 120 feet in length by 73 feet wide, and will have a seating capacity of 1,400, of which the main floor will accommodate 900 and the mezzanine floor 500.

With the opening of the Rivoli the La Crosse Theatre Company will have under its control seven motion picture theatres in La Crosse. The other six are the Majestic, La Crosse, Casino, Strand, Rialto and Bijou. Only one other picture house, the Dreamland, is in operation in the city.

C. Rowland West, former Minneapolis newspaper man, has been engaged by the theatres company as publicity director for the theatres controlled by the organization.

Reports on Theatre Construction

The Windsor Theatre, 4202 Kensington ave., was closed last Saturday, April 10th, for extensive alterations and other improvements.

B. Schindler reports that work on his new 1000-seat Victoria Theatre, corner 26th and Federal sts., Camden, N. J., is progressing very nicely, and that he expects to open about the middle of May. This will be one of the prettiest theatres in the resident district in the state. A large Typhoon fan will cool the house, a $7,500 pipe organ will please the ears of the audience with sweet strains of delicious music, while the pictures will be projected on a Minusa Gold Fibre Screen by two Power's 6B motor driven machines.

Plans have been submitted to the State Board at Harrisburg for their approval by H. J. Troxell of Gettysburg, Pa., for the enlargement of the Photoplay theatre. Mr. Troxell has purchased the building adjoining the theatre and intends to throw the two buildings into one, thus doubling the seating capacity of the theatre, and will make other changes in the building, adding a new front.

The Colesium Theatre, 5915 Market st., formerly owned and controlled by the Nixon-Nirdlingler Interests, was sold to the Treon Amusement Co., who have had charge of the house for some time, with Mr. Tower as house manager. It has been reported, and on good authority, that the house has been purchased back by the Nixon-Nirdlingler Interests, and that they will take possession the first of May. This is a 1100-seat theatre. The equipment consists of two Power's 6B machines, Gold Fibre Screen and a fine pipe organ furnishes the music.

A new stage setting is being made for the Bijou Theatre on the Board Walk in Atlantic City, and the screen is to be set back, which will give about two feet additional depth to the stage.

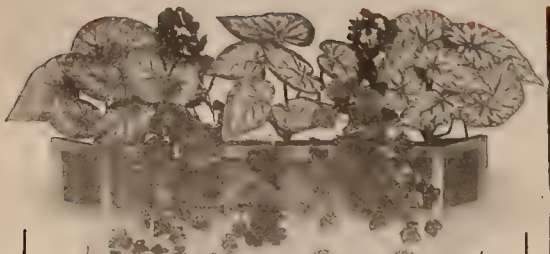
James Brady, who recently took over the Century Theatre, Erie Avenue and 6th Street, is making some extensive alterations. The Century is a 900-seat theatre. Powers 6B motor driven machines are used and Mr. Brady has employed an orchestra.

McGuire Champions Cassard

P. A. MCGUIRE, advertising manager of the Nicholas Power Co., has never been able to decide whether the stream of orders for Power's that is pouring in steadily these days is because the "finest sales manager in the country has the finest projector in the country to sell," or because the "finest projector in the country has the finest sales manager in the country selling it."

Being Irish, so we are told—and even surmise—Mr. McGuire is nothing if not loyal and he absolutely declines to admit that anyone in the cinemachinery industry can surpass anything done by any member of the staff of the Nicholas Power Co. He was therefore thoroughly aroused by the "Kelly Pool Match," reported in Motion Picture News last week and defiantly puts forth S. S. Cassard, sales manager of the Nicholas Power Co. as the "Champion Kelly Pool Player of the Cinemachinery Industry."

Mr. McGuire has been taking a little vacation at Atlantic City and after receiving his copy of Motion Picture News, which he insists shall be promptly mailed to him whenever he leaves town, immediately sent us the following telegram:



Atlantic City, April 26th.

E. L. Bragdon,
Motion Picture News,
729 Seventh Ave., N. Y.

On behalf of S. S. Cassard, Sales Manager of the Nicholas Power Co., challenge all comers for Kelly Pool Championship Cinemachinery Industry. Suggest large fund be raised by advertising managers of cinemachinery industry to present winning contestant with loving cup. Date, place, terms of match, to be arranged so that film rights be carefully guarded, stop request that this telegram and other details of the contest be regarded as strictly confidential as advertising managers will naturally object to any publicity being given to their principals.

P. A. McGuire.

As requested by Mr. McGuire we are keeping this entire matter strictly sub rosa and only regret that we have no picture of his in order that we might publish it and thus add to the secrecy he requests. We shall, however, do everything in our power to promote this contest which will undoubtedly prove highly interesting to the entire film industry. We know there is much dormant talent possessed by members of the cinemachinery industry that has been overlooked by the press and advertising managers, and Motion Picture News will make an effort to develop it.

The Wheatstone Bridge

Standard resistances are prepared which together with the necessary plugs, switches and galvanometer are placed in a portable box suitable for transportation so that resistances of any desirable nature can be measured. The battery for the current supply is often contained within the portable case.

The operation of the Wheatstone Bridge is as follows: the necessary connections being shown by Fig. 27

The unknown resistance is connected as branch D of the circuits. Then if the unknown resistance is not too great plugs for equal resistnce coils are removed from branches A and B. Plugs from branch C are now removed such that there is no deviation of the galvanometer needle. The total value of the coils of branch C added to the circuit is then equal to the value of the unknown resistance

When the unknown resistance is large, a multiplying factor is obtained by inserting a larger resistance in branch B than in A. In order to obtain a multiplying factor of 10 the plug short circuiting the 10 ohm coil of branch A and the 100 ohm coil of branch B should be removed

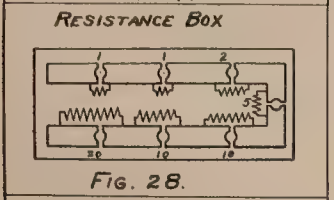

FIG. 28.

Key M should be closed first so that there will be a flow of current before the galvanometer circuit is closed by key N. Care should be taken not to keep the key M closed for too long a period as the coils are liable to heat and change the value of the resistance.

Resistances in the form of wire coils are mounted in boxes for laboratory purposes in the form as shown by Fig. 28. On the cover of the box heavy brass blocks are mounted to which the ends of the coils are connected so that the current passes from block to block through the connected coils.

When it is desired to cut a coil out of the circuit the space between the blocks is bridged by a metal plug so that any desired value of resistance may be obtained. The resistance coils are wound inductiveless, that is, they are wound back on themselves so that any magnetic effect or self induction is done away with. The method of winding and the means by which the resistance is connected to brass blocks is shown by Fig. 29. When it is desired to cut a resistance out of the circuit a plug is fitted snugly into the space between the brass blocks and thus short circuiting the resistance coil connected around this space.

An electric current is not a material substance, but is manifest by the effect which it produces. It is through the effects produced that electricity can be commercially utilized. The manifestations of an electric current are; its heating effect, magnetic effect, and chemical effect, each of which will be considered separately.

Heating Effect The heat of an electric circuit is caused by the molecules of the body being set in motion. This motion is produced by the expenditure of mechanical energy. When a current of electricity passes through a conductor a certain amount of work is done in overcoming the resistance of the conductor and this work appears in the form of heat. Because of this heating effect it is very important in the design of a transmission line that wires of proper size be used in order that an appreciable amount of energy will not be used in heating the conductor and be lost in the act of transmitting useful energy. In building wiring the insurance companies require that wires of certain sizes be used, and that they be installed in certain manner in order to reduce the fire hazard

The heating effect of an electric current is made use of in the incandescent lamp in which the filament is heated to incandescence and thus gives out light. Also in an electric iron and heating grids the resistance offered to the flow of current generates heat, and the heat thus generated is radiated to some good heat conducting material.

The amount of heat generated in an electric circuit is given by Joule's Law, which states that the heat produced is proportional to the resistance, the time during which the circuit flows and the square of the current strength. The amount of heat given out by an electric circuit as measured in calories (the calory being the amount of heat necessary to raise 1 gram of water 1 degree Centrigrade), is equal to $I \times R \times t \times .24$, in which I is the current flow, R the resistance of the apparatus, and t the time in seconds. Also since potential difference $E = I R$, while it requires a temperature of 1996° F. to melt copper. A fuse made up of a lead wire is inserted in the circuit and designed so that an excess of current will heat this material to the melting point and thus cause a break in the circuit.

The carrying capacity of a fuse depends on the cross-section, and is rated at a given amperage meaning that it will carry a current up to this amount without melting or "blowing" as it is termed.

It is because of this heating effect that conductors of sufficient size must be used in conducting electricity. When large conductors are used for small or normal current flow the heat generated is not recognized by the touch. However, with small conductors and a correspondingly large current flow the wire is heated quite appreciably.

In an electric lamp the filament is inclosed in a glass bulb from which the air has been exhausted to prevent combustion that is oxidizing effect which would take place if the filament was heated in the open air. The wire filament is then heated to incandescence and gives out light. Fig. 30 shows an electric lamp bulb. The filament shown here is of carbon such as was used in the first lamp construction; however present development has produced an alloy which gives a greater amount of light for the amount of heat generated

In order that the conductors may be successfully led through the glass it is necessary to have a material which will expand with heat at the same rate as the glass. This is done by using platinum or some alloy having the same coefficient as glass at the point where the current is led through the glass. The glass bulb is then connected to a socket so that connections may easily be made with the ends of the filament conductors.

Magnetic Effect—The magnetic effect of an electric current is the most important property of electricity, and the means whereby electricity has proved most useful to the commercial world. An electric current flowing through a conductor sets up lines of force and produces a magnetic field surrounding the conductor as is shown by Fig. 31. To demonstrate the field surrounding the current carrying conductor it may be arranged as shown by Fig. 32, in which a wire connected to a battery circuit is placed through the center of a piece of paper. Iron filings are then scattered on the paper, and when connections are made to cause a current flow and the paper tapped lightly the fillings will arrange themselves in concentric circles around the conductor. These lines of force flow in a clock wise direction when we look along the conductor in the direction in which the current is flowing.

When a wire is wound in a coil as shown by Fig. 33 the lines of force around each turn add to one another so that a strong magnetic field is formed with North and South poles, and by placing an iron core in this coil, magnetic lines of force are set up in the iron and an electro magnet is formed.

The electro-magnetic effect is that which is used in the generation of electricity on a large scale, and also a means by which electricity is made to perform work by means of electric motors and other apparatus. The operation of all indicating and recording instruments is dependent upon the magnetic lines of force set up, the amount of scale reading being dependent on the strength of the magnetic field and its power of attracting the moving element.

Chemical Effects—When a current conducting liquid known as an electrolyte is connected in an electric circuit decomposition will take place at the points where the current enters and leaves the liquid. Electrolysis of certain liquids consists of dividing them into their component parts by the passage of electricity.

An art depending on the chemical action of electricity and based on the principle of electricity is that of depositing a coating of metal on a substance and is known as electroplating. By the above principle the metal held in solution is deposited by the passage of current on the object to be plated which must be connected as the cathode to the negative pole of the circuit.

A commercial process depending on the principles of electroplating is that of electrotyping. An impression of the type is made in wax or plaster of paris, and carefully dusted with graphite to make the surface a conductor. The mold is then connected as the negative plate in a copper plating bath and receives a coating of metallic copper. The copper coating when backed with type metal and mounted can be used to obtain any number of impressions.

Correct Answers to Questions of April 3rd Issue

9 The element of a fuse is made up of an alloy which has a definite melting point. The size of this element is so designed that it will carry a given amount of current without undue heating. A current flow above normal rating, however, will cause excess heating, and if it continues for an interval of time will melt the element and cause a break in the circuit.

10 The proper size of fuse is governed by the normal lead on the circuit. The fuses should have a capacity of about twenty-five per cent above the rated load, but should not be equal to the current capacity of the conductors.

11 The smaller fuse should be used in the booth in order that they may be replaced readily in case they are blown by an overload or short circuit.

12 Projection machine leads should not be smaller than No. 6 at the arc, and are dependent on the amperage to be used at the arc. For an amperage of 60 to 75 a No. 4 wire should be used, for 75 to 100 amperage No. 2 and so on.

13 The size of one strand of wire should be determined by the gauge. From the wire tables the corresponding circular mil area may be found. Multiply this area by the number of strands, and find in the table the size of wire and current carrying capacity corresponding to the total circular mil area.

National Anti-Misframe League Pledge

As a motion picture operator who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the operating-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in first class condition. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy all misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way cooperate with my brother operators and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

Doubts Multiple Machine Diagram

F. B., Providence, R. I.: Kindly let me know through you columns if it is practicable to use the series arc which you have in your April 3rd issue (page 3148), I don't quite understand how you get the voltage for the 2-3-4 arcs without some means of raising the voltage.

Reply: A double arc Transverter, which was the type used for the conversion of current in this particular installation, is so designed that when two projection machines are connected in series such as would be called for when warming up the second machine for change-overs, the voltage on the Transverter is automatically increased to care for the additional resistance introduced.

But this does not mean that a third projector could be coupled in series with the other two and still get results. When the voltage on a Transverter becomes above normal its characteristics of design are such that the current output would gradually become zero. Conversely when the load is increased beyond normal, such as happens at times of short circuit, the Transverter simply ceases generating. No harm is caused by so doing.

Now, in the case you refer to, the author implied that he could use two projectors—any two projectors—or a projector and a spotlight. He did not mean to say that he could, if he wished, connect up the entire four machines. This might be possible providing the capacity of the Transverter were great enough, but it is not feasible.

If you want still further details on the action of the Transverter look up the Projection department for January 3, 10 and 17. A full account of the Transverter and an actual working test were given in these three issues.

Typhoon Fan Sales Continue Big

ALTHOUGH there has been no warm weather as yet, a great many exhibitors are getting in their orders for Typhoon equipments early so as to be prepared when the warm weather does arrive.

During the past week, the Typhoon Fan Company, of New York, have received orders to equip the following theatres with the Typhoon Cooling and Ventilating System:

Martin theatre, Lock Haven, Pa.; Lyric theatre, Toledo, Ohio; Bijou theatre, Anderson, S. C.; Fort Smith theatre, Fort Smith, Ark.; Garden theatre, Paterson, N. J.; Colonial theatre, Philadelphia, Pa.; Victory theatre, Tampa, Fla.; Warner theatre, Columbia, S. C.; Capital theatre, Macon, Ga.; Empire theatre, Macon, Ga.; Liberty theatre, Albany, Ga.

Mr. Ernst Glantzberg, president of the Typhoon Fan Company, who is at the present on a trip through the Southern States, reports that never before have theatre owners shown so great a desire to protect their patrons from summer discomforts.

A Letter on Film Conditions

P. A. Wills, Champaign, Ill., says:

I am back again, asking for more labels as I do not want to run out before I receive some more. The only trouble with the labels is: There is not always space enough to write all the criticisms one should, for some films, no matter how new, are not what they should be. For instance, with several pictures we have had, which were "right out of the can," the splices of the assembler were very poorly matched up, and had to be made over. And speaking of poor splices, "The Isle of Conquest," which we ran the following week after the Ziegfeld Theatre, in Chicago; I took out 108 splices, some of which were in pretty bad condition. The film was scratched; oily; and had many punch-holes at the end of the reels. The manager called up the exchange and asked them where the new print was, we were to get. He told them as to the condition of the film, and they stated they did not see how it could be in poor shape as the Ziegfeld Theatre was the only theatre in which it had been shown. This is hard to believe, as the print looked to have been run for at least three months. Something was certainly wrong some place.

Another thing the Producers will have to learn is to wax new film, for until they do their film is not going to last as long as it should. As far as I know, but one company waxes new film, the Universal, and they are to be complimented on that fact.

Scratches on the film are another one of the evils of projection today. There is a reason for such conditions, but no excuse. New parts when they are needed will keep film in A-1 condition. The time is coming when the film companies will employ inspectors of the machines throughout the country, since the majority of "operators" will not take care of their machines. I have at the present time a leader of about fifteen feet, which has been used continuously for three months, and which is in perfect condition, not a scratch on it. It is used at the first of my features, where the greatest pull is on film and yet is in the same good condition as when we bought it. From that it seems that every one running Projection Machines should take care of all film passing through their hands, and the result would be perfect film for the life of its natural booking. I think that if a thing is worth doing at all, it is worth doing RIGHT. There are many lines of work which requires the utmost in efficiency, and projection certainly comes under a line of work that should be done to the best of one's ability.

And now to come back to films again, we run, I mean we were running the Vitagraph Comedies new. They were in perfect condition until some house was booked before us. Now the same film that is run in but one house before us, is scratched and the end of the first reel contains two punch-holes. This is done, I should judge, in a large house, for they are the ones who can pay for new films. Now why on earth does a manager permit his "operator" to do this conductor's job of punching?

Oil on films is another menace of today. A new film is generally ruined before being run very many times because of oil. Of course a machine, unless it is brand new, will leak a little oil and this in turn will be deposited on the film unless the sprocket shafts and wheels are wiped off before the machine is threaded. The film should also be wiped off after it has been run and if the above simple operations are carried out by every one, the films would not become oily and dirty and would always show up clear on the screen.

Another thing about the labels—I think every member of the N. A. M. L. should put the title of the picture, and number of the print on the label. The reason for this is, different copies of the same subject might be substituted, and this in turn might give the N. A. M. L. a "black eye," for some one getting a substituted reel would say the members do not live up to the slogan.

About Poor Splices

B. E. Wilson, Lyric theater, Springfield, Ill., has something to say about splices, etc.:

I hereby make application for membership to the N. A. M. L.

I think that the N. A. M. L. is and will be the greatest help in convincing the exchanges that we appreciate good film when we get it. But we must be careful or the exchanges will have no use for inspectors and will depend upon us to do their work. Here is just an idea which would make the exchanges be more careful. Each week have each member of the N A M L send all pieces which he has cut out and have published in the News a summary of the whole as below:

Exchange	Mis-Frames	Punch Marks	Bad Sprockets	Patches
Fox	20	100	30	50
Select	15	75	25	10
First Nat'l .	30	120	60	30

In a short time I think that list would be greatly diminished. I would like to see this idea or one similar go into effect. Last week I ran Olive Thomas in "Out Yonder" a Select picture and in the 5th reel I found 13 misframes and no less than 2 in each of the other reels. The picture came in two days ahead of time so the exchange has time to look it over if they cared to.

Author of New Book on "Photographic Developers." Has Had Wide Experience in Many Fields

Samuel Wein Continues Educational Work by Publication of Latest Textbook for the Laboratory

WITHIN a few weeks there will be available what is perhaps the most valuable book in existence for the use of the laboratory worker, technician, researchworker and experimenter in dyes and their application. The title of book is "Organic Photographic Developers" and the author is Samuel Wein. A reveiew of the volume will be carried in the Camera Department of the News directly after its publication.

Samuel Wein is known to most of the leading chemists and laboratory chemists and managers and has had wide experience in mny subjects of pertinent value to the film industry.

He came to the United States when very young and was educated in the public schools of New York City, later graduating from Columbia University with the degree of B. S. At that institution he specialized in Physics and Organic Chemistry.

After graduation Mr. Wein became an assistant in special physical research work in Acoustics under Dr. F. E. Miller. Later he was appointed Editor of Perfumery Art and still later, Associate Editor of the widely read and authoritative Color Trade Review at the time when Dr. J. Merritt Matthews, professor at the Philadelphia School of Mines, was Editor.

Since that time, Wein has been working on various subjects having to do with the Educational phases. In his spare time he has accepted proffers of special work for which his wide experience and knowledge in Chemistry will fit him.

In 1915 a Commission of Japanese experts came to this country to arrange for the construction of an entire chemical plant for the manufacture of carbolic acid. Someone sent the Commission to Mr. Wein and he, under the pressure of war times designed and laid out a plant with a capacity of 4 tons every 24 hours.

Mr. Wein has also prepared several other books and brochures besides the one now in process of completion. One of them was on the subject of "Developers" and appeared in the Photo Miniature Series and was successful to the extent that it has already gone through five or more editions.

Samuel Wein

Another publication was "The Bibliography of Selenium." Although this booklet is not impressive in size, any worker in selenium will appreciate the labor required in compiling the facts given therein.

For nearly a year Mr. Wein was Chief Chemist at the Universal Film Laboratories at Fort Lee.

Playing to Big Houses

With such installations as the New Grauman Million Dollar theatre in Los Angeles, the Criterion in New York, just opened, the Garden in Paterson and the Harris in Pittsburgh to its credit, the Automaticket Register may indeed be said to be playing to big houses.

It isn't, of course, simply a big house ticket selling register, but we all know that the big guns know what's what, and what is good in the way of motion picture theatre equipment, and if they find it good business to protect their money, it is good business for every exhibitor in the country.

More Typhoon Sales

The early spring touch in the weather has brought to the mind of the exhibitor that something must be done to prepare his house for the summer season. As a result The Typhoon Fan Company reports recent orders for the installation of the Typhoon Cooling System in the following houses:

Reliance theatre, Orangeburg, S. C.; Cozy theatre, Okmulgee, Okla.; Victoria theatre, Camden, N. J.; Liberty theatre, Cape May, N. J.; Star theatre, Philadelphia, Pa.; Lyric theatre, Lexington, N. C.; Palace theatre, Cordelle, Ga.; La Grange Amusement Co., Toledo, Ohio; Apollo theatre, Peoria, Ill.

On or about April 10th the Typhoon Fan Company of New York will move their offices from the present address, 281 Lexington Avenue, to their new and spacious headquarters at No. 343-347 West 39th Street, in the same building with the Typhoon factory.

This is the second time within the past two years that it has been necessary for the Typhoon Company to move, owing to the rapid growth and expansion of the Typhoon business.

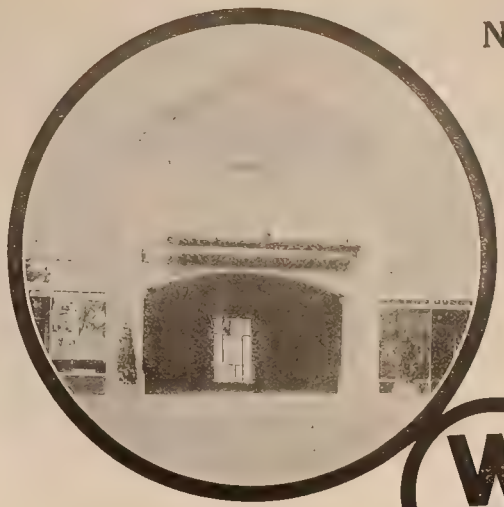
Sennett to Employ "Still" Artist to Link Photographic Beauty with Comedies

James E. Abbe, Well Known for Photography, Will Give Personal Attention to New Idea in Films

MACK SENNETT recently announced that he had secured the services of the celebrated New York photographer, James E. Abbe, with the idea of incorporating "still effects" into future Sennett Comedies.

Work on a story has already begun. It will exploit the beauty of the far-famed Mack Sennett girls, who, it is admitted, have been but imperfectly linked to the comedy product on which the Sennett popularity mainly rests. The scenario will give these Beauties of the Sennett studios every decorous opportunity to reveal their charms and in an atmosphere and under lighting conditions that will, Mr. Abbe believes, mark the opening of a new era in the production of film plays.

With Alfred Cheney Johnston, Baron de Meyer and Dr. Arnold Genthe, all of New York, Abbe shares equal fame as a photographer of beautiful women. His output has long adorned the pages of the most exclusive and artistic magazines. That he believes his method of lighting, posing and grouping, as revealed in his "stills," can be rendered practical in motion pictures is his earnest and sincere statement. The picture from the Mack Sennett studios will be the demonstration of Mack Sennett's faith in Abbe's capacity to work the modern miracle in lights.



The product will not be an experiment. Abbe, visiting in Los Angeles for a few weeks and taking pictures of the "higher-ups" of filmdom addressed himself to the task of photographing Mack Sennett and his stars and famous girls. It was while posing some of the latter that Mr. Sennett, admiring the marvellous effects created as though by magic—the modelling of an arm, the suggestion of a shadow rounding out a graceful contour, the posture of the subject and the other "tricks" of the genius in photography—asked, "Why couldn't you get those effects in a moving picture; what is the reason why such illumination and posturing could not be brought to the films?"

"That's exactly what I've been asking," answered Mr. Abbe, "but all the picture stars and producers to whom I have suggested it, discouraged the effort. They said it was 'all right for stills but impracticable for motion pictures.' I believe it can be done, but have never found a picture producer willing enough to take a chance."

"I'll take a chance," calmly announced Mack Sennett.

That night a selected company of the prettiest—if there are degrees of perfection—of the Sennett girls were assigned to duty in the huge Light Studio and, watched by Mr. Sennett and his staff of assistants, Abbe proceeded to direct an episode employing none but girls. He had carte blanche as to "props" lights, material and assistance. He seemed satisfied when the picture was taken, though the practical cameramen who helped him at his new line of picture-taking were hardly optimistic. It was an anxious party that assembled next morning in the projection room of the Sennett studios to witness the first un-reeling of a new motion picture art. Gasps, and murmurs of approval followed in the disappearing wake of the pictures. "It can be done," said Mr. Sennett, "and we'll do it."

Arrangements were easily effected, a contract was signed, and then the noted photographer spent the rest of the day telephoning to stars of stage and screen life rearranging his schedule of sittings for them.

Never Out of Commission Not a Moment's Trouble Since Its Installation

That's what is said of WESTINGHOUSE MOTOR-GENERATORS used for projection work.

Mr. Dave H. Shuman of the Florence Theatre, at Pasadena, Calif., says, "We are glad to say that we have a very enviable reputation for especially good projection, which we believe is due as much to your generator as anything else. We are certainly convinced that we made no mistake in our selection."

An Excellent Address on the Subject of The Corrections of a Kinematograph Lens

Given by an Official of the Ross Lens Co., Before the British Kine Cameramen's Club

(Reprinted from the Kinematograph Weekly)

IT is with pleasure that we take the opportunity of reprinting this lecture for the benefit of those who did not see it and read it when it originally appeared. To our mind it presents one of the clearest expositions of the various problems confronting the manufacturer of lenses used for motion picture work that we have seen. The material is presented in a manner that will appeal to the non-technical cameraman and projectionist.

ARISING out of the recent determination to hold periodical lectures on technical subjects, the first of which was static marks, another lecture, quite as interesting as the first, but this time on lenses, was given at the Kine Cameramen's headquarters on Friday, February 6, by Mr. Hasselkuist, of the Ross Lens Co., who read the following paper:

I am here this evening to explain to you briefly the construction and manufacture of photographic lenses, with special reference to the kinematograph taking lens, your most valuable asset.

Kinematograph theatres to-day work with magnifications which were unheard of some years ago. Halls are built which require a 200 to 300 magnification of the film to make it clearly and easily visible to everyone. The demand made upon the original picture under those conditions is enormous, it requires to have microscopical sharpness of the smallest detail to stand up to such a magnification.

It is therefore no wonder that you clamor for more perfect lenses when your work is submitted to such a searching test, and clearly only the highest perfection in lenses will be suitable.

The old rectilinear or portrait lens type is entirely useless because, although it will give a beautifully sharp picture in the centre of the film, the lens will not cover the whole film equally well, and we must therefore take into consideration some of the more modern forms of lenses, generally styled Anastigmat lenses. There are many of these, but not all forms lend themselves to the excellence of correction required for such work as we are here concerned with. Some of them have not the elements necessary to fulfil all the required conditions, and must be left out of consideration on that account.

What is wanted is a lens with an extremely large aperture (generally f/3.5). You all know how necessary short exposures are for your work, and we know how very much you would like to have an aperture of f/2 or even more, if you could get it.

But here we come upon the stumbling block. The corrections required in the taking lens are of a very high order, and they are the more difficult to obtain as the aperture increases. The materials at present available for the design and manufacture of such lenses limit the aperture to f/3.5 for lenses of 2 in. to 3 in. focus to cover the 1 in. by ¾ in. picture. If we go down to 1½ in. focus, the angles under which the lens has to work are too large for an aperture of f/3.5, and it has to be cut down to f/4.5. However much we may try, new materials are required in the way of optical glass to enable us to do better in optical designs.

I will take this opportunity to say a few words on the principal cause of all our afflictions—the optical glass.

Optical glass has been made in this country for a long time, but in only five or six varieties; they were the usual light and heavy flints, and soft and hard crowns. These were the raw material from which opticians had to select to make lenses for all purposes—photographic lenses, telescope objectives, microscope objectives, etc., and it is not surprising that while the form of the individual optical instrument varied from one manufacturer to another, the performance of the instruments was generally very much alike.

I am referring to portrait lenses and rectilinears.

Over 30 years ago, two German scientists set to work to extend the varieties of optical glass, and they succeeded in getting what was so badly wanted by opticians. They made a large number of glasses which were totally different from the old five or six varieties, and it enabled opticians to design and make lenses infinitely better than was possible before.

It gave the German opticians a considerable advantage over their foreign competitors, and incidentally was the principal reason of the prestige German optical goods enjoyed.

It was so easy to obtain this valuable material from Germany that nobody gave much encouragement to English glass manufacturers, although they had been the first in the world. The war has altered this, and we are now getting as good glass in this country as we did from Germany before the war.

You will be pleased to hear that our Xpres Lens, to which this lecture specially refers, is entirely made of English glass, and we have absolute confidence that we can hold our own against all comers from abroad as regards photographic lenses in general, and the kinema-taking lense in particular.

Having now dealt generally with the matter of photographic lenses for your purposes, it is my intention to lead you a little deeper into the niceties of the 3.5 Xpres, which no doubt some of you possess, and I hope are pleased with.

There are quite a number of points which have to be carefully considered in the design of a photographic lens, such as the Xpres Lens.

There are seven primary conditions, to all of which the designer has to apportion its proper value as regards their respective influences on the picture, and since from the nature of things there is no absolute perfection in anything, the best compromise out of the different conditions is made, and it is due to the skill and experience of the designer if a first-rate lens is evolved.

$100,000 for an Organist

"WHAT is believed to be the largest salary contract ever offered a theatre organist has just been signed in Boston. The contracting parties were Nathan H. Gordon, proprietor of the great chain of Gordon houses, and Arthur Martell, an organist well known in music circles. The figures to which Mr. Gordon and Mr. Martell have affixed their signatures are $100,000, and under the terms the organist is engaged to play for the theatres of the Gordon Circuit for the coming 10 years at an annual salary of $10,000."

The above notice recently appeared in several newspapers and constitutes only one of the many substantial proofs that music is essential in conjunction with the exhibition of motion pictures. There is no necessity to analyse the importance of an appropriate musical accompaniment to pictures, but one thing deserves comment in the above article, and that is "the organ."

Whoever thought that this instrument would be able to command such importance in the motion picture industry? To my mind, it is largely due to the aggressiveness of organ builders; but, the man at the organ is of equal importance, as this instrument presents more difficulties than any other, in the way of sound elementary mastery. It takes years of study before correctiveness can be attained in playing passages of even moderate difficulty. The main difficulty, however, appears to be chiefly mental and arises from the number of things that have to be thought of simultaneously. Quick thinking is the key to success in practically every phase of life, especially when mastering the organ, particularly when employed as an accompaniment to motion pictures. In such case the man at the organ must not only think of the various pedals and keyboards, but must also be able at a moment's glance, to translate all emotions of life into musical language.

"A good memory is a very valued help to the player. Not only should he try to memorize certain compositions as a whole, but he should especially furnish his stock-vise of remembered music with stock phrases and motives adapted to different moods, so that he can always draw from the library in his head."

America can boast of a great many orchestras, who are walking musical libraries. America can also boast of the fact that it is to-day, within its boundaries, building the greatest and finest organs in the world.

American organists and organs plus American ingenuity in the motion picture industry are the only responsible factors for our latest creation, "The $100,000 Organist." THE EDITORS.

New Organ Catalog

A new catalog of the Marr & Colton Company, manufacturers of the New Era Organ has just been received. It is an exceptionally well gotten up and arranged booklet and its pages tell the story of New Era organs in a clear-cut concise manner that impresses the reader.

In the front of the little book several pages are given over to the description of the various styles of organs and the effects of which each is capable. The last half shows a large number of illustrations of theatres in which New Era organs have been installed.

Review of Latest Musical Compositions

1—"Chant Erotique," by Irenee Berge, a charming composition of originality and charm. This composer has gained world-wide reputation through his "Symphonette Suite." (Belwin, Inc.)

2—"Blue Bells," 3/4 charming waltz movement, by Zamecnik. (Sam Fox Pub. Co.)

3—"Serenade Grotesque," a characteristic Intermezzo composed by Gaston Borch, whose works are known all over the world and who has attained an admirable reputation through his Incidental Series. (Victor Music Co.)

4—"Prelude Religieux," a 4/4 Moderato composition by Edith Lang. The number is of exceptional tonal beauty, and it can justly be said that it is a sequel to such famous compositions as Gounod's "Ave Maria." (Boston Music Co.)

5—"Indian War Song," a new type of an Indian battle melody composed by Borch. (Carl Fischer.)

6—"Desert Dreams," by Leonard Lewin, a fox trot fast becoming a rage in New York. (Waterson, Berlin & Snyder.)

7—"Manyana," a marvelous melody from Mexico by Newman Fier. (Jack Mills, Inc.)

8—"Kamel-Land," a novelty fox trot. (Chas. K. Harris.)

New Studio Nearly Completed

WITHIN a few weeks the new studio equipped by Mr. Jacob Freedman of 116 Nassau street, New York and located in Astoria, Long Island City, will be ready for occupancy. The structure itself is not new but the remodelling has been carried out so extensively that to all intents and purposes it might just have been built.

The studio proper consists of two rooms arranged in an L shape. One of the rooms is 50 x 125 and the other 62 by 82. It is possible to throw the two rooms together into one large one. A ceiling varying from 20 to 30 feet in height provides plenty of room for the erection of seats and also for the overhead balconies carrying the current feeders. One excellent feature of this studio is the fact that there is not a post anywhere in it. All the space is clear and usable.

Underneath the studio is a basement that can be used for small sets or for a laboratory. Here the projection room will be located as well as several other rooms for various purposes.

The studio will be equipped with the most modern lighting system, laid out and installed by the Studio Equipment Co., who have had considerable experience in studio work.

There will also be the necessary offices, carpenter shop, dressing rooms, shower baths and hot and cold water in all dressing rooms.

The location of the studio is also to be commented upon. It is on Mills street within two blocks from the Astoria (92nd street) ferry and occupies a water front privilege.

It is reached by the Queensboro Subway from Grand Central Station, getting off at the Grand avenue station and taking a 92nd street ferry trolley car to Mills street. Or the visitor may take the 92nd street ferry car at the 59th street bridge and ride direct to Mills street. By either of these means the time required is less than a half hour. The trip may be made from Times Square by auto in 20 minutes.

Music makes your pictures more effective

Light, sprightly airs for happy scenes, and a solemn accompaniment for tragic moments, help a picture "Get Over" and please the audience.

No instrument lends this finishing touch to your films so thoroughly as does an

for it will render any type of music with all the effect of a full orchestra. Yet but one man is required to operate it.

Although used in the largest motion picture houses because it draws the crowds, the Estey is particularly helpful to small houses that cannot support a number of musicians.

Let us tell you of a nearby theatre where you can hear an Estey—or ask our representative to call and tell you how economically you can have an Estey installed in your theatre.

The Complete Plan Book

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

"The Great Nickel Robbery"
(Fox Comedy—Two Reels)

AS long as Hampton Del Ray, who supervises these Sunshine Comedies, can manage to slide in sufficient bits of original action these pictures cannot help but get some good laughs. He has done this in "The Great Nickel Robbery," where the setting is laid mostly along the "Wait-a-While" Street Car Line. This gives the producer opportunity a plenty to burlesque poor trolley service, and the habit of motormen of not stopping for passengers. Whether there is any ground for the satire or not does not matter much, for jokes about poor trolley service still flourish, and for this reason there is an emphatic note of appeal.

This comedy, like its predecessors, does not rely upon the actors for its laughs. It is distinctly a director-comedy rather than a star-comedy. You may forget whether the conductor had a mustache or not, but you will remember his throwing out a life preserver to haul in a pursuing passenger.

The picture has been as lavishly and carefully produced as any of the previous ones. The dancing girls pay only a brief visit to the screen and the cleverly trained dog is absent. The monkey does a few tricks. There is action all the way through and a chase at the end, no better than the usual.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR

(Goldwyn-Bray Cartoon—One Reel)

FOR its educational feature the latest Goldwyn-Bray strip contains scenes showing the activities of the Traveler's Aid Society in New York City, and the shots of the emigrants landing and being cared for are interesting. There is also a scene in the [illegible] New York home and [illegible] and American soldier wedding performed in the home is shown. Under the title of "Master Minds of America" we see [illegible] pictures of the painter, Childe Hassam, at work. The process of etching illustrated here will be interesting and entertaining. The cartoon has one or two real laughs. The figures move naturally throughout, rather than striking a ridiculous pose, holding it for a few seconds, and moving on in a jerky fashion. Super-exaggerated antics of a horse are responsible for the laughs.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR

"Chang and the Law"
Republic Distributing Corporation—From Stories Based on Experiences of William J. Flynn—Two Reels

THE third of the William J. Flynn detective stories, with Herbert Rawlinson as "Lightning," the secret service man, fails to live up to its predecessors. "Chang and the Law" is a story of the capture of some thieves who made a specialty of stealing bonds.

Mr. Rawlinson's interview [illegible] town and then goes on to Hartford and captures the gang with the aid of the colored [illegible] daughter and [illegible]. Little that is new or plausible is found in the drama and its development is arbitrary. There are a few scenes where the action is good and the early sequences in Chinatown provide a real [illegible] atmosphere.

The picture suggests that it was [illegible] hastily and with an idea of conservation in expense. A number of the minor characters are extremely amateurish and detract much from the scenes they are in. Some real Chinamen are used, but they do not impress greatly with their dramatic ability. The man who plays "Chang" seems unavailable is very good. Rawlinson does all that he can even to opportunity to accomplish in his usual finished style. The fact that the picture is not as good as the first two of the series lies mostly in its [illegible] and very short.—J. S. DICKERSON

"Snowbound"
(Burton Holmes Travelogue—Famous Players-Lasky—One Reel)

ALONG about the end of August the reel would probably look better than it does just now, since it is nothing more than views of that which most people residing in a suitable [illegible] are quite enough of in the form of snow. You see the wet blanket loading down the evergreen trees, view of white expanse in open spaces untouched by the foot of man or beast and the well beaten track of a country road with enough of the flakes on the ground to make fast sleighing. To those who think that a real winter scene is pretty it should be pleasing. To those who find either or green solid, flowing and more desirable will be only a reminder of [illegible] too cold all around. Title is [illegible] and Burton Holmes is present as [illegible] the cartoon [illegible] together. They are very appropriate and make the offering rather distinctive.—J. S. DICKERSON

Twelve Full Plan Book Reviews of the latest features will be found in the following pages

---

"Stick Around"
(Ernest Truex Comedy—Two Reels)

FAIRLY productive of laughter is the new Ernest Truex comedy, "Stick Around" which is being sponsored by Amedee J. Van Beuren. The [illegible] comedian is seen to good point provided he is furnished with anything in the shape of ideas. It looks as if it had been provided with an adequate one here. There is no [illegible] present, the humor being derived principally from the trick devices which Truex adopts in his effort to play the detective. He shall retain make his work [illegible]. And the subtitles are pithy and to the point. Which helps a great deal.

Truex is some various detective but he [illegible] in the end and told to [illegible] around by the boy under suspicion. Here it is that the action pick up and presents some [illegible] dent. The detective is awaiting back stage when suddenly a mouse dart up his trouser which causes him to break loose and jump out in front of the chorus. And how he can do the [illegible]! The mouse trick around so long that Ernest cannot top. He is the hit of the show. The picture can be called good natured [illegible], with none of the players going to extremes in getting it over. So the action is spontaneous all the way. Which makes it a [illegible] and entertaining enough to [illegible] program.—J. HUBERT REID

"What Could Be Sweeter"
(Goldwyn—Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven Comedy—Length, Two Reels)

THIS [illegible] to be considered a [illegible] success by one half of it is the [illegible] will be [illegible] because the offering has action rather than from the comedy situations it presents. The fact that can be said of it is that it keeps going with interest [illegible] mildly amusing incident. The worst that could be said, is that the plot is a comedy element and there is nothing [illegible] out the way it has been developed.

The picture is perfectly [illegible] has been given [illegible] production and will [illegible] here, the [illegible] a country mechanic who [illegible] the daughter of a railway president, stranded in the village where the youth resides because of a fake quarantine of Influenza. Considerable of the action of the picture takes place in a country hotel with some good "hick" types [illegible] around without much of anything to do.

The stars do most of the work and manage to get the production by. It will do as a filler and is to be preferred to a slap stick production which [illegible].—J. S. DICKERSON

WHY CHANGE YOUR WIFE?
(De Mille-Famous Players-Lasky)

Interesting as Drama and Sure Box Office Attraction

"WHY CHANGE YOUR WIFE?" is illogical and overdrawn, practically throws that which most people call part of the moral code overboard with its teachings, presents its principal characters as people who have about as much regard for the sanctity of the marriage vow "as an Arab does for a sun bath," but nevertheless it is an absorbing and highly entertaining picture which cannot fail as a box office attraction.

The first part of the story is the familiar one of the husband who loves gaieties and the wife who is "highbrow," with the husband getting interested in another woman. Then the picture departs from the beaten paths and is daring, not to say bold, in the development of its theme.

We might add that it shows closeups of a certain talking machine company's records no less than half a dozen times and advertises a certain perfume very nicely on several occasions, all of which wasn't exactly essential in telling the story.

The production attempts to point a moral, or at least to teach something, but about all that it shows is a lot of unusually original and interesting incident, some of it of a humorous nature, several really dramatic scenes and a lot of Gloria Swanson's, Bebe Daniels' and other females' forms.

The picture has been more than well staged. The titles are perfect. It has big sets, displays some gorgeous gowns and is excellently acted. It is a picture that will be talked about. It has wonderful exploitation possibilities. It probably will come in for a panning at the hands of the moralists, and for an exhibitor with a neighborhood or small town house it may not be an ideal attraction, but every one who goes to pictures will be around to see it if some of them have to sneak in for a late show, sitting in a dark corner.

Acting honors go to Gloria Swanson and Bebe Daniels. Thomas Meighan is adequate for his role, but is not given exceptional opportunities.—Length, 7 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Why Change Your Wife?" the most sensational picture of the year, which has broken all records for long runs in Los Angeles, New York and other large cities, has been booked for the ———— theatre for a ———— day run beginning ————.

The theme of the picture is a daring one, expounding a doctrine about married life which is worth careful study, and showing what happened to a man and wife who failed to get together on a fifty-fifty basis in time to avert a divorce and then another divorce. Gloria Swanson and Bebe Daniels are the wives. Thomas Meighan is the husband. All are ideal for their roles. The picture has been magnificently staged. There are big sets, women's gowns that will make the women gasp and the men look twice. There are scenes which are bold and perhaps risque, but they have a place in the film and are not suggestive. The picture has a moral. It preaches that married people should not expect all the virtues in each other and must expect to make concessions. It also asks "why change your wife when you won't get a better one?"

The production is a Cecil B. DeMille picture which rivals "Male and Female" and other big Paramount-Artcraft features of the season and a special which every theatregoer should not fail to see.

PROGRAM READER

The most talked of picture of the year, the one which has made the largest cities gasp at the daring and truth of its theme, Cecil B. DeMille's production, "Why Change Your Wife?" is the attraction at this theatre for a ———— days' engagement beginning ————.

The story is frankly sensational for all that its theme is one which will interest everyone of mature years presenting the problem of "how to live happily though married." Thomas Meighan as the hero married a woman who had different ideas than he had. He is divorced and marries again to find that his second wife pleases him less than the first. Then comes a mental fight between the two women for possession of the husband, wife number one having learned many things about the world and happiness and finds that she loves the man she has so willingly allowed to depart from her.

Gloria Swanson is one wife and Bebe Daniels is the other. Woman's charms as well as woman's wits enter into the battle. All learn a lesson before the picture is over, not the least being the man.

It is one of the most interesting pictures of the year. Everyone will not agree that it is the correct way to solve domestic problems such as confronted the characters in Mr. DeMille's story, but all will agree that it argues well for this particular way and that its theme is not only unusual but bold in its development. Prepare yourself for a picture sensation. Such gowns, such magnificence, such interesting incident even if it be a bit risque, has never been made into a picture.

SUGGESTIONS

Bill as a sensational picture. Do not mince matters. Tell them that Gloria Swanson and Bebe Daniels wear bathing suits and other small pieces of wearing apparel that leave little to the imagination but explain that there is a reason for it.

"BRIGHT SKIES"
(Brentwood-Robertson-Cole)

"Slavey" Story Mixed With a Bit of Slapstick

WHATEVER the fans are going to think about Za Su Pitts, who stars in this production, they must admit that she is unique. She has developed a personality that we are accustomed to see in slapstick comedies. She has been given a "slavey" role, and, remarkable to state, she keeps it throughout the picture. In only two brief scenes do they make her pretty. The rest of the time she is an overgrown, lanky maiden, with hair a la Sis Hopkins, and dress a la Cinderella. Facial grimaces, carefully studied awkwardness of gesture are somewhat new to a screen star. And Za Su Pitts could be attractive if she wished her brief appearance as a rich young lady proved this.

The story is a clean little tale, rather spoiled by careless development. For comedy "chases," such as fill the first reel, do not mix with a heart interest comedy drama, and had some of this earlier footage been given to a more detailed explanation of the father's early history, it might have made the story more lucid and probable. Of course, the star is a "nobody," and when a rich banker is seeking a child whom somehow or other he has never seen, "Sally" is brought to him. She lives in luxury for a short time, leaving the young farm hand, with whom she is in love, to go to her supposed father. But it develops that none other than the farmer's boy is the rightful child. Sally, however, joins the family, as daughter-in-law.

There is a nice little romance in the corn fields to provide enough, yet not excess, of sentiment, and Tom Gallery, playing the farm hand, does well. Jack Pratt and Jack Braughall seem to have been poorly directed. Kate Price as Mrs. Cassidy, is made to overdo her part. The day of the Irishman with pink whiskers, and his rotund wife, is past for good. If your patrons like the star, and this is a big gamble, they will get average entertainment. Length, 5 reels. Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

Za Su Pitts, a new and attractive screen star, will be seen at the ———— theatre on ———— in a true heart interest drama called "Bright Skies," a Brentwood production. It is a clean, wholesome romance of New York and the countryside.

It tells the story of "Sally," a little nobody who lives in the East Side of New York. Sally eventually leaves her poor home and unkind mistress and takes to the "road" as a dancing girl, assisting an old Italian organ grinder. Together they roam through the countryside, playing and dancing together, and collecting their few pennies. But the old man dies suddenly and Sally finds that her only friend is a young farmhand, who sees that she obtains work in the neighborhood.

Meanwhile a rich banker is looking for his child whom he has never seen. He mistakes Sally for her and brings her back to New York to his palatial residence. But Sally herself learns of his mistake and steals out of the house. It develops that none other than her farmhand lover is the real child, and Sally joins the family in the role of daughter-in-law.

PROGRAM READER

Once in a great while something really novel is seen in pictures. "Bright Skies," starring Za Su Pitts, is in this class. It is a wholesome little romance of the countryside and you will welcome it in relief of the conventional society drama. The star, too, has a personality far different from the average screen favorite and has a role that admirably fits her pleasing little self. It is the old story of first love, surrounded by the most interesting incidents and played by the most fascinating little star.

SUGGESTIONS

The story seems to be the best angle to boost in this production. Tell of the little slavey who becomes a gypsy, joining the old Italian organ grinder. The star may not have a large following at present, but show stills which are typical of her. Her last work was "Seeing It Through." This picture may bring the star into favor with your patrons, because they will probably have never seen any one exactly like her. The best stunt would be an organ grinder with a monkey playing in front of your theatre or going through the streets with an appropriate sign.

CATCH LINES

The story of a little East Side girl who turned gypsy.
A wholesome romance of a poor East Side "nobody" and a young farmhand.
Two "nobodies" fell in love. Then one found a father and they both became "somebody."

divorced, marries again and finds that he has made a worse bargain and then divorces wife number two and again marries wife number one. Use plenty of still pictures, quote from the titles which argue well for the theme presented. The picture is ideal for a fashion show tie-up. It lends itself well for a prologue.

CATCH LINES

He thought his wife ought to be a doll faced model on which to hang clothes and scout around like a chorus girl. She thought her husband should act and think like a Presbyterian preacher. It took quite some time and a lot of experience before both learned something about "how to live happily though married." You may learn by their experience and save yourself much trouble and unhappiness.

"SIMPLE SOULS"

(Hampton-Pathe)

Pleasing Picture Which Should Entertain

THIS is about the classiest picture we've seen Blanche Sweet play in a long time. By class we mean the attention to detail which runs throughout the production in regard to the telling of the story, which if not of the strongest has that peculiar drawing power with sustaining interest enough to make it hold its own on any program. Careful attention is also given to the arrangement of the settings and the selection of the cast, all of whom are actors of reputation upon the screen.

And Blanche Sweet has never done better work than she has in this one, sticking closely to the character she is portraying. As Molly Shine, the daughter of a drinking father and weeping mother, who is out of a job because she cannot concentrate on anything but story-books, she is simple and convincing. Fortune comes her way in the shape of a young duke, who falls in love and marries her, much to the surprise of her folks and the neighbors, who doubt the marriage existence until she produces the certificate and the duke's sister who cannot bring herself to believe that her brother should marry anyone but a lady. In these scenes Miss Sweet is still the simple girl, never once getting out of the character.

Of course the story has its weak points and is wanting in love interest, but it must be understood that the characters are drawn from the better class and that the picture's aim is to amuse rather than to excite the emotions. Length, 6 reels. Frank Leonard.

THE CAST

Molly Shine	Blanche Sweet
Henry, Duke of Wynninghame	Charles Meredith
Peter Craine, his friend	Herbert Standing
Lady Octavia, the Duke's sister	Kate Lester
Samuel Shine, Molly's father	Herbert Grimwood
Mrs. Shine, her mother	Mayme Kelso

Story by John Hastings Turner.
Scenario by Fred Myton.
Directed by Robert Thornby.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

Blanche Sweet in her latest Jesse D. Hampton production for Pathe release will appear at this theatre on ———— of next ————.

This picture is heralded as the best film Miss Sweet has made to date both in story and production, giving the star an opportunity to display her talents in a way as yet unseen.

In this feature she plays the role of a simple girl whose one thought is "books." Her home is not of the best for she has a drinking father and weeping mother to contend with. But one day fortune flies her way in the form of a young duke who falls in love with and marries her much to the astonishment of her folks who do not believe the marriage is real until she produces the certificate. After her marriage she has to face the usual disappointments of those who marry out of their class. This time it is the duke's sister who tries to snub her at every opportunity, resulting in her dejection and a desire to fly away. She seizes the opportunity to make her escape when it is presented but fate arranges it so that she is brought back to her husband in a most peculiar way, which brings to a climax one of the prettiest stories ever told.

In the cast are such well known screen actors as Charles Meredith, Herbert Standing, Kate Lester, Herbert Grimwood and Mayme Kelso.

PROGRAM READER

Blanche Sweet's latest Hampton production for Pathe release will be shown at this theatre on ———— of next ————.

For those who like an absorbing story with plenty of interest intermingled throughout together with a pretty star whose role calls for a new display of her talents and most of us do, this is the picture to see.

She wanted books, whole stacks of them to read and be happy with. But her father was given to drinking and her mother to whining over her lot, so that the young girl's home life was not of the best. But she was born to be lucky and fortune came in the form of a young and handsome duke who fell in love and married her.

But somehow her folks could not believe that the marriage was real and believed she was not a good girl. However, she showed them the marriage certificate which turned their fears to surprise and they could hardly believe that their daughter could be so fortunate. Now the young duke had a sister who made things so unpleasant for our heroine that she attempted to fly away but fate intervened and brought her back and into the arms of her husband, bringing to a close one of the prettiest stories ever told.

SUGGESTIONS

This picture should play almost any house and give pleasant entertainment. In exploiting the story lay stress upon the fact that it is one of those human tales which should interest an audience and give them enjoyment rather than excitement.

Now this story has its weak points and care should be taken not to proclaim its merits in an extraordinary manner. If you do you may have some disappointed patrons.

Blanche Sweet is convincing in the role she plays and should please those who have a liking for her.

CATCH LINES

She loved him but she wanted to run away. Why did she want to do this? See Blanche Sweet in "Simple Souls."

She told him that she loved books, whole stacks of them. Was he pleased with her for liking them? See "Simple Souls."

They didn't believe she was married. How did she convince them? See "Simple Souls."

"A COMMON LEVEL"

(Transatlantic)

Spectacular Scenes Will Probably Carry This Through

IT seems rather a pity that the amount of energy which must have been expended in taking some of the excellent battle and historical scenes that we see in this picture, was not used in a stronger story, better directed and more logically worked out. Edmund Breese, Claire Whitney, and Burton King are not to be blamed, for the modern story is pleasing enough. But then work is negligible, since the greater part of the picture was taken in Italy, with a different cast and director.

An analogy is drawn between a relentless business man, who threatens to ruin a girl's father unless she marry him, and Attila, the king of the ancient Huns, who spared Rome only when he obtained the woman of his desire. Ryan, the modern villain, dreams all this, and watches the career and final ruin of the counterpart of the bygone centuries. The sets and battle scenes are truly lavish, but they form chiefly a succession of stupendous views rather than a story. For there is little dramatic appeal, and very little suspense created, despite the opportunity. In fact, with the wealth of irrelevant matter thrown in, we get a little hazy occasionally as to what is really happening. But the atmosphere is faithfully and vividly obtained; the Italian actor who plays Attila is good, and the photography is excellent. It seems to be a case of a director, continuity writer, or somebody, who has not a highly developed sense of dramatic action.

Because of the elaborate scenes the picture will probably please the average. The moral it contains is excellent. And could some unnecessary characters, inconsequential incidents, and ambiguous titles of the ancient story be removed, it would probably go big. Length, 6 reels. Matthew A. Taylor.

THE CAST

Matthew Ryan	Edmund Breese
Marion Schuyler	Claire Whitney
Mr. Schuyler	Sydney Gratton
Attila	Pebonari

Directed by Burton King and Ambros
Scenario by Lloyd Lonergan

PRESS NOTICE STORY

"A Common Level," a six-part spectacular drama of the days of Attila, "the scourge of God," woven into an intensely gripping modern story, will be the attraction at the ———— on ————.

In this photoplay are seen such well known players as Edmund Breese and Claire Whitney, who appear in the modern story. The thrilling tale of the rise and eventual downfall of Attila the Hun, was filmed in Europe. This undoubtedly will prove to be one of the most spectacular motion pictures filmed since the Babylonian scenes in "Intolerance." In some scenes the number of people before the camera numbers well into the thousands.

The two stories of the modern and ancient world are blended cleverly together. Matthew Ryan is an unscrupulous financier who fights with his dollars to gain his ends, as Attila fought with his sword. Ryan forces his enemies to the wall by the power of this gold, Attila, by the strength of his armed fist, and the fury of his barbaric mind. The battle scenes between the savage Huns and the valorous, carefully disciplined Roman hordes, will go down in motion picture history as one of the most elaborate bits of film ever flashed on the silver sheet. The triumphant advance upon the helpless Romans is shown, the diabolic schem of the pagan king working out as he takes the Roman girl as his wife and agrees to spare the city. Besides the spectacular element, there is the appealing modern story, presenting and answering a problem that has an universal interest.

PROGRAM READER

Do you want a picture that is different? One that will combine the thrills of the spectacular scenes of "Intolerance," with a gripping modern story of American business? Such is "A Common Level," the attraction for this theatre on ————. Much of the film was taken in Italy, and in some scenes fully five thousand people are crowded before the camera. It tells the story of one of the most interesting men in history—Attila the Hun, known as the "scourge of God." You will follow this cruel barbaric emperor through his battles, his pleasures, and watch the intrigue hatched by his cunning mind. Woven in is a modern story which cannot fail to hold your interest.

SUGGESTIONS

You have here a costume play mixed with a little modern story. Boost the two different stories about equally in your advertisement. Do not neglect to show some stills of the modern characters, despite the fine scenes you may be able to get of the spectacular battle scenes. You can get some fine bits of ad copy by comparing Attila with the hardened Wall street financier, and plenty of good catch lines for your program. Edmund Breese and Claire Whitney will be known, and so will Burton King. A contest for school children would help. Have them write compositions on Attila. See if you can get the local historical societies, either of churches or schools, interested. If you costume your ushers be sure you get the right types and good make up. Otherwise it would savor of comedy.

CATCH LINES

He fought with his money as Attila fought with his sword.

A modernized Attila—a twentieth century "scourge of God!" Such was Ryan, unscrupulous captain of finance.

King and slave on a common level in the eyes of their Creator! Such is the theme of this thrilling drama.

"THE FAMILY HONOR"
(King Vidor-First National)

Conventional Photoplay Smacks of the Theatre

THE old "save the family honor" theme is resurrected again as the basis of King Vidor's latest First National release. The conventions are entirely in place with nothing missing to emphasize the pathos and the note of heart interest. You see the high minded girl and her weak brother—you look upon the bashful hero who also has a sterling character, and you are presented to the faithful retainers who stick by the poverty-stricken family no matter whether they are paid any salaries or not. And you can make up your mind that the settings are visualized against Southern backgrounds. The picture carries child interest too, the little figure of Ben Alexander being presented as a disciple of Right Thinking. Mr. Vidor has touched upon Christian Science before and he uses it here to emphasize the human note.

"The Family Honor" is rather crude melodrama which is lifted at times through the director's employment of homespun realities. He doesn't show us how the family manages to exist, but he does go to some trouble in drawing the contrast of characters. The picture may be called entertaining until the theatrical climax, and the humanities of the earlier scenes are nearly overwhelmed with crude melodramatic incident. The weak brother is accused of murder and the subsequent court room scene defies logic. The entire action here is badly overdrawn. Witnesses lie on the stand—evidence is shouted from the benches without a reprimand from the judge—and the whole scene is charged with hokum.

Finally when the case appears to be going against the weakling, little brother comes into the court room and marches down the aisle with a halo of righteousness shining before him. His presence is enough to influence the entire chamber with right thinking. The result is that those who furnish false evidence are able to tell the truth. And so big brother is given his liberty. Mr. Vidor, who is a stickler for atmosphere, has seen to it that the picture is saturated with this element. Had he conducted his court room according to Hoyle, the picture would have hit nearer the truth. Still as human as he is the story does not permit him many opportunities to dress it up with his characteristic style. Florence Vidor gives her customary charming performance. And the supporting cast is capable. "The Family Honor" is not a world-beater by any means. Still it is going to please a whole lot of people.—Length, 5 reels. —Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE– STORY

King W. Vidor, the director, who has made a name for himself in his ability to mirror life as it is found in the small community, will present at the ———— theatre next ———— his latest photoplay entitled "The Family Honor," which is being released by First National. This story presents a wealth of dramatic conflict as well as a sound moral and it is excellently interpreted by a cast of capable players headed by Florence Vidor. The plot concerns the proud old Tucker family—stripped to its last dollar in the world, its only hope a college youth with a taste for gambling—a young girl, hoping and trusting, and a little boy who is a disciple of right thinking.

Beverly, the girl, has put her brother through college, only to find out that he has turned out to be a first class scamp. In order to maintain the honor of her name her fiance endeavors to anticipate a raid on a vicious dive in the town —a dive frequented by the brother. The raid is carried on but the young man escapes, although he is later caught and indicted for murder. The evidence is going against him until the little brother comes into the courtroom and conveys a spirit of truth. The result is the brother is freed of the charge. This picture contains a slice of real life—a slice which is mighty close to the heart. Mr. Vidor has paid especial attention to the atmosphere so that all the details and backgrounds appear genuine.

PROGRAM READER

A King Vidor picture, "The Family Honor," will be the next attraction at the ———— theatre, and this announcement means that the patrons are assured of good entertainment. Mr. Vidor is a genius at reflecting life as it is found in the small community. He is a firm believer in the heart interest stories of which his latest is a shining example. The picture details the struggles of a proud old Southern family that has become impoverished through circumstances—with a young girl endeavoring to maintain her good name and the traditions of her ancestors against a group of vicious individuals. How she succeeds with the aid of her fiance and a small brother is told in scenes of real dramatic strength, and which are presented with a fine moral. Watch for the date.

SUGGESTIONS

A King Vidor picture should be exploited with full emphasis placed upon the director. He has become famous as a sponsor of heart interest stories that are true to life. So play up his name prominently and mention his past successes. Tell something of the Vidor family life, that he is the husband of Florence Vidor who heads the cast. Mention that little Ben Alexander appears in the picture. Use stills since they will express some of the fine atmosphere. Play up the picture as a heart drama of family life in the South. Rig up your lobby in atmosphere and have your music arranged from the old tunes of the South.

"THE MIRACLE OF MONEY"
(Henley-Pathe)

A Rather Weak Story Which Loses Interest

WE can't say this is a very good one and we won't say it's a very bad one. But we will say that Hobart Henley has shot away from his mark in this production.

In the first place he has selected a story which, although it might have looked good in magazine form, seems to be rather poor screen material, for it lacks most of the important essentials necessary to make it interesting and amusing. Then again there is much footage wasted in uninteresting scenes which do not help the story at all and tend rather to break up the interest and detract from it.

And then again Henley's direction might be criticised, as he seemed perplexed in many of his scenes, especially those of the lighter ones, as to just what his actors should do.

Still we're not going to put the blame on him for we know he didn't have the material to work with. For instance, there are two principal characters in the story, both women who have reached middle age. One has had a love affair in the years gone by which terminated in the departure of the man, to find his younger brother who had embezzled funds from a bank in order to marry the lady's younger sister. Many years afterwards the other woman, not the runaway sister, receives a legacy and is determined to make the life of her sister happy because "her man" had never returned. While they are enjoying their new fortune, the "long lost sweetheart" is discovered in a hotel where they are stopping, in a sickly condition. After the usual, "Jim where have you been" and the explanations, comes the promise of marriage.

Now this film may interest many of your patrons, especially the women folks and give them pleasant amusement.—Length, 6 reels.—Frank Leonard.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

Hobart Henley's second subject for Pathe distribution, "The Miracle of Money," will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ———— of next ————

It is a strong drama filled with human emotion and heart interest, telling of the lives of two women, sisters, in the small town. They have both had their love affairs which have been unsuccessful and now in later life Patty, the younger, falls heir to a fortune and plans to use her money to bring back her sister Emmy's lost youth and beauty.

In her youth Emmy had had her romance and it had been her tragedy. She had been engaged to Jim Heath, a poor young man. After waiting eight years for him, her sister fell in love with his younger brother and eloped with him. But the boy had stolen funds from the bank where he worked in order to carry out his plans, and the older brother in order that the crime should not leak out, made good with his own money. He then said goodbye to his sweetheart Emmy, and set out to find his erring brother. The years went by, however, but Jim did not return.

In her desire to brighten her sister's life, Patty had decided on a wonderful trip in which they would have everything their hearts could desire. "Only why couldn't it have come twenty years ago, when we were young and had something to live for," she said. And it was a wonderful trip for Emmy in more ways than one for while stopping at a palatial hotel she finds her Jim who is in a very sickly condition. But she nurses him back to health and after telling her his story, says he is ready to begin life again if she is—and she was.

PROGRAM READER

When you book this feature your best bet in exploiting it is to play up the story which although rather weak and not of the latest variety, should create a certain interest among the women folks, especially those over their teens.

Just tell your patrons that the story deals with the lives of two women who although unfortunate in their early lives, in that they were poor, are given a surprise in their later years in the form of a legacy left to one of them.

And do not go too strong in your praise of it, because it may not have the right amount of interest for those who do not care for this kind of story. The trouble with the picture is that like a good many tales which make good reading matter in the magazines, when transferred to the screen lose their attraction, become long drawn out and tiresome. The only "life saver" in the story is the sacrifice of the one sister for the other with a view of making her happy for the disappointment she received in her younger years, in a love affair.

You might also play up Hobart Henley, the director, who has produced a number of pictures within the past few years among them being "Laughing Bill Hyde," "Parentage," "Too Fat to Fight" and "The Gay Old Dog."

SUGGESTIONS

"The Miracle of Money," a Hobart Henley production released through Pathe, will be the attraction at this theatre on ———— of next ————,

It is one of those intensely interesting and absorbing stories of human life which is bound to attract and hold an audience from start to finish. And it might be termed a "special attraction" for the women folks, for it concerns the lives of two sisters, who although poor in their youth, had come into a fortune in their later years and had regretted the fact that the money had not come into their hands in earlier life.

"You an' me are goin' to have a wonderful good time, Emmy—and we'll have everything we've wanted all our lives," said one sister to the other, "only why couldn't the money have come twenty years ago, when we were young and had something to live for."

These few lines will give you an idea of what the story is based on, which should interest you if you are given to viewing strong heart interest tales of this description.

Mrs. Bess Gearhart Morrison and Margaret Seddon are convincing in the principal roles.

CATCH LINES

She had always longed to make her sister happy and when money came in the form of a legacy she proceeded to carry out her object. How did she do it? See "The Miracle of Money."

"THE LOVE EXPERT"
(First National)

Constance Talmadge Scores Again in Romantic Comedy

JOHN EMERSON and Anita Loos have not been so inspired in turning out Constance Talmadge's latest picture, "The Love Expert," as they were in a previous release, "In Search of a Sinner." The idea back of it is not so original and it hardly suffices for five reels of polite comedy. One might look in vain for the individuality of the producing team and not find it except in the captions. And even these are minus the sparkle, the rich humor which have always been characteristic of them. Which is a case of "going to the well, too often." The well has gone temporarily dry and they have been forced to resort to some vaudeville quips. Were it not for the vital and vibrant personality of the star herself and some unique tinting which capitalizes the idea the picture would not rise above a dead level.

But the fact that it does soar with true farcical pretentions and finishes in a blaze of glory is due to the serio-comic interpretation of Miss Talmadge and her players. The producers have turned in the other direction. Whereas the star was shown in previous releases, running away from a husband or pursuing one in the disguise of a widow or a divorcee, this story presents her, a slip of a girl, attempting to catch a spouse by certain tests of love. She knows that if she feels of a man's hand and her heart palpitates and her pulse beats faster and the blushes mount to her cheek, that she is on the right track. She realizes that certain men are in love with her through the redness of their faces a redness which is brought right out on the screen and which is highly conducive of laughter. A close-up of a palpitating breast keeps up the hilarity.

In order to win the man of her heart considerable play is given to marrying off his relatives before he will consent. This action has a tendency to become repetitious, but as it is of a farcical vein and, therefore, quite nonsensical, no censure can be heaped upon its improbabilities. The picture doesn't contain the clever twists and turns which are usually stamped all over an Emerson-Loos offering, but it has its humorous value because of the scientific treatment of the theme. The technical side of the feature is praiseworthy in every particular, and the acting is up to requirements.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

Written and Directed by John Emerson and Anita Loos.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

"The Love Expert" is the latest John Emerson and Anita Loos attraction which features Constance Talmadge and it will be presented at the ———— theatre beginning ————. Mr. Emerson and Miss Loos can always be depended upon to furnish comedies of ideas and they haven't failed in this instance. As the central thought for this picture, the clever authors have provided that whereas this is an age of specialization what would be more natural for a young romantic girl to try and become expert at love.

Thus we find Constance Talmadge in the role of Babs, a boarding-school girl, whose school days end before the senior year, thanks to her delinquencies in the elementary courses and her mania for self-instruction in the science of romance. Babs has other things to attend besides her self-instruction. She has the job of marrying off two sisters and an elderly aunt and compromising her father with matrimony. The picture was adapted from an original story and is said to be the most original and novel feature released in the last year. The Emerson-Loos productions have been greeted by the theatre-going public at large as classic gems of comedy. Miss Talmadge gives a performance marked for its individuality and charm and she is assisted by a competent cast.

PROGRAM READER

The choice screen farce of the year promises to be "The Love Expert," a John Emerson and Anita Loos production starring Constance Talmadge. There's a real mate for every man and woman in the world. You only need to know how to find that person. Miss Talmadge gives you the infallible test. Girls—if you ever expect to go to young ladies' boarding school, don't make the science of love your one and only subject of study. That is the moral if any, taught by "The Love Expert," which will be presented at the ———— next ————. The picture is a gem of comedy satire and surely establishes the Emerson-Loos team as experts in their line. Check your grouch at the box-office when you see it.

SUGGESTIONS

You are sure of attracting patronage to see this picture if you do nothing else in exploiting it, but mention that it is an Emerson-Loos production starring Constance Talmadge. This star is indeed fortunate with her vehicles. It is seldom when she is seen to poor advantage. So play up the fact that this picture is another rich classic in comedy production. Use a teaser campaign here and treat your copy in a humorous way. Use catch lines for posters and use them ahead of the showing —far enough in advance to arouse curiosity. Make a bid for the patronage of young engaged couples. Tell them that they have a chance to learn something new in love-making. Play up the other members of the cast.

CATCH LINES

You never were in love—unless your heart palpitates and you can blush. See the true sign for love as shown by Constance Talmadge in "The Love Expert."

"THE AMATEUR WIFE"
(Paramount-Artcraft)

Irene Castle Has Frail Story on Ugly Duckling Theme

YOU can put this down as a cut and dried picture on an ancient theme which is so anaemic in action that it scarcely has strength enough to finish its story. Then again it is so utterly obvious that one can anticipate the development far in advance. Place a girl in the character of an ugly duckling and it is dollars to doughnuts that before the final climax is reached she will blossom forth as a ravishing beauty. How made to order everything is in working out her transformation! In fear that the story might die of mal-nutrition, those in charge have literally dragged in the drama by the heels. The ugly duckling's actress mother is shot and the callow youth turns the revolver upon himself.

Which introduces the charitable hero who, through a spirit of sympathy, offers to protect the girl by marrying her. He is drawn as consistent up to this point, but thereafter he belies his humanity by running away for a year so as not to be in contact with a plain and unattractive wife. The beaten path is still followed for the heroine suddenly realizes that she lacks charm. Consequently she changes her outlook on life and her mode of appearance. Strange that the intellect of these forsaken wives can change so abruptly! Heretofore this spouse revealed herself as considerably naive, but in the twinkling of an eye she becomes the woman of the world and knows just how to conduct herself in affairs with men. The caddish husband returns home and naturally falls in love with his wife, though she keeps him guessing for the sake of dramatic conflict.

The idea back of this picture isn't sufficient for feature length, and physical action cannot be replaced by psychological processes of the mind especially when the theme is bolstered up with inadequate dialogue. Indeed the captions are far from being gems of clever conversation. A twist in the climax brings a measure of surprise and credit must be given the director for steering clear of sex entanglements. Mrs. Castle does not make an effective picture as the ugly duckling, there being nothing of the child about her. She is not adept in character Parts.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Irene Castle is the star of the Paramount-Artcraft picture, "The Amateur Wife," which is coming to the ———— theatre the week of ———— the ————. This photoplay, which was adapted from a magazine story by Nalbro Bartley, concerns a young French convent girl who comes to America to live with her mother, a musical comedy queen. Her plain clothes and innocent ways get on her mother's nerves to such an extent that she is practically left to her own devices, being befriended only by an admirer of her mother's, Cosmo Spotiswood.

The mother is killed by a jealous lover in a quarrel, and out of sympathy the young man marries the girl. Their marriage at first is not a success. Spotiswood leaves his wife for a foreign tour, but returns to find her a charming creature. In the later scenes of the picture Mrs. Castle wears some stunning gowns that bear the distinctive Castle stamp. Altogether, "The Amateur Wife" is said to furnish her with the unique role of her career, since it offers her opportunities to display her talent as a comedienne as well as to shine in situations of real dramatic strength. William P. Carleton is her leading man. The picture was adapted by Jane Murfin, who is one of the leading playwrights of the day. Edward Dillon is the director.

PROGRAM READER

Admirers of Irene Castle will have difficulty in recognizing the "best dressed woman in America" when she appears at the ———— theatre on ———— in her latest photoplay, "The Amateur Wife." The star has the role of an "ugly duckling" who eventually blossoms forth as a beauty and scores the social hit of New York. The story presents life back of the footlights to some extent and uncovers flashes of genuine humor and pathos. "The Amatur Wife" carries a decided appeal and is the work of Nalbro Bartley, the original story having been called "Miss Antique." Mrs. Castle does some effective acting in the part of the girl who is transformed into a reigning beauty and her support consists of such splendid players as William P. Carleton and Augusta Anderson.

SUGGESTIONS

You can bill this picture as featuring America's loveliest dancer-star and leader of fashion in a gay romance of New York's Bohemian life. Bring out that Mrs. Castle has here her biggest vehicle in so far as providing her with acting opportunities. Mention that the picture is a heart interest drama of an "Ugly Duckling" who is transformed into a radiant beauty. Use stills of the star in her quaint clothes and in fashionable attire. Mention that Mrs. Castle is able to play other roles than those that feature her as the queen of fashion. Play up the high lights, which are found in the pathos, the comedy and the heart-warming love. You can state that the picture is an adaptation by Jane Murfin of a story by Nalbro Bartley and that it was directed by Edward Dillon.

CATCH LINES

She was awkward and shy and he married her out of pity. Rather than be humiliated by her ugly appearance, he ran away. But when he returned, what did he find? See Irene Castle in "The Amateur Wife."

"THE INFERIOR SEX"
(First National)

Fairly Interesting Domestic Drama with Mildred Harris

THE eternal triangle theme, which is the idea behind this photoplay, has not been dressed up with any original high lights to make it carry a distinctive quality. Too much attention has been paid to the moral which is brought out with abundant platitudes to keep it from becoming monotonous in its development. One rather tires of the trusting bride who constantly craves her husband's love because it isn't presented with sufficient contrast. Quite a few scenes are distributed in the earlier reels which have no more dramatic foundation than a bit of conversation over the telephone with the wife continually calling up and asking—"Do you love me?"—and the husband replying—"Of course I do-"

To add a note of conflict a counterplot is introduced which shows another couple that cannot agree, with the wife adopting other tactics than playing into her husband's hands. The young bride eventually conceives the happy idea of arousing her better half's jealousy by leaving him entirely alone. This introduces a faint comedy note a note that might have been employed to better advantage. It soon gives way to plot complications with the two wives involved in an affair which causes their husbands no end of anguish. The older woman is really in love with the "he-vamp" which is not convincing because she is painted as unusually shrewd, being able to distinguish the dross from the gold. To save her reputation the younger woman takes the blame and a few meaning glances squares everything with her husband.

But why does she tell him that her campaign is solely for the purpose of keeping him interested Such a course would make him disinterested again. The picture is told in too many subtitles with the result that the action has a tendency to stop just when suspense is needed the most. Domestic dramas must keep their vitality intact to the finish which is the point where "The Inferior Sex" falters. It makes a plea for faithfulness and tolerance on the part of both husband and wife, but there is no strong lesson established. The picture follows the beaten path too much to be always interesting. Mildred Harris makes her return to the screen after a brief absence and in the lighter moments she gives a good account of herself. Mary Alden, being a more emotional actress, outshines her in the heavy scenes. Milton Sills and John Steppling play the husbands with commendable naturalness. The picture is adequately staged.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

Scenario by Waldemar Young.
Directed by Joseph W. Heneberry.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A vital drama revolving around a matrimonial entanglement is "The Inferior Sex," the First National picture, which comes to the ——— theatre for three days beginning ———— with Mildred Harris Chaplin as the star. This is an adaption by Waldemar Young of Frank Stayton's play of the same name with Joseph W. Heneberry acting in the capacity of director. The story may be called an expose of married life and its problems and presents a dramatic comparison of the sexes in a romance of decided appeal. It has long been a much mooted question as to which sex is superior to the other. Mr. Stayton's play attempts to give an answer.

Ailsa Randall is too eager for affection with the result that her husband tires of playing the lover continuously throughout the day. Then an idea strikes her to keep him guessing by appearing indifferent. And the love that has been offered him gratis is consequently denied so that his vanity is wounded. But the scheme works not only for her but for her dearest friend. It takes five reels of interesting drama to introduce the moral. In the end the wife confesses her scheme and happiness is restored. Mrs. Chaplin gives a compelling performance of the wife and she is ably supported by Milton Sills, John Steppling and Mary Alden.

PROGRAM READER

Outside of its unusual love story and the interest in its up-to-date problems of life, "The Inferior Sex," which comes to this theatre next ———— with Mildred Harris Chaplin as the star, makes an especial appeal to women in the exquisite gowns displayed, and in the beautiful settings and charming scenery. The drama details domestic life and presents a young married woman whose husband has shown great indifference to her. She hasn't learned the art of being discreet but when she does—"well, turn about is fair play." How the husband awakens to the fact that his wife is an ideal companion is told in a vivid and vital manner. The play answers several questions concerning love and will certainly enlighten those contemplating matrimony.

SUGGESTIONS

Bill this picture as a romantic drama concerning marital happiness and bring out that it is a revelation in the art of maintaining domestic bliss. Use it as a lesson to those contemplating matrimony. Make a bid for the patronage of the younger set. Boost the name of Mildred Harris Chaplin who has been absent from the screen for a long time. Mention that she is the wife of Charles Chaplin. Use the title in leading questions as to which is the "Inferior Sex?" You should be able to create a lot of interest in this photoplay through the employment of arguments concerning the theme. Use spreads, teasers, and catch lines. The big exploitation angle of the picture is the title. Surround it with plenty of mystery. Mention the members of the cast. Use stills which will excite curiosity through the various costumes worn by the feminine players.

"TERROR ISLAND"
(Paramount-Artcraft)

Resembles a Wild Serial in Incident and Action

THE sponsors of this picture made an apology for it in the introductory caption and so disarmed the spectator to some extent from being unduly critical. The result is one must accept it for what it is a mere vehicle for the exploitation of the handcuff king, Houdini. The apology was kept up throughout the length of the feature, which proves how those in charge erred in putting over something on the public. Really "Terror Island" goes back to the nickelodion days, there being an absence of rhyme and reason in theme, treatment and interpretation. A sophistirated audience will surely kid the life out of it, just as they did at the Rialto. The picture is nothing more or less than a wild serial compressed into five reels and the incidents contained in it might have been conceived in a nightmare.

Highly impossible as the ancient hokum is, it is going to take a lot of explanation and more apology than what is offered to make even a child believe the stunts which take place under water. Houdini might get away with it on a bet, but not Lila Lee. Listen! She is imprisoned in a safe lowered into the water a group of highbinders fool around ten minutes in lowering a diver who places a bomb under the safe they take at least ten minutes more in bringing him back to the surface—then Houdini floats out of his submarine, finds the safe and spends at least five minutes in opening the combination—on top of which he consumes at least fifteen minutes in steering her (they are still under water) back to the tank in his submarine. While this wild stunt takes up only a few minutes on the screen, it couldn't be done in reality in less than a half hour. The amazing part of it is Lila Lee goes through with it as if she might be a mermaid.

The story is the antiquated idea of the stolen pearl which must be returned to the idol before a white adventurer will be released from the South Sea cannibals. And in working it out the picture reveals scene after scene of some of the weirdest and wildest melodrama that has ever been flashed on the screen. One must accept it in a spirit of good nature and forget its improbabilities. The picture carries enough action and invention and doubtless will please those who "eat" up serials. Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

The handcuff king, Houdini, will come to the ——— theatre next week, beginning ————, in his latest photoplay entitled "Terror Island," which is an original story written by Arthur B. Reeve and John W. Grey. These authors supplied the star with his previous screen vehicle, "The Grim Game," and in their latest contribution they have contrived enough incident to fit the peculiar talents of Houdini. The star has the role of an inventor of a new type of submarine. To rescue the father of the girl he loves from a band of South Sea Islanders, he travels there in his new invention. Encountering a famous gang who are bent upon getting the girl and some sunken treasure belonging to her, Houdini goes through a series of thrilling adventures calculated to make an audience sit up and take notice.

Some of these feats he has never been able to demonstrate before. At the same time "Terror Island" is a thoroughly logical and entertaining story of love and adventure. Lila Lee is the leading woman, and Jack Brammall and Rosemary Theby are in the supporting cast. The story was scenarioized by Walter Woods and James Cruze directed the picture.

PROGRAM READER

Houdini, the celebrated handcuff king, in a thrilling screen melodrama, "Terror Island," will be the attraction at the ——— theatre for the week commencing ————. To save some sunken treasure of ships that have been sent to the bottom forms one of the motives of the tale. But there is, in addition, a skull-shaped pearl upon which a man's life depends; a lovely girl, kidnapped by her villainous relatives; a submarine built on a startling plan; South Sea Island adventures—enough thrills, it is declared, to make the ordinary pictures seem tame in comparison. Houdini accomplishes feats here which have brought him world-wide renown, a number of them being entirely new. Charming Lila Lee is his leading woman. The picture was written by the serial kings, Arthur B Reeve and John W. Grey. So rest assured it carries sufficient thrills.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is your chance to go in for atmosphere in exploiting this picture. Since Houdini is well known as a handcuff king and as an illusionist, it would be advisable to use considerable lobby display. Distribute handcuffs and paraphernalia which Houdini uses and exploit them with placards. Tell that the invention hasn't been made that can hold him. Treat the picture as an adventurous melodrama which features the star in the most daring and hazardous feats of his career. Play up stills of him attempting to get out of his inventions. Play up his name and run stories of his exploits.

"THE ORPHAN"
(Fox)

Wildest of Westerns, with Little Plot

YOU will get one of the shocks of your life when you see "The Orphan," starring William Farnum. You will rub your eyes to learn if you are seeing correctly. For the picture is six reels of bandit and stage-coach hold-ups and (the greatest surprise!) Indians on the warpath. It is many a day since such a picture has reached the screen.

William Farnum plays the good bad man. He goes bad at the age of seven or so, when his father is murdered, and acquires the dreaded title of "The Orphan." At no time during the picture does he really satisfy. He is careful never to appear villainous and smiles pleasantly at almost everybody throughout. The tricks they have made him do are the wildest possible. One-two-three the Indians fall as the Orphan's trusty gun speaks. He saves the sheriff's life three times and the heroine's once. He hides in the bushes and shoots the pipes out of his enemies' mouths. And he ends by reforming and killing his father's murderer, who, by the way, did not age noticeably during the long interval.

Some of the Indian battle scenes are admirable. There is a wealth of beautiful scenery as a background for the story, and the photography is excellent. The Indians are not weighed down with war paint and feathers, are good riders, and not exaggerated. The cast is good, but at no time is called upon to really act.

It is the kind of a feature that will make the children shout aloud with glee. But the star is too sweet faced and a little over weight for the part. One error cannot escape notice. The star is wounded in one scene and entirely bloodless in the next. On the whole the picture has exaggerated action, no noticeable acting, and hardly more plot. Length, 6 reels. Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

William Farnum, the popular Fox star, whose pictures, ever since his memorable "Les Miserables" have won him a host of admirers, is the attraction at the ———— theatre for ———— in his new production, "The Orphan." This is a six reel picturization of a thrilling story laid in the desert west.

For years all the countryside has trembled at the mention of "The Orphan." Such is the name given to a notorious bandit, played by William Farnum. As we get to know "the orphan," however, we find that despite all his evil reputation, he is good at heart. When the sheriff, who is seeking to kill him, is attacked by Indians, "the orphan" interferes and aids in driving them off. Again, when a stage coach, containing the niece of the sheriff, is attacked, he comes to the rescue. There is a reformation, of course, after he comes under the influence of the sweet girl, but not until he has fulfilled his vow, and killed the man who murdered his father.

There are few, if any, more thrilling pictures to come to the screen in recent months, than "The Orphan." Besides the daring riding and exciting chases, there are numerous realistic battle scenes. In addition, the picture has been taken in one of the most beautiful spots in America—the Western deserts, with their towering mountains in the background. The picture will remain at the ———— for — - ——— days.

PROGRAM READER

Do you like action? Do you delight in seeing a story laid in that romantic and picturesque setting—the great desert West of America? And do your heart-beats increase as you see hard-fighting and hard-riding battle scenes. William Farnum is the star of this new picture—"The Orphan," which contains all the qualities to make your blood tingle. The feature is not lacking in love interest, and there is a happy ending at the final fade out. You will be excited, thrilled, and above all—well pleased, after you see "The Orphan."

SUGGESTIONS

Dwell chiefly on the star of this picture. Mention "The Corsican Brothers," if you have shown it, and even go as far back as "Les Miserables," in telling of his previous work. His admirers like to watch him "see red," and start to fight, so use a little of the theme of the story in your copy, telling of the work of the star as the "good, bad man." Show a photograph of him in the lobby. As a stage setting use such bits of western scenery as you can find to surround your screen. Cowboys and bandits in the lobby and streets, seem about the best way to create the atmosphere of the story.

CATCH LINES

There is good in the worst of men—even in such a man as "The Orphan," an outlaw feared throughout the countryside.

William Farnum, the virile Fox star, in a thrilling story of the West.

The story of an outlaw, who saved the life of the man who sought to kill him, and the girl who eventually reformed him.

"LEAVE IT TO ME"
(Fox)

Average Farce Comedy Starring William Russell

THE laughs in this latest William Russell farce comedy are chiefly due to fast and strenuous work on the part of the cast, and the star in particular. The story takes a long time to get started, and once started, is revealed to be a good farcical idea, but lacking in rapid fire farce action.

The star plays the rich young man again, this time forced to go to work by a fiancee who wishes to see him do something useful in life. He buys a detective agency in a crimeless city, confident that cases will be few and far between. But his sweetheart discovers the scheme and in order to straighten matters out, the young man hires as many crooks as possible to start a wave of crime, in order that he may win glory for himself by bringing back the booty. The troubles of another rich young man are brought in, and a second story man steals some incriminating letters for him. The crooks finally start to work in earnest, however, and come to a wedding to steal all the presents. But the amateur detective recovers the stolen gifts, rescues the kidnapped bridegroom, and reinstates himself once more in the good graces of his sweetheart.

If you are looking for a farce, "Leave It To Me" will satisfy, although it will not elicit continuous laughter. There is real good comedy in the high spots, however, and the star ought to win new admirers. He is supported by a good cast including Eileen Percy, Marcelle Daley and Hal Cooly. Harvey Clark has been given a difficult character part and we fear, will grow a little tiresome towards the end. Photography and editing are up to the average.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

An old favorite to motion picture fans will be seen at the ———— theatre on ———— when "Leave It to Me," a William Fox production, with William Russell as the star, will be the attraction. Russell has no end of screen admirers, who eagerly watch for his every release. In this picture he will not disappoint them, for he has been given a part that suits him perfectly—that of an idle rich young man, who must give up his idleness if he is to marry the girl he loves. For his sweetheart, who, by the way, is pretty Eileen Percy, warns him that she will never marry an idler. Therefore Dickey goes to work. Or rather he buys a detective agency, knowing full well that the city is crimeless and that he will have no work to do.

But his sweetheart discovers his ruse and his troubles commence anew. In order to gain glory he hires a crowd of crooks to come to town, with the understanding that he is to recover the booty. Complications of the most ludicrous and side-splitting kind ensue, especially when the thieves decide to do some honest-to-goodness robbing on their own hook.

Besides Eileen Percy, who plays opposite the star in this pleasing farce comedy, the cast includes such players as Marcelle Daley, Lucille Cavanaugh, Hal Cooly and Harvey Clark.

PROGRAM READER

Do you believe in work? That is to say, would you go to work if you had millions? Dickey Derrickson, the millionaire hero of "Leave It to Me," the side-splitting comedy which will be seen at this theatre on ————, did not relish the idea. But his sweetheart said she would never marry an idler. So Dickey went to work—after a fashion. For if he had not gone to work the gang of crooks would never have come on the scene and kidnapped the bridegroom. And if all this had not happened there would have been no "Leave It to Me" to make you laugh for a full hour. William Russell is the star, and you know what to expect from this inimitable screen comedian.

SUGGESTIONS

You have a star to boost in this picture. William Russell already has a large following, so use a photograph of him in your lobby, mention him big in all your copy, and write about him on your mailing cards. For a teaser use the slogan, "'Leave it to me,' said Dickey, 'I'll fix it.' Who was Dickey?" About the only possible tie-up is with a detective agency, and such an arrangement naturally would be difficult. An automobile repair shop might be interested, using the caption, "We Fix Everything." Underneath this mention your title and star. Do not tell all of your story in your program or press notice, but just enough to arouse interest.

CATCH LINES

"Work for a millionaire! Impossible!" said Dickey. "I'll never marry an idler," said Madge. So what could Dickey do?

William Russell in a five-reel comedy that is going to make you roll off the seat if you don't hold fast?

Dickey, the millionaire, decided to be a detective. He did detect some things, but he almost lost his sweetheart in doing so.

All Records Broken in Holy Week!

JOHN BARRYMORE
in
"Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde"

At the Rivoli Theatre, New York, has broken all the house records for paid admissions. And this in Holy Week, the worst week in the year for the theatres!

THE CRITICS SAY:

"In 'Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde' John Barrymore contributes what may be recognized as the finest screen acting yet achieved."—N. Y. Tribune.

"A classic of the films. The applause of the spectators was the greatest heard in a motion picture theatre in years."—N. Y. Evening Post.

"With 'Richard III' on the stage and 'Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde' on the screen, John Barrymore has done the best acting within the memory of this generation."—N. Y. Call.

"If any actor could make movies talk, John Barrymore would in 'Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde.' His personality seemed to leap from the screen."—N. Y. Sun and Herald.

"John Barrymore has set a standard for future tragedians. The character is depicted as truly as the words of Stevenson drew it. One leaves the theatre with the belief that motion pictures are on the verge of a new era."—N. Y. World.

"For the most part the picture is action, wonderfully interpreted by John Barrymore and directed by John S. Robertson. The screen has caught all the eerie atmosphere of this eternal classic. It is impossible to exaggerate the beauty of the settings and the adroit manner in which the plot is swung to its inevitable ending."—N. Y. Globe.

"'Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde' is one of the best features it has ever been our good fortune to witness."—Morning Telegraph.

"John Barrymore is as eloquent on the screen as he is on the stage. 'Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde' is a gripping picture under the influence of Mr. Barrymore's acting."—N. Y. Evening Sun.

"Barrymore's insistently reaching, temperamental hands turn to evil claws before your eyes. His lean dreaming face takes on a look of unbelievable ferocity. He is a cruel and monstrously malignant spirit."—N. Y. News.

"John Barrymore's masterful acting in 'Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde' is without question the outstanding bit of screen work in many months. It ranks equally with his highly artistic 'Richard III'"—N. Y. Evening Mail.

"Barrymore makes the dual character tremendous. His performance is one of pure acting on as high a level as has ever been attained by any one. Future generations may see 'Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde' and in addition to enjoying Barrymore's art they will receive a personal impression of him and know him as his predecessors can never be known. 'Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde' is a work worth while in itself for all time."—N. Y. Times.

ALTHOUGH the stars and pictures now being announced have been definitely decided upon, Robertson-Cole makes the positive assertion that none of these productions shall be released unless they pass the test which classes them as "Specials."

Robertson-Cole is in a position to make this declaration because its contracts with producers provide for the rejection of pictures until they are of the highest standard of excellence.

The box-office value of these attractions should be self-evident to every progressive and discriminating exhibitor.

What Robertson-Cole stands for in the industry was made quite clear in Mr. Cole's speech at the recent convention of our branch managers, when he said: "The day I feel that Robertson-Cole cannot remain in the film business and do it honorably and straight,—we leave the field. I do not care for it if our name is going to be jeopardized." This statement sums up "the honesty of purpose" that guides our every business transaction.

THE POPULARITY OF MISS BARRISCALE HAS SHOWN STRONG AND STEADY INCREASE WITH EACH RELEASE AND UNDER THE NEW PLAN WHICH WILL LIMIT HER PRODUCTIONS TO SPECIALS, THE DEMAND FOR HER PICTURES IS CERTAIN TO BE EVEN MORE MARKED.

SURPASSING IN PICTURED ELOQUENCE, EVEN HIS FAMOUS CANNIBAL RELEASES, THE FEATURE MARTIN JOHNSON IS NOW SENDING FROM THE INTERIOR OF THE ISLAND OF MALEKULA, WHERE IT WAS PHOTOGRAPHED AT THE RISK OF LIFE, WILL FASCINATE WITH SIGHTS THE LIKE OF WHICH HAVE NEVER BEFORE GREETED WHITE MEN'S EYES.

RARELY THE SILENT DRAMA BRINGS THE EQUAL OF "THE FORTUNE TELLER," THE STAGE TRIUMPH WHICH GRIPPED NEW YORK BY ITS INTENSE DRAMATIC POWER, NOW MOULDED INTO A MASTERPIECE BY THAT GENIUS OF MOTION PICTURE DIRECTORS, ALBERT CAPELLANI, WITH ITS ORIGINAL STAR, MARJORIE RAMBEAU, IN A NEVER-TO-BE-FORGOTTEN CHARACTERIZATION.

CONCLUSIVE EVIDENCE OF THE PERMANENCY OF THE ORGANIZATION AND ITS SOUND BUSINESS PRINCIPLES, IS THE PURCHASE BY ROBERTSON-COLE OF THE VALUABLE CORNER PROPERTY AT SEVENTH AVENUE AND FORTY-EIGHTH STREET, NEW YORK CITY—IN THE HEART OF THE WORLD'S FILM INDUSTRY. WORK HAS ALREADY BEEN COMMENCED ON THE CONSTRUCTION OF THE TWELVE STORY BUILDING AS DEPICTED HEREWITH.

What They Say About

"The Dangerous Talent"

with

Margarita Fisher

MOTION PICTURE NEWS: "Plenty of action. A well directed, exciting climax. Story is interesting and exceedingly appealing."

AMUSEMENTS: "Here at last is a real picture. A model of dramatic construction. Margarita Fisher has arrived. Not only is her work excellent, but also that of all the supporting cast. Harvey Clark deserves special mention."

WID'S: "Good play with unusual twists. Interests because of many surprising turns of plot."

BILLBOARD: "Constant interest in the unfolding of the story. Miss Fisher proves adept at emotional work and received splendid support throughout."

TRADE REVIEW: "Strong in suspense—plenty of quick action. Perfect continuity, cleverly devised climax. Margarita Fisher possesses both physical beauty and emotional ability. A sterling attraction."

MOVING PICTURE WORLD: "Satisfactory presentation of story in which elements of melodrama play a prominent part. Miss Fisher is exceedingly attractive."

DRAMATIC MIRROR: "In this day when so many film plays are sent out with barely enough plot to get by with audiences, it seems almost extravagant for any one picture to have so much story as has 'The Dangerous Talent.' It is all intensely interesting and not in the least confusing."

HERE'S WHAT A FIRST NATIONAL EXHIBITORS' EXCHANGE THINKS OF

SCREEN SMILES

"After viewing the last three releases of 'SCREEN SMILES' I have come to the conclusion that it is indeed as you told me a novelty short-reel in every sense of the word.

The short, snappy sayings handed me many a laugh, and along with the illustrations should prove a valuable addition to any theatre program.

I feel that once an exhibitor starts playing 'SCREEN SMILES' that it will undoubtedly remain a fixture in his theatre.

This five hundred feet of film has more laughs than the average two-reel comedy, and judging from the business we are doing now with 'SCREEN SMILES' it will be at the head of our short stuff in the very near future.

Wishing you every success, I am,"

Yours very truly,

We Cover the World

WHEN Inter-Ocean Film Corporation was organized five years ago, it defined its policies as an export concern specializing in the distribution of American films in foreign territories.

In explaining its policies, Inter-Ocean Film Corporation realized that the American Producer who conducted a business largely confined to national boundaries usually concentrated his sales efforts towards domestic distribution and gave little or no attention to his foreign film sales.

That was five years ago. At that time Inter-Ocean Film Corporation occupied an insignificant suite of offices; today the expansion of its business has necessitated the exclusive use of a five-story building.

Success has crowned its efforts.

During its brief career as an export house, Inter-Ocean Film Corporation has taken over the problems of export distribution, and brought the old-world markets to new-world merchants.

If your problem is the distribution of your product in foreign markets, then you need our experience and facilities.

Let us cover the world for you!

Von Stroheim beats Von Stroheim!

MARKSMEN agree—it's easier to crack the bulls-eye with your first shot than with your second.

When Erich Von Stroheim made his first production, "BLIND HUSBANDS", Julian Johnson, Editor of Photoplay, termed it "the almost perfect photoplay"—and it made money for exhibitors in the same splendid proportion—such a golden surprise that people wondered if Von Stroheim had another shot like it in his system.

Well, folks—he has! He's done it again! Another bullseye! In "THE DEVIL'S PASS-KEY" Von Stroheim has done the impossible. He has beaten Von Stroheim!

What's it about? Women! What does Von Stroheim know about women? Too much—the women think. That's why they'll love him and hate him—and pack your house to the fire limits.

See this amazing production now. Genius doesn't show every day.

BOX OFFICE APPROVAL THE ONLY HONEST SEAL OF MERIT

The public verdict on "SEX" has been pronounced. The verdict was unanimous and read like this: "SEX" is one of the very few GREAT PICTURES. Nothing is more conclusive and convincing than the PUBLIC VERDICT. There is no higher authority than the message from the box office. It makes all argument and all praise unnecessary. IT REPRESENTS THE ELOQUENCE OF FACTS. In our recent announcement we told of big bookings in Chicago, Kansas City, Milwaukee, Boston, Atlanta, Pittsburgh, St. Louis, Minneapolis, Spokane, Seattle, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Fort Wayne, Detroit, New Orleans, Dallas, Galveston, Nashville.

"SEX" rises above the average picture like a skyscraper tops a bungalow; it intoxicates the eye, satisfies the mind and carries its appeal right into the depths of your heart.

"SEX" will raise the fame and popularity of your house and impart a new dignity to your screen, it inspires your patrons with the desire for regular attendance at your theatre.

"SEX" embodies the combined triumph of a great actress—Louise Glaum—a great producer, J. Parker Read, Jr. and a great scenario writer, C. Gardner Sullivan and is worthy of your best showmanship.

Life and Folks in the Giant Forests Mirrored in Masterful Fashion

ACTION is the keynote of "KING SPRUCE"—which often rises to great dramatic heights and leads to tense, gripping situations. Then, after a whirlwind of elemental passions, comes the sun smiling through the clouds and makes your audience share in the happiness so touchingly depicted on the screen

"KING SPRUCE" has for its background the giant forests of the North.

THE STORY is woven out of the lives of the men and women who live in close communion with Nature through the changing seasons of the year; quiet folks capable of big passions and of big deeds.

"KING SPRUCE" the men and women of the forest called him because of his wealth, his power, his domineering ways. Unscrupulous as well as tyrannous he challenged the laws of God and man until the plain honesty and simple heart of one of Nature's noblemen led him into the light.

NATURE'S NOBLEMAN is Mitchell Lewis, the famous 'Poleon of "The Barrier" and here he is a second 'Poleon. A knight of the woods "without fear and without reproach."

The love story is woven deftly into the very heart of "KING SPRUCE," its course is rough but the end is full of pathos and tenderness.

UNIQUE GRIFFITH TOUCHES

"D. W. Griffith's latest production, 'The Idol Dancer,' is a distinct departure from former efforts. The unique Griffith touches, however, are there, and the unusual handling of the beautiful Clarine Seymour, more fascinating than ever, would put the picture over were there less plot material than there is. Then, too, there is Richard Barthelmess, whose 'Chink' in 'Broken Blossoms' marked him for stellar honors ere the picture had played half the country. In the beachcomber we have another splendid characterization, and his delineation of Dan McGuire is the outstanding feature of 'The Idol Dancer.'

"Griffith never does things by halves and when he stages a panic-stricken village attacked by savages, it all seems very real indeed to the spectator by reason of the completeness of detail and action. Beautiful photography and unusual angles of life in the tropics distinguish the picture from cheap, clap-trap attempts at this sort of thing and make the whole a thoroughly enjoyable feature."—Exhibitors Herald.

TAKES CENTRAL WEST BY STORM

"Clarine Seymour, dark and lithe, is the heroine of 'The Idol Dancer,' the attraction at the Circle all this week. Griffith could hardly have found another actress in pictures who could have played the part of an impulsive child of nature as this slim, elfish creature plays it. The picture abounds in rich atmosphere and dramatic incident."—Indianapolis News.

SUPREME AMONG FILMS

"Every once in a while David Griffith produces a picture which helps to hold him in his present position of supremacy among film producers. Such a picture is 'The Idol Dancer.' It is expertly photographed, craftily arranged, all the details authentic, and it has that invaluable thing—atmosphere.

"The sort of romance Jack London might have written, given the setting that London loved, the South Pacific Islands, where the white man has barely encroached and where cannibals and head hunters still flourish. Against a background of tall palm trees and the gently rolling surf that touches tropical islands, Mr. Griffith has placed his romance. Clarine Seymour is the charming heroine who dances in worship before her Devil-devil idol. There are big melodramatic scenes.

"The picture is not only sumptuously mounted, but consistently made. All the details build up an authentic frame for the story. Clarine Seymour is a capital little actress, and Richard Barthelmess, who is one of the finest actors on the screen, gives a fine portrayal."—The Indianapolis Star.

Margaret Styr—greatest prima donna in Europe—faced the bitterest problem that ever blackened a woman's life. The story of her wondrous career, of her sordid past, and of the love that lifted her to sublime heights is told in a picture that teems with realistic action.

NEW YORK, MONDAY, APRIL 19, 1920.

THE SCREEN

"Edgar's Hamlet," the second of the Booth Tarkington motion picture comedies, is at the Capitol this week. This time Edgar, having declared a truce with the Teacher's Pet, joins forces with him in a barn-loft production of "Hamlet." Edgar, of course, is the by no means melancholy Dane, and his friend serves alternately as Horatio and the King. A third boy does triple duty as Ophelia, stage-hand and orchestra, and another youthful actor, in complexion a natural Othello, is a decidedly unusual Ghost and startling Queen. The text used is a very much abridged and colloquial version of Lamb's Tale, only such essential scenes as those of the Ghost and tragic ending being included. The performance goes ahead without a hitch until Ophelia, to while away a wait in the wings, begins to play his jew's-harp without realizing the inevitable effect of the music on the sensitive feet of the Ghost. Hamlet saves the situation, however, by savagely warning Ophelia, from the stage, that he will "bust up the show" if he doesn't stop, and the action moves on again as ordered until the fencing match, in which the King substitutes for the omitted Laertes, suddenly becomes a fight. Just as those in the audience, realizing that they were getting more than their money's worth, are beginning to take sides in earnest, Ophelia rises from her watery grave in a washtub and shouts to the combatants to "quit fighting and act" and the fencing match is resumed. The real tragedy of the performance comes, however, when the mothers of the producers discover that their best hats and clothes have been badly used as costumes.

As in the first of his Edgar comedies, Mr. Tarkington's facility with boys as a subject is a source of delight, and again E. Mason Hopper, the director, has skilfully translated the author's scenario into moving pictures. The same young actors, by being natural and interested, make the comedy genuine. The person who cannot enjoy Edgar and his friends is almost unimaginable.

IMAGINE a girl winning a man — then losing him through chicanery — then meeting him again but seeking to pass him by because he had passed her love by. Then imagine her gaining the knowledge that the man had NOT ceased to love her; that she had been fooled into thinking his ardor had cooled BY HIS OWN PARENTS! And so he had wed another, chosen by his family. This is just the start of the story. Be sure to play

EXCELLENT WAY"

Edited by

Mr. & Mrs. GEORGE RANDOLPH CHESTER

CHRISSY DESELDEN marries a man several years her senior—on the impulse of a moment Regret follows the marriage. Her husband is crushed, but strong. He gives her freedom and carries on—alone.

And then Robert Neyland, young and handsome, professing love, comes into her life. Unsophisticated, impressed, Chrissy sets about to reform him. Suspense, action and thrills here. A trip to Reno and divorce proceedings.

With Neyland in New York and Chrissy in Reno, crashing events center on enormous transactions in Wall Street. Neyland is unfaithful. Chrissy hears and returns. Neyland attempts to bankrupt her husband.

Chrissy finds herself. And you find yourself — delighted and profoundly impressed with the luring charm and magnetism of "THE MORE EXCELLENT WAY." A drama unsurpassed among ANITA STEWART pictures.

The Poster Problem

THE mind of a child at birth is as blank as a photographic plate. As that child progresses through childhood, maturity and old age, impressions are being registered upon it every instant during waking moments. In America there are over one hundred million such minds,—and every one of them has a different record imprinted upon it. When you get that fact in your mind you will have some conception of the basic factor of the tremendous problem that the RITCHEY LITHO. CORP. is dealing with.

It is the problem of the universal appeal. The problem of discovering what those common factors are that appeal to each and every one of these one hundred million minds. The RITCHEY LITHO. CORP. approaches it from the purely psychological angle, and solves it in a purely artistic manner. The answer is the RITCHEY poster!

It does make that universal appeal,—and it does so because it is always directed toward one of the essential,—elemental,—universal,—human emotions! Further, it always does it in a characteristically powerful and artistic way. To its universal appeal it adds the elements of beauty and sincerity. As a result it is invariably convincing!

Add to these things the further fact that every RITCHEY poster is a piece of perfect lithographic execution, and you will understand why it is considered the criterion for all motion picture posters!

Motion Picture News

VOL. XXI MAY 1, 1920 No. XIX

The Newspaper and the Picture

A Reiteration of Truths Prompted by John S. Spargo's Important Mission

WE have used the above caption on many previous editorials.

The business in general knows and many newspapers know that, beginning several years ago, MOTION PICTURE NEWS has continually advocated the close cooperation of the newspaper and the picture; we have stated emphatically that, in our opinion, the newspaper was the inevitable basis not alone of local theatre advertising but of those large, national advertising campaigns which were bound to develop with a product of so universal an appeal.

Our Editorials, Complete Plan Book, Service Sections, Exhibitors' Service Bureau, Newspaper Census, Studio Directory, etc., were all originated and built to this important end—to bring into being and make practical this very essential relation.

The recent action of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers—the appointment of Mr. John S. Spargo to undertake, through field work, to establish intelligent and practical relations between newspapers and pictures—is, it seems to us, one of the most vital and constructive moves this industry has ever undertaken.

Mr. Spargo is an experienced newspaper editor. He has estabished photoplay departments in several newspapers. He knows, by close observation and in a practical way, why the newspaper needs the picture going reader and why the picture needs the newspaper. He goes forth well equipped with experience and information.

If he brings about a clear understanding back and forth, between these two big factors, the Association will have accomplished a very large and necessary work.

A GOOD deal of misunderstanding must be cleared away.

In the first place, the newspaper, in years past—and not far past—has been deluged with the largest quantity and poorest quality of press matter ever issued from any source. Photos have been about as bad. We won't go into details—except to say that the Editor everywhere got fairly disgusted and the waste on the part of the picture industry was enormous. The money might have been spent—to some avail—in the most general kind of straight advertising.

On the other hand the newspaper has never understood the picture industry. The industry was obviously large, evidently prosperous and quite clearly wanted a lot of publicity. So "Why don't you advertise?"—asked the newspaper.

Well—let us see.

Every good advertising man knows that you cannot successfully advertise a product in a national way unless (1) your product is of a quality sufficiently high and sufficiently uniform to stand up under the advertising and (2) unless your product is so evenly and thoroughly distributed that people led to buy it can do so when and where they want to.

In a nutshell -the motion picture industry is too young to have mastered either—and furthermore the picture will never be uniform in quality like other products.

Consequently the advertising has been largely local. It had to be. The exhibitor advertised his picture—because he had it and could say where it would be shown and because, in some instances, he knew what he was advertising (We might add here that in the past, so fast and behindhand has production been, advertising matter has been issued from New York headquarters before the picture had arrived from Los Angeles and was seen.)

This exhibitor advertising—in some instances the producer shares the expense—has, of itself, reached large proportions. A number of newspapers carry this space to the amount of from $5,000 to $15,000 a month. Some newspapers exceed this; with some, exhibitor advertising exceeds department store advertising.

WE have some national campaigns—and generous ones. A few producers have been big enough, courageous enough and their product has been uniformly good enough to brave those economic wrinkles of the young industry which make national advertising an exceedingly difficult proposition.

We believe these economic wrinkles will be ironed away—and with the speed characteristic of this remarkable industry.

In the meantime and outside of advertising the fact stands forth, for the newspaper to face, that today fully 13,000,000 people go every day to pictures, and they want and should have interesting news of the entertainment and educator of this day and generation—the motion picture.

Fight on Censorship Legislation Resumed in Massachusetts

Expenses Incident to Enforcement of Bill Argued Before the Committee

CLAIMING that censorship would be ineffective in Massachusetts, Judge J. Albert Brackett of Boston, representing a group of theatrical interests in Boston against motion picture censorship in the State of Massachusetts, pointed out that a number of films, which proponents for censorship had declared to be objectionable, have been shown in Ohio, Pennsylvania and Canada, where motion-picture censorship prevails.

Hundreds crowded into the House Chamber to hear once again the arguments for and against movie censorship in the Bay State. The hearing is being held before the Ways and Means Committee. The bill was reported by the Mercantile Affairs Committee to provide for the censoring of motion pictures under the direction of the Department of Public Safety.

Statistics showing the amount of cost of a censorship body to the state were presented by Representative John I. Fitzgerald of Boston, a member of the house ways and means committee. The statements made by Representative Fitzgerald, were that the bill for state censorship of motion pictures under the direction of the State Department of public safety would cost the state $100,000 a year, and because of the proposed fees for reviewing films, would probably cause exhibitors to advance the price of admission to the the atres showing pictures.

Colonial Alfred L. Foote, head of the Department of Public Safety, estimated that the censorship work would cost his department $40,350 a year, and that the revenue from the fees would amount to $31,200 annually. Representative Fitzgerald attacked these figures as to expense, declaring them far too low, and said that the bill would easily cost $100,000 the first year.

A director of censorship, salary $3,000; nine state police officers at $2,400 each, $21,600; three motion-picture operators at $1,500 each, $4,500; four clerks or stenographers at $900 each, $3,600; for rent of reviewing rooms and offices, $4,000; contingent services, $2,000; three motion picture machines, $1,350; one motion picture booth, $300. Colonel Foote estimated his department would review about 31,200 reels a year, and at a fee of $1 a reel, this would yield, $31,200.

Getting his estimates down to a finer degree, Colonel Foote, stated that, with the law in effect, 600 reels 1,000 feet in length would be inspected weekly. Three machines, operating six hours a day for five days a week, could dispose of this matter, he said; and nine additional men would be needed to pass upon the films and do inspection work—work the theatres throughout the state.

Representative Mitchell of Springfield, a member of the committee, inquired what appeal an exhibitor would have from decisions of the director of censorship. In replying, Colonel Foote, said he would first have an appeal to himself, and later, if he wished to the superior court.

"Then in your case, you would act as a court of one," said Mitchell.

"Yes," said the Colonel.

"You couldn't do this work for less than $1000 a year and do it right," declared Representative Fitzgerald. "Your salary estimates are too low. The inspection fees will be passed on to the consumer and those who go to theatres where pictures are exhibited, will have to pay more admission."

Representative Lyman of Easthampton, who is chairman of the committee, said that he thought the fee of $1 too low, and that it ought to be $1.50 anyway.

B. Preston Clark of Boston, who conducted the hearing for the proponents, said the latter are willing to have the measure passed upon by the voters. The Legislature, however, has no power to send it to the voters; it could only get before the voters in case the legislature should pass it, which seems doubtful just now. Clark said the proposed law has the support of 1,500,000 people who desire that the pictures they and their children see shall be "more wholesome than they now are." This number estimated by the leader of the proponents, is about one-third of the total population of the State of Massachusetts.

Representative Davis B. Keniston of Boston, House chairman of the Mercantile Affairs Committee, which reported the measure, said he saw no reason why censorship should hurt a good picture.

Chairman Keniston opened the meeting, explaining certain financial features of the bill. One section of the bill as favored by the Mercantile Affairs Committee, reads:

"A charge of $1 shall be paid for the inspection of each reel of film or each duplicate reel of film not exceeding 1,000 linear feet; and $2 for each reel of film or duplicate exceeding 1,000 linear feet. All money so received shall be paid into the treasury of the Commonwealth. A reel of film for purely educational, charitable or religious purposes may in the discretion of the Commissioner, be approved without charge."

Leading the opponents of the bill during the hearing in the House Auditorium, Judge J. Albert Brackett, told of a number of pictures shown in Boston and objected to by the proponents of the pending legislation, which he said have been passed as proper in every state in the Union. The judge said that this attitude on the part of the proponents shows just what the state censorship would lead to in Massachusetts were the law passed.

Continuing, he objected to the bill as placing too great powers in the hands of the State Police. The State Police would have the right to stop any picture having a tendency towards corrupting morals. "Who," asked the judge, "is to determine such a tendency?" He said that film men, who buy millions of dollars worth of films should know what the Standards of the State are before they make their purchases.

"What changes in the present bill would you suggest to carry out your idea, inquired Representative Young?

"It is not a question of adding anything to the provisions of the bill. The bill, as drawn, does not set up a standard. It sets up an individual who shall determine the standard. The bill simply says that obscene, immoral, inhuman films shall not be shown. It leaves it with one man to determine what is objectionable.

"Censorship of films is asked for not only by those who want to protect children, they say, from the immoral tendencies which they say some films lead to; it is asked by some simply on the ground of 'injurious effect.' Out west a manufacturer complained of this 'injurious effect' because workmen in his employ saw bathtubs in a motion picture exhibition and

Powers-Laemmle Deal Is Consummated

THE forecasted deal by which all stock held in the Universal Film Manufacturing Company by its treasurer, Patrick A. Powers, would be bought by Carl Laemmle and R. H. Cochrane, president and vice-president respectively of the film company, was consummated Saturday, April 17. Mr. Laemmle and his lieutenant now have complete control of the big film corporation.

Mr. Powers is silent as to his future activities, although he intimates he will not attempt the organization of a picture producing company. He gave as his reason for selling his Universal holdings the fact his other business interests had assumed such proportions as to interfere with his duties in the Universal Company.

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation Issues Annual Report

Balance Sheet, Profit and Loss and Surplus Accounts Are Submitted

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has issued its annual report for the year, ended December 31, 1919, which contains for the first time a consolidated statement, including the various subsidiary companies in which Famous Players-Lasky has an interest of 90 per cent or more. There are other subsidiaries in which it has substantial interests, the earnings from which were not included in the report.

Net earnings for the common stock, after allowing $1,000,000 for taxes and the proportion of earnings due to the new preferred, were $3,066,319, equal to $15.36 a share on the 199,675 shares of common stock. In the report, $66,666 is set aside from earnings as the amount accruing to the $10,000,000 preferred stock for the thirty days, in which it was outstanding in 1919.

The consolidated income account follows:

Gross income		$27,165,326
Operating expenses		23,032,341
		4,132,985
Federal Inc. & Excess Prof. Taxes		1,000,000
		3,132,985
Earnings accruing to Pfd.		66,666
Net Profits for Year		3,066,319

Equal to $15.36 a share on 199,675 shares of no-par value common stock.

The consolidated balance sheet shows the following assets as of December 31, 1919: Cash on hand, $8,282,800; bills receivable $179,785; accounts receivable, $5,545,951; merchandise, $8,865,770; investments, $3,329,177; buildings, plant and equipment, $2,923,271; deferred charges $866,202 and good will, $7,655,680, a total of $37,648,637. Liabilities shown are: Bills payable, $3,709,432; accounts payable, $1,185,161; advance payments, $1,981,636; federal income and excess profit taxes, (estimated) $1,000,000; federal footage tax $328,762; capital stock represented by $10,000,000 preferred and 199,675 shares of common, no par value, $26,013,780; preferred stock of Charles Frohman, Inc. not owned, $310,500; surplus $3,119,366, a total of $37,648,637.

The statement indicates an increase of about 50 per cent in gross income compared with the $18,090,500 reported for the year ended December 31, 1918. Tangible assets at the end of 1919 amounted to $37,648,637 against $10,886,750 at the close of 1918. This increase is accounted for by the sale of the $10,000,000 new preferred and the expansion in various lines of the motion picture industry.

Net current assets at the close of 1919 amounted to $23,580,558 which includes $706,252 of Liberty Bonds carried as investments. Current liabilities amounted to $8,204,991, leaving working capital of $15,375,567.

The following represents the consolidated balance sheet, as of December 27th, 1919:

Assets

Cash on hand and in banks	$8,282,800.04
Bills receivable	179,785.40
Accounts receivable	5,545,950.71
Merchandise	8,865,770.49
Investments	3,329,176.98
Buildings, plant and equipment	2,923,271.55
Deferred charges	866,202.29
Total tangible assets	$29,992,957.46
Goodwill	7,655,679.85
Total	$37,648,637.31

Liabilities

Bills payable	$3,709,431.65
Accounts payable	1,185,161.46
Advance payments (rentals of film and sale of theatre tickets)	1,981,636.37
Federal income and excess profits, Taxes 1919 (estimated)	1,000,000.00
Federal footage and excise taxes	328,761.73
Capital:
Represented by 100,000 shares preferred stock at $100 par (issued November 28, 1919) and 199,675 shares common stock, no par value	26,013,780.00
Preferred stock of Charles Frohman, Inc., not owned by Famous Players Lasky Corp.	310,500.00
Surplus, December 27, 1919	3,119,366.10
	$37,648,637.31

Following itemized statement is the consolidated and profit and loss account for the year, ending December 27th, 1919:

Gross Income		$27,165,326.74
Exhaustion of films and payment for films purchased	$14,468,221.40
Positive prints sold and renewals, cost of accessories, plus royalties and duties	2,347,414.30
Cost of selling and distribution	5,822,860.22
Other expenses (not absorbed in cost to films)	393,845.60
Provision for Federal income and excess profits taxes	1,000,000.00
Net profits for the year	3,132,985.22*
		$27,165,326.74

*Of the above earnings $66,666.67 accrues to the preferred stock of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for the 30 days of its issue.

Consolidated Surplus Account December 27, 1919

Surplus at January 1, 1919		$1,391,403.30
Less: Income and excess profits taxes for 1918		381,297.56
		$1,010,105.74
Add: Profits for the year Dec. 27, 1919, before providing for Federal income and excess profits taxes	$4,132,985.22
Less: Provision for Federal income and excess profits excess	1,000,000.00
		$3,132,985.22
		$4,143,090.96
Less Dividends Common stock	$999,964.50
Preferred stock of Charles Frohman, Inc.	23,760.36
Surplus at December 27, 1919		$3,119,366.10

"We have examined the books of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and its subsidiaries for the twelve months ending December 27, 1919, and certify that, in our opinion, the above balance-sheet and operating accounts set forth correctly the financial position and earnings of the company for the twelve months to December 27, 1919," declares Price Waterhouse & Co.

SOL LESSER has named the next Annette Kellerman six-reel production "What Women Love."

Dave Bershon, manager of First National exchange, H. H. Beall, Sol Lesser's publicity representative, and Mr. Lesser are on their way to the First National convention.

Harry Ravier and Roy Somerville have arrived on the coast. Mr. Ravier will direct, and Mr. Somerville will write continuity, for the National Film Company's serial "Son of Tarzan," featuring Jack Hoxie.

M. Greenfield, of Transatlantic Films, is a recent arrival.

Harry Levey Back From Conferences in West

Harry Levey, general manager of the Industrial and Educational Department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, returned Wednesday from a hurried trip to Pittsburgh, Cleveland and Chicago where he was called for conferences with the officers of the leading motion-picture exhibitors' associations of the West.

The conference with Western exhibitors at the Hotel Winton, Cleveland, resulted in a complete and satisfactory understanding between Mr. Levey and the exhibitors in regard to Universal Industrial and Educational motion-picture distribution. In future these Universal pictures will be booked to the members of all the associations that were represented in the conference, on the Universal's direct-payment-to-exhibitor plan, the payments being made through the association officers upon report that the pictures have been properly exhibited.

New Child Admittance Bill Up in New York

So great was the opposition to the Cotillo bill, recently introduced in the New York Senate and which if passed and signed by the Governor, would have allowed unaccompanied children between the ages of ten and sixteen to have been admitted to motion picture theatres in New York City and segregated in charge of a matron, that it was decided to withdraw the bill and that in its place another bill has now been introduced and fathered by Senator Kelley of New York City. This bill is a statewide one and if passed, will allow children apparently under the age of sixteen to be admitted, providing they are accompanied by their parent or guardian or by an adult person authorized by its parent or guardian. The new matter in the bill is that embodied in the words "or by an adult person authorized by its parent or guardian."

City Votes Three to One for Sunday Openings

Grand Island, Nebraska, voted three to one against Sunday closing on April 6th, when the Ministerial Union brought the question before the people. Motion picture interests conducted a vigorous opposition campaign and the vote was 2,643 against Sunday closing, and 863 in favor.

Coast Believes Abrams Has Big "Six"

Los Angeles (Special).—Hiram Abrams left here for New York on Wednesday, April 21st, declining to state the result of his coast visit. While here he held numerous conferences with the producers represented in the new "Big Six" and in Los Angeles it is strongly believed that he has definitely consummated the deal for distribution of the product of Ince, et al.

All's Ready for Eastern Studios Ball

WITH several prominent screen stars present, the Eastern Studios Ball, to be held April 28 at the Hotel Commodore for the benefit of a welfare fund for the studio employees of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, is expected to be one of the biggest affairs of its kind ever held in New York City. Nearly 1000 tickets already have been sold, and the sale of boxes to stars and prominent motion picture men has swelled the receipts by several thousands of dollars, it is declared

The committee in charge of the ball has arranged several features for the entertainment. Emma Trentini, the famous light opera singer, will sing selections from favorite successes, and several artists from the Keith vaudeville circuit will take part. The vaudeville program will begin at 8:30 o'clock and last until 10 o'clock, when the dancing will begin, to continue until the "wee small hours."

CinematographersChoose Officers for 1920

The American Society of Cinematographers, which now has a chosen membership of fifty-seven cinematographers, announces that the following board of governors has been elected for 1920:

Joe August, H. Lyming Broening, Wm. C. Foster, Eugene Gaudio, T. G. Gaudio, Frank B. Good, King D. Gray, W. L. Griffith, F. W. Jackman, R. S. Newhard, S. S. Norton, Philip E. Rosen, C. G. Rosher, H. A. Scott and L. Guy Wilky.

This board has chosen the following officers:

Philip E. Rosen, president; Wm. C. Foster, first vice-president; L. Guy Wilky, second vice-president; Fred W. Jackman, treasurer, and H. Lyman Broening, secretary.

Pennsylvania Exhibitors Are Urged to Unite

M. Feitler, former president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Pennsylvania, states, in a letter addressed to Pennsylvania Exhibitors, that owing to the existence of the American Exhibitors' Association in Pennsylvania, it was considered advisable to merge with the latter organization and thus ally forces in a common cause. Consequently, says Mr. Feitler, the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Pennsylvania was disbanded about seven months ago. "Therefore, I urge the exhibitors to join forces with the American Exhibitors' Association, as it is only with a united organization that our business can be protected," Mr. Feitler declares.

Motorcycles Distribute Films During Strike

Delivery of film shipments by motorcycle was used by the Fox New York Exchange during the recent railroad strike. The messengers carried the films to New Jersey cities.

Americanization Work Is Making Rapid Strides

Harry M. Crandall, chairman of the Exhibitors' Branch of the Americanization Committee of the Motion Picture Industry, reports that exhibitors all over the country are continuing to show fullest cooperation in the matter of using trailers and slides bearing the slogans, written by Franklin K. Lane, former Secretary of the Interior. The producers are reported to be hard at work on pictures designed for service in the Americanization movement. D. W. Griffith is engaged in making a picture for this purpose and Famous Players is turning out a new production for the patriotic drive. Goldwyn announces that it will have ready within a few weeks a picture, the scenario for which has been written by Rupert Hughes.

"There is no commercial side to this movement," says Mr. Crandall. "The producing companies are making the films without profit, and they are being distributed without profit and are being sold to the exhibitor at the lowest possible rate."

Exhibitors' League Discusses Proposed Bills

A meeting of the executive committee of the New York State Moving Picture Exhibitors' League was held in Albany on April 20th. The meeting was given over largely to a discussion of motion picture bills that had been introduced in the state legislature this year and which are still hanging fire. A tentative report was also made in connection with the recent state convention at Utica. Announcement was also made to the effect that New York State would be represented by forty-five delegates at the National Convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, during the second week in June. This is one from each congressional district.

wanted him to install them for the workers. Mary Pickford pictures have been objected to by some people on the ground that poor children are made envious by looking at pictures of rich homes and wealthy people."

Representative Frank B. Phinney of Hyde Park opposed the bill and said that he dissented from the report of the majority of the Committee on Mercantile Affairs on the ground that, if children need protection from motion-picture films, they should be kept out of the theatres. Representative Walter Haynes of Scituate, a proprietor of three moving-picture houses, felt that objectionable films would be eliminated by local managers, if this were asked by those interested. He thought the women's organizations should center their activity in this work and should not attempt to pass state-wide legislation on this subject.

Pauline Frederick a Robertson-Cole Star Under New Contract

Emotional Star is Signed to Appear in a Series of Many Big Features

ROBERTSON-COLE definitely announces that it has entered into a contract to extend over a period of several years with Pauline Fredericks. The emotional screen star will appear in a series of super-productions, beginning at the termination of her present contract.

Miss Frederick is considered one of the biggest favorites with the motion picture public, and her pictures are exhibited in the largest first run theatres throughout the country as fast as they are released. In productions with vigorous stories of modern American life, always with strong love interest, and not infrequently tinged with a mystery motive, Miss Frederick is scoring month after month.

Never artificially advanced by exaggerated advertising campaigns, her success is said to be based on her own good work, and has been growing better, and of wider, and of more compelling nature with each Broadway and national success. Miss Fredericks combines that rare trinity; great emotional acting ability, charm of person, and a deep sincerity, with a happiness and fervor which have made her a world star, eagerly sought after in every community.

Robertson-Cole signed Miss Frederick as part of its progressive plans to obtain the productions of those stars which will win most continually and most certainly for the exhibitor. It feels that Miss Frederick fits these qualifications as nearly as any of the many stars and attractions which it has placed under contract during the last few months.

Miss Frederick was born in the City of Boston, Mass., and was educated in the private schools of that city. She early showed an inclination to go on the stage and secured her first engagement with Rogers Brothers, the famous musical comedy team, while still in her teens. She remained in musical comedy for a number of years. More of her appearances were in "The Princess of Kensington," "It Happened in Nordland," "The Little Gray Lady," "The Girl in White" and in several other musical successes which played on Broadway and toured the country.

Soon Miss Fredericks discovered that she had ability in another branch of theatricals and obtained an engagement in a dramatic piece. Here her powers were readily apparent and from this time until she went upon the screen she remained in dramatic acting.

With William Gillette she was leading woman in "Sampson." Later she had the most prominent feminine role in the famous Biblical drama, "Joseph and His Brethren." This play had a long

Pauline Frederick, who has signed a long term contract to appear in pictures released by Robertson-Cole

New York run and was seen in all the larger cities of the country, establishing Miss Frederick as one of the best actresses of her class in the world. It so firmly fixed her in the dramatic world that important producers began to bid for her services on the screen. Miss Frederick's dramatic abilities were even better adopted to the screen than to the speaking stage, and from the first her success was complete.

With several of the leading companies in the field, Miss Frederick starred in successes which won her an instant and consistent following. Within the last three or four years she has been recognized generally as one of the most regular box office winners in the motion picture world. The inducements which were held out to her by Robertson-Cole in the signing of the contract prove conclusively the high esteem of the company for her ability.

When Miss Frederick starts making her productions for Robertson-Cole, unusual effort and care will be taken with each. At least three months, and in some instances more, will be taken to complete each of the pictures. The maximum number which will be produced in any one year will be four.

In picking new names Robertson-Cole announces that it is always influenced by the continued drawing power of a star over a long period rather than by any artificial force which is brought to bear. In short, Robertson-Cole wanted in the case of Miss Frederick a star who positively does draw whenever her name appears in electric lights, rather than a name to boast about.

On the heels of this important star attraction soon may come word of the signing of another luminary in motion picture skies. Again it is proposed to obtain a star of drawing power and financial security, one who will give the exhibitor a certain profit, and who will win consistently in pictures.

Baltimoreans Will Vote on Sunday Question

Declaring that he felt the people of Baltimore had a right to express themselves in regard to whether moving pictures would be shown in that city on Sundays, Governor Albert C. Ritchie, signed the Iverson Bill, recently passed by the Maryland Legislature and by the terms of which the matter will be submitted to a referendum by Baltimoreans. Great pressure was brought to bear upon Mr. Ritchie by the reformers to persuade him to veto the measure.

The executive pointed out that his signature did not indicate that he favored the measure, but that it did show him in favor of allowing the people to express their own wishes. The question of whether the showing of moving pictures in Baltimore City on Sunday should be permitted will be placed on the ballots in the next general election which will be held in November.

German Monopoly Would Act as Boomerang

Any effort on the part of Germany to nationalize theatres as a barrier to motion pictures made outside her boundaries, as reported under contemplation by cables from abroad, would act only to a further isolation of Germany itself, according to David P. Howells, international film distributor.

The movement came as a complete surprise, stated Mr. Howells, and if it is adopted will only serve to isolate Germany the more.

Famous Players-Lasky Declares Dividend

The Board of Directors of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation at a meeting recently in the company's home office. voted the regular quarterly dividend of $2 on the corporation's preferred stock. The dividend is payable May 1 to stockholders of record April 19.

Isaac Wolper Will Produce His Own

Benjamin Prager Promoted as Mayflower President Resigns Post

ISAAC WOLPER has announced his resignation as president of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, in order that he might immediately start production under his own name. He will be succeeded by Benjamin A. Prager, who until now has acted as treasurer.

Mr. Wolper stated that he is retiring from the active management of the Mayflower organization because of a disagreement in policy. Although he will no longer take part in directing the company's affairs, Mr. Wolper announced that he will keep his stock interest and will lend the concern every possible co-operation calculated to promote its success.

"I have been contemplating for some time producing under my own name," said Mr. Wolper, "as I believe there is a bigger future for me by operating in this manner. At present I am hunting for a location for offices and as soon as I can find space and establish my headquarters I will make a definite statement as to policy and plans.

"Mr. Prager, who is taking my place as president of Mayflower, has been with the company ever since its organization and is familiar with every detail of the business. As a consequence, he is fitted to carry on the work in a most capable manner."

It was the work of Mr. Wolper that resulted in the organization of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation in 1918 and through him the arrangement was made with George Loane Tucker which was responsible for producing "The Miracle Man," one of the most sensational motion pictures ever made.

Mr. Prager's first announcement after assuming the presidency of the company was that John W. McKay, former general manager of distribution, has been promoted to the position of general manager of Mayflower. Mr. McKay has also been with the company ever since it started and this step upward is in reward for untiring service, President Prager stated.

Mr. McKay said that work would be pushed as rapidly as possible on all Mayflower productions that are now in the making and that pictures already finished would be released as rapidly as marketing conditions warranted.

"At present," said Mr. McKay, "deals are pending for the manner in which these pictures are to be released but as yet no transaction has been closed. We have a number of very big productions for 1920, and want to be sure that we choose the best possible means of getting these features before the public, thus insuring the maximum of success for each picture."

Australian Exhibitor Growing Prosperous

For First Time in Six Years He Need Not Worry, Says Alec Lorimore

AFTER six years of hesitation and uncertainty brought about by the war, transportation difficulties and influenza, the Australasian exhibitor today is enjoying some of the prosperity that has been more or less common in the American film industry in recent years, according to Alec Lorimore, managing director of Feature Films, Ltd., of Sydney, who has just arrived in New York for a series of conferences with E. E. Shauer, in charge of the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. This is Mr. Lorimore's first visit to America in more than three years.

"The film industry in Australia and New Zealand has prospered despite many obstacles," said Mr. Lorimore in discussing film affairs in that far-off continent shortly after his arrival. "The war interfered seriously with business of all kinds, and retarded the growth and expansion of the film business. Then, with peace, came a serious influenza epidemic which raged for many weeks and played havoc with the film business. War-time interference with shipping has been another serious stumbling block to the Australasian exhibitor, but in recent weeks even this state of affairs has shown considerable improvement.

"Business conditions insofar as the exhibitor is concerned have been so good in recent weeks that many theatre owners have made more money than they did during the entire period of the war. This state of prosperity, of course, is putting new hope and courage into what has been a pioneer industry, with the result that the future looks exceedingly bright for the industry.

"One result of this prosperity has been the inauguration of a theatre-building boom which will do much to relieve the industry of the handicap of the primitive houses to which the greater part of the population has been forced to go for its amusement. When I left Sydney several weeks ago I was told that thirty new houses of the larger and better class were under construction or were projected for early building. New and better theatres represent the greatest need of the industry today, aside from an improvement in transportation facilities.

"The Australian public is constantly demanding better entertainment, and is very keen for the highest grade motion pictures. Australasians pay more per capita for their amusement than the people of any other nation, so the future of the motion picture industry is rosy indeed. One firm in Victoria State has obtained five long-term Paramount Artcraft contracts in the last few months, the capitalist member of the firm providing the funds for the erection of five houses. Bankers are most willing to advance the money for the erection of new theatres where the exhibitor or would-be exhibitor has a contract for the exhibition of good pictures for a term of two or three years.

"The lack of proper railroad facilities elaborate arrangements for the switching of programs. Motorcyclists are employed by Feature Films, Ltd., to serve the theatres in the outlying districts of Sydney. As quickly as one theatre finishes a reel it is given to a motorcyclist who speeds away several miles to another theatre, and this process is continued until both theatres have completed their programs. Unless this plan is followed out it would require many weeks for one film to make its round of the theatres.

"Another obstacle which has caused much worry to distributors is the lack of uniform rules for the handling of film in the various States. In one State, for instance, all film must be shipped on wooden reels. In another State the film is shipped in cardboard boxes without reels and in a third the regulation reel as used in America is required. This causes much confusion, and the situation is often made worse by careless and indifferent exhibitors who are lax in returning film shipments in the proper manner.

"In some districts film is still shown under the most primitive conditions. This is not true of the industry as a whole, however, for there are many progressive men in the exhibition business and they are co-operating with us in improving conditions. The remarkable strides made in the last few years under the war handicap bid fair to be eclipsed by the progress made in the coming months, and before many years the film business in Australasia will be fully as developed and progressive as in any country on the globe, despite the immense distance which separates this market from the American studios."

All Set for First National Convention in Chicago

Entire Personnel is Expected to Discuss all the Important Measures

INDEPENDENT exhibitors in every territory, including all members of First National Exhibitors' Circuit, all branch managers, salesmen and exploitation men, the entire official staff at the Home Office in New York, editors and business representatives of all nationally circulated trade journals, and of all strictly territorial trade papers, together with producers and stars holding releasing contracts with the Circuit, busied themselves this week in final preparations for attending the annual convention of the entire First National personnel which begins at the Hotel Congress, Chicago, on Monday, April 26th.

Matters of extreme moment to the entire industry, new methods which affect independent exhibitors, the present forms of film distribution, recently negotiated contracts between First National and stars and producers, and the official launching of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., with the full force of its radical and sweeping sub-franchising policy, will occupy the featured positions in the program of activities for the week.

Two special cars will leave New York on Sunday, attached to the Broadway Limited on the Pennsylvania Railroad, occupied by members, branch managers, salesmen, exploitation men, the editors of the trade journals, Home Office officials, stars and producers. Special First National cars will convey exhibitor members and branch office staffs from Atlanta, Washington, D. C., San Francisco, Los Angeles, Seattle, and Dallas, with stops at intermediate centers, including Louisville, Cincinnati, Denver, Salt Lake, Oklahoma City, Kansas City and St. Louis.

Probably the most important event of the week's sessions will be the assemblies of exhibitor members, exchange managers and salesmen wherein will be announced the complete details of the sub-franchising plan sponsored by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., and which it has employed a statistical department occupying an entire floor for the last four months. Inauguration of the rental system which is fixed by the sub-franchising agreements, at a definite percentage of the exhibition value of each attraction for every theatre that is granted a franchise, brings one of the most radical and sweeping changes in years to the standard methods governing film distribution.

Important speeches will be made by Joseph M. Schenck, president of both the Norma Talmadge Film Company and the Constance Talmadge Film Company, and by Whitman Bennett, formerly production manager for the Famous Players-Lasky Company and now an independent producer. Of equal importance, will be the presence at the convention of Miss Norma Talmadge, who, for the first time, will appear publicly at a gathering of exhibitors to meet each of them personally.

At the same time as the First National Convention, independent theatre owners will meet at the Hotel Congress.

This new organization was created as a defense body against invasion of producer-exhibitors into the theatre field, and is the expressed wish of several hundred exhibitors who have sent written and telegraphic responses to the call of Willard Patterson, manager of Sig Samuel's Criterion theatre of Atlanta, Ga., and president of the Southeastern Theatre Managers' Association.

Evolution of the mass meeting into an enduring Exhibitors' Defense League will, according to Mr. Patterson, be the logical result of a fast crystallizing determination by independent theatre owners, and which, he declares, far exceeds his original belief of the national exhibitor realization of the danger of a producer-exhibitor invasion, to give country-wide unity and strength to a formal demand for a show down, and to back up that demand with a permanent centralization of independent exhibitor opinion in direct opposition to it.

Mr. Patterson announces that he has prepared a tentative schedule of activity for the mass meeting, which, after the disposal of the usual parliamentary proceedings necessary to the organization of the exhibitors present into a body will include the adoption of a constitution and by-laws setting forth the purposes and limitations of the League's intentions, and formal resolutions to be copied and sent to every motion picture producer in the country.

Among those who will attend the First National convention are: Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Williams, New York; H. O. Schwalbe, New York City; Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Hammons, New York; E. Mandelbaum, Cleveland; R. H. Haines, Cincinnati; W. E. Lusk, Cleveland; Mr. and Mrs. Frank Ferrandini, Richmond; L. L. Hall, Salt Lake City; Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Clark, New York; Mr. and Mrs. George R. Grant, New York; Mr. and Mrs. Tom Moore, Washington, D. C.; W. E. Richardson, Washington, D. C.; B. C. Cunningham, Washington, D. C.; S. F. & A. L. Jacobs, New York; E. B. Johnson, New York; David P. Howells, New York; C. L. Yearsley, New York; Mr. and Mrs. Carl Senning, Richmond, Va.; J. R. Grainger, New York; Mr. and Mrs. Hudson, New York; J. C. Raglund, New York; J. L. Hunter, New York; James B. Clark, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Joseph S. Skirboll, Pittsburgh; Jules E. Mastbaum, Phil.; M. L. Finkelstein, Minneapolis; J. F. Cubberley, Minneapolis; H. Hillweg, Minneapolis; Fred Dahnken, San Francisco; J. D. Von Herberg, Seattle, Washington; P. Mooney, New York; Colonel Fred Levy, Louisville, Ky.; W. P. Dewees, Vancouver, B. C.; R. L. Giffen, New York; Whitman Bennett, New York; Joseph Klein, New York; P. H. Smith, Buffalo, N. Y.; F. V. Fisher, Seattle, Washington; S. Y. Edwards, San Francisco; Mrs. James S. Johnson, New York; Ernest Shipman, New York; George Blaisdell, New York; Leslie Mason, New York; L. W. Boynton, New York; Mr. and Mrs. Beacham, Atlanta, Ga.; W. A. Sanges, Atlanta, Ga.; Robert Welsh, New York; Fred Beecroft, New York; J. H. Dannenburg, New York; Mr. and Mrs. Joseph M. Schenck, New York; E. E. Richards, Kansas City; N. J. Flynn, Kansas City; Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Fabian, New York; A. M. Fabian, New York; Thomas B. Spry; Boston, Mass.; Nathan H. Gordon, Boston, Mass.; S. S. Schwartz, Des Moines, Ia.; E. C. Rhoden, Des Moines, Ia.; C. E. Holah, Omaha, Neb.; L. J. McCarty, Omaha, Neb.; Lee L. Goldberg, Louisville, Ky.; Robert Lieber, Indianapolis, Ind.; Floyd Brown, Indianapolis, Ind.; J. H. Kunsky, Detroit, Mich.; G. W. Trendle, Detroit, Mich.; Harry Scott, Detroit, Mich.; Messrs. Heffernan and Allan, Detroit, Mich.; Moe Mark, New York; A. H. Blank, Des Moines, Ia.; Sol Shernow, New York; Miss Constance Talmadge, New York.

National Convention of Exhibitors in June

THE Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, of which Sydney S. Cohen is temporary chairman, has issued a call to every exhibitor in the United States for a national convention of exhibitors to be held in Cleveland in June. The object of the meeting, it is announced, is to take up the various problems confronting the picture-theatre owners at the present time and to secure concerted action in meeting and solving these difficulties. The call for a national convention is given in the following paragraphs of the association's communication:

"After months of careful preparatory work, this temporary committee, at the request of all state organizations, is issuing a call for a National Convention in the City of Cleveland sometime about the second week of June. Exact dates will be announced later in the trade press.

"We are availing ourselves of this opportunity of presenting for your consideration the very serious problems and abuses existing within and without our industry that need the concerted action of all 100% exhibitors throughout the United States."

British Company to Invade U. S. Market

Alliance Film Corporation Capitalized at $5,000,000 to Compete in America

WHILE American motion picture producers are making plans to dominate the British and other foreign markets with American films, a $5,000,000 British company has been organized with the avowed purpose of invading the American market with English made motion pictures.

Mr. Walter Crotch, vice-president of the newly formed British Film organization, known as the Alliance Film Corporation of England, left New York Wednesday, April 14th, for Los Angeles, for a visit to the western film center. He is in America studying American methods of motion picture production and distribution, and for the frank purpose of discovering the best way to introduce English films to the American market. Mr. Crotch is a banker, and a literary man, who has gone into motion pictures, as he says, "because I want to see much better literature on the screen."

The Alliance Film Corporation of England has under way the construction of a film city, much like Universal City in California, at Narrow Weald Park, just outside of London. Work has been temporarily discontinued on these studios and laboratories because of labor conditions, and the company has started producing activities at the old London Film Company's studios at St. Margaret's-on-the-Thames. Gerald du Maurier, A. N. Mathew and Matheson Lang, prominent English actors, have been secured to appear in pictures. Mr. Lang is now at work in "Carnival," which it is said, as a play, has taken London by storm.

"We must acknowledge the superiority of American production methods and are willing and anxious to learn them," says Mr. Crotch. "We are out to perfect our organization in such a way that our English stories in films shall be produced under the supervision of American directors, and our actors and actresses trained to do the thing, in the American way. We believe that Great Britain can supply stories and themes to the American people which will come to them with a fascinating freshness, but we are fully alive to the fact that such stories have got to be presented in the best possible way and must follow to a large extent American ideas and customs. The film can provide a real link between our two nations, between which there is already intercourse and sympathy. It will dissipate ignorance of each other's habits and thoughts and feelings; it will break down barriers and reunite us with a common controlling bond of sympathy and mutual interest.

"I confess that I have not yet come to a final decision as to how our products will be most effectively distributed so that our main object may be attained. For several weeks I have been gathering facts on trade conditions and American methods of exploitation, advertising and distribution in New York—later I hope to be able to say authoritatively whether we shall though more effectively pursue our purpose through one of your large distributing organizations, or by the sale of territorial rights or even by erecting a distributing organization of our own. But in any case, we are determined that our products shall be marketed here." Mr. Crotch has already purchased in America much lighting and other studio equipment for the English studio in which the Alliance corporation is at work.

In the directorate of this company, in addition to Mr. Crotch, are such well known Englishmen as Sir Walter De Frece, M. P., prominent in affairs of the English theatre; Charles F. Highs, M. P., a leading advertising and publicity man; A. Baldwin Raper, M. P., a prominent merchant; Capt. John Naro, financier, and Walter Hutchinson, son of Sir Geo. Hutchinson, the publisher.

Long Runs for High-Class Small Theatres

BY BENJAMIN B. HAMPTON

"THE high-class small theatre and the policy of long runs for good pictures are factors that will materially influence the future of motion picture production. That is simply an inevitable step in advance of conditions now. Distinctive pictures will play small houses seating from five hundred to eight hundred, and have runs of a month or longer. Large houses will be more and more dependent upon a mixed program of feature, comedy and educational films, grand opera and concert.

"It will come down to a basis of selection. Tastes differ so greatly that literature, art, drama and music have half-a-dozen different schools, and each school is supported by its devotees. There is every reason why this should become the case with motion pictures. To use effective slang, a certain down-town house with a limited seating capacity will cater to a 'highbrow' audience, another to an audience that likes thrills for the major part of its film menu; another, perhaps, will be running a sex play, and another a human play, a 'glad story,' a children's play.

"Pictures will be advertised for what they are, and word of mouth advertising will bring in a comfortable capacity for a small house, depending upon the appeal of the subject, for weeks. The patrons will be pleased because for the most part they know what they are to be given; the type of picture they see is their choice. Then audiences will have a wider range of selection than is possible under present exhibiting conditions. Pictures are exploited now with a view to attracting every class of patron; persons who attend grand opera and those who prefer burlesque have to take pot luck together on their evening's film entertainment. The policy of our best showmen in giving quite a program tends to allay dissatisfaction, for with these houses the picture becomes of less importance, and the feeling with the audiences is that their money has not been wasted, however little the picture may appeal to them. This condition reacts to the disadvantage of the smaller showmen. Also this condition permits mediocre pictures to 'get by,' and in many cases may injure the reputation of a film that would otherwise be very successful, by showing it to an audience who for the most part do not care for that type of picture.

"Pictures suffer in popularity today when the cynic young clubman, forced to sit through a 'glad-good-glad' picture, reports it 'rotten' to his friends, and when the little school girl who would have delighted in the 'glad' stuff reports to her friends that a stormy emotional drama she has just seen 'isn't much good.' I have two pictures in mind when I say this; two very popular photoplays recently produced, which could have played profitably many, many weeks on end at a small downtown house on the long run system. There is no reason why Cecil De Mille's 'Why Change Your Wife?' should not run at a small Broadway theatre in Los Angeles as long as the stage success 'Civilian Clothes.'

"Of course a large theatre could not do this profitably; the problem of the large theatre owner will be to please the most number of patrons, and mollify those he does not please by the variety and attractiveness of his program. But the small theatre will, in the future, exhibit the best photoplays for long runs to a selective audience; the standard of production will be raised, and artistic successes like 'Broken Blossoms' will become financial successes as well."

W. W. Hodkinson Discusses "Growing Unrest" in Film Industry

Gives Views on Causes and Remedies for "Functional Disturbances"

"UNREST is always caused by dissatisfaction with things as they are, and that is the reason for the growing unrest in our industry." With this general observation, Mr. W. W. Hodkinson prefaced a rather trenchant criticism of what he called the "basic unsoundness of conditions prevailing today in every province of screendom." His views are well worth reproducing for, after showing what he conceives to be the downward and destructive tendencies of today, he outlines plans of obvious constructive value.

In talking to the editor of the Motion Picture News, Mr. Hodkinson said:

"The present trend toward a constant increase in film rentals without reason is due to certain conditions in the industry which can no longer be ignored. In fact, it will be well, for the good of the industry, to shed all possible light on these conditions.

"Doctors tell us that any functional disturbances in our bodies indicate their presence by unmistakable symptoms. The motion picture industry today is suffering from the most serious kind of functional disturbances of which the increase of film rentals and higher prices of admission are but symptoms.

"It seems to me that the whole picture business has gone mad on the theory that in some way it is possible to progress and prosper on lines other than sound economic laws and past business experience. Nobody seems to realize that we cannot forever go on with the process of milking and that we must put some values into the industry, if we want to get returns. All of us should give more thought to creating values and putting something into the business.

"Instead of addressing ourselves to a study of these disturbances we have, with the wrong-headedness so characteristic of management in this industry, consoled ourselves by following the line of least resistance. In other words, we have been trying to remove the symptoms without going to the trouble of looking at the causes of the symptoms. First of all, we must recognize the fact that the worm is about to turn, the worm in this case being none other than the dear, patient public. The public is just about ready to lose its patience and to turn against the flood of cheap and mediocre productions with which the screen is deluged from day to day, from week to week and from month to month. We are at the present still 'getting by' because of the universal inflation and disarray of values, which characterize business conditions today. As soon as this universal inflation comes to an end, we must stop the reckless spending and abandon the idea that we can keep on 'passing the buck' to the public forever. There must be a thorough house-cleaning, a complete readjustment on the basis of sound, economic laws. The future belongs to the man capable of weighing the equities and possibilities in the situation between producers and distributors, on one hand, and the motion picture theatre owner on the other hand. This man will lead the procession, and he need never be so far ahead of the procession that his machinery cannot follow him. This machinery must be capable of creating and developing units of production, units which are independent and competitive.

"The line of advancement in the industry and a return to business sanity must run parallel with such a plan. I am sure that eventually all efforts aiming at beneficial and lasting results must move through this channel.

"A method must be worked out which will give all the parties in interest their just and fair share. The whole problem is really like an example in algebra, the unknown quantity being the exact percentage of profits due to all elements involved. When I use the word percentage I do not, of course, speak of any of the percentage-booking schemes which are now being tried and most of which are based either on guesswork, on gambling or on greed and selfishness.

"Immense organizations have been built up whose continued existence depends on the continuance of the present-day abuses in the industry, huge salaries to stars, enormous sums for stories, quite irrespective of their intrinsic value. The whole course is one of mistaken philosophy. It has not been a natural growth. To get away from these errors it is only necessary to utilize common sense. The organization which will turn away from these impossible practices and which will give superior service, with improved quality, is bound to win the day. This is no idle dream.

"It will be remembered that I was the first to set my face against the nickel-odeon. I felt at that time that the future of the motion picture, both as an art and as an industry, could not be worked out with any satisfaction to either producer or public on the basis of the nickel. Now the pendulum has swung back and I stand for the public in its natural and justifiable insistence on popular prices of admission.

"Raising the prices of admission narrows the field of the motion-picture and is absolutely destructive. The very nature of the business demands a popular price. It is the possibility of popular prices combined with the possibility of a good picture which has made the motion picture industry an important civic factor and withal a great commercial institution.

"Ten years ago the equities were with the producer and exhibitor; today the equities are with the public.

"As I have in the past created the machinery to raise the level of the motion-picture and to divorce it from the nickel so I propose to use machinery equally effective for carrying out reforms which the industry needs so badly today. The man who will continue on the old lines will be swept out of existence just as the producers and exhibitors, who, ten years ago, bitterly resented and resisted the raise of the price of admissions are today nothing but memories.

"Again the industry has run into a perilous rut. We need new brains, new blood. There is no field of human endeavor promising so much in the way of rewards to intelligence and initiative as the motion-picture field. In the further development of the machinery which I have created to cut in under the present unsound methods and policies I propose to enlist plenty of new brains and new blood. The public will welcome a return to sanity."

Stern Succeeds Powers as Universal Treasurer

ABE STERN, secretary and treasurer of the L-KO Company, producers of Rainbow, Century and other comedies, has been appointed treasurer of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, to succeed P. A. Powers, who recently sold out his Universal holdings and resigned.

Although Mr. Stern has never held an official position with Universal, he has been closely allied with the big film company ever since its organization. Practically all of the L-KO output is released through Universal. Mr. Stern already has assumed his duties as treasurer of the larger company. He will continue to hold his previous position with the L-KO Company, however.

Lyons to Manage Simplex Projection Room

John F. Lyons, who has been associated with Joseph R. Miles for the past nine years in his various organizations, and in charge of the Miles projecting rooms in New York City, since their establishment seven years ago, resigned last week to assume the management of the Simplex Studios three projection rooms in the Candler Building, New York, on May 1st.

Illinois Governor Wants Sunday Movies

Days of Blue Laws Past and Sabbath Openings Should Be Legalized, Says Executive

THE days of the blue laws are gone forever and the Sunday movie has become a necessity in the big industrial centers under our present high tension mode of living in the opinion of James P. Goodrich, governor of Indiana and teacher of a Sunday school class attended by more than 200 Indianapolis business men.

The governor, who has been more or less friendly toward efforts of Indiana exhibitors to get legislation legalizing Sunday shows during the past three years of his administration, expressed his approval of seven day programs in a speech before the annual convention of the Indiana Board of Photoplay Indorsers at the Claypool hotel in Indianapolis, April 7th, and in an interview with a representative of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS in Indianapolis on April 8th.

Before the board of indorsers, which is an unofficial organization working to secure the exhibition of better films before Indiana audiences the governor said, in part: "The days of the blue laws are gone forever. They have no place in our civilization. Under the conditions of life today people are put to such a constant strain that they must have such recreation as motion pictures, baseball and outdoor sports to help them keep their mental balance.

"I admit that I have on two or three occasions gone to see a motion picture show on Sunday afternoon or evening. I see no harm in seeing a good picture on Sunday, for it may teach better ideals and a better Americanism to thousands of persons who would not get the same because they do not go to church.

"I am glad that the women of Indiana are taking such an interest in better motion pictures. Your co-operation with the motion picture manager is going to result in great good. The managers must feel their responsibility. Photoplays are perhaps greater instruments for the conveyance of information than the press or pulpit in many respects. I could name two motion picture theatres in Indianapolis that have greater audiences on Sunday than all the churches of the city combined. The men who produce and present motion pictures have a great trust imposed upon them. They must feel the responsibility of teaching better ideals and true Americanism—they must feel their responsibility to these good women who stand for the best in our civilization today.

"An an educational force the movies cannot be underestimated, because of their power to reach the people. I know several ministers who go to them every week. The church in the old days used to use the stage through the medium of the problem plays. I see no reason why in the present day they should not use the photoplay."

Afterward the governor confided to the MOTION PICTURE NEWS correspondent that he always has stood ready to sign a bill legalizing Sunday shows under reasonable restrictions. He said that these restrictions should provide that theatres be kept closed Sunday morning and that only films of the most impeccable moral standard be exhibited. The theatre owners and managers have been ready to guarantee this at all times, he said.

"I cannot say, however, that I am in favor of Sunday shows in every community," continued the governor, "I think it ought to be made a matter for home rule determination. Let every city decide the question for itself. Take my home town, for instance. (The governor's home town is Winchester, Ind.) We tried them out there several years ago and the people would not patronize them. We didn't need them. But here in Indianapolis, there is no question that they are needed. The masses in the great, seething industrial centers have got to have some good, clean sort of recreation.

"I teach a Sunday school class of 200 good business men nearly every Sunday morning and I'll venture to say that a lot of them go to the movies Sunday afternoon or evening."

Robertson-Cole May Own a Los Angeles House

THAT Los Angeles will probably be the first city to feel the effect of the recently declared intention of Robertson-Cole Corporation to purchase, or build theatres in Key Cities where they did not have first run representation, became known in Los Angeles this week when A. S. Kirkpatrick, general manager for Robertson-Cole, arrived in the city and spent several days here.

Mr. Kirkpatrick was reticent regarding the purpose of his visit to Los Angeles. The only statement he cared to make was that he intended going over production with the several units making films on the West Coast for the distributing organization. However, it was learned that Mr. Kirkpatrick during his stay in Los Angeles gave considerable of his time to investigate the local theatre situation and discussing prospective sites for new houses.

Advance Deposit Bill Reaches Governor

ALBANY, April 21.—The Cotillo bill, which amends the general business law in relation to money deposited or advanced upon a contract for the use or rental of personal property and in which the entire motion picture industry is interested, was reported out of committee today and was passed in the Assembly without debate and without opposition, the Senate concurring to the bill in its amended form, and it now goes to the Governor for his signature. The bill has been strenuously fought by the manufacturers and the speedy passage of the measure today came as a crushing defeat to the efforts of Royal K. Fuller, who has been in Albany for several days past lobbying in the interests of the manufacturers, but whose efforts came to naught. It is understood that Mr. Fuller received a rebuff from Speaker Sweet and later on the bill coming out of the rules committee passed the Assembly with the approval of the Speaker.

The bill now in the hands of the Governor reads as follows:

"Whenever money shall be deposited or advanced on a contract for the use or rental of personal property, as security for the performance of a contract or to be applied to payments upon such contract when due, such money, with interest accruing thereon, if any, until repaid or so applied, shall continue to be the money of the person making such deposit or advance and shall be a trust fund in the possession of the person with whom such deposit or advance shall be made and shall be deposited in a bank or trust company and shall not be mingled with other funds or become an asset of such trustee."

If the measure is signed by the Governor it will take effect immediately.

The New York State Motion Picture Exhibitors' League also scored another signal victory here today when the Senate passed the Kelley bill, which permits the parent to designate the adult who as such will be permitted to take children under the age of 16 and after school hours to the motion picture theatres in this State.

"The Crimson Gardenia" was given novel exploitation at the New Unique theatre, Minneapolis. Miss Mildred Hamilton attired, as will be noted in the above illustration, attracted a great deal of attention for herself and the picture and in consequence everyone in Minneapolis knew that the Beach feature was playing at the New Unique

The Imperial of Frisco Strong for Window Display

When the Imperial of San Francisco played De Mille's "Why Change Your Wife?" a number of window display tie-ups were accomplished that aided greatly in the successful engagement the feature enjoyed.

An attractive window was secured on the "gallant promenade," Powell Street, where gather the "elite" who have naught else to do but to parade and "vamp." The window display again advertised "Why Change Your Wife?"

A third window, the most artistic of all, was that installed by the Gillette Safety Razor people in the Gillette building on Market Street.

Demonstrating the Effectiveness of Lobby Displays

(Right)
The Palace theatre of Hamilton, Ohio, unlike many of the houses in the smaller cities doesn't try to economize on electric current by cutting down on its lobby lights. This will illustrate how the Palace advertised its Easter week show consisting of "His Royal Slyness" and "Six Feet Four." The street about the Palace is always a "bright" spot in Hamilton during the time the show is going on

(Below)
The attention that many managers give serials is proof positive that the continued subject is still worth exploitation attention. Below is shown the way Ben Harding, manager of the Liberty theatre, Council Bluffs, Iowa, decorated his lobby for his first showing of "Daredevil Jack." Mr. Harding is authority for the statement that all preceding box office records for the opening day of a serial picture were broken and thinks his exploitation had a great deal to do with it.

Excellent Lobby Display For "The Idol Dancer"

Detroit Theatre Neglects No Opportunities Presented by "Idol Dancer"

EXPLOITATION which found its best expression in the fact that it was instrumental in making box-office history for the Madison theatre of Detroit is the subject of this story. The picture which the Madison publicity staff used as medium for the expenditure of their publicity efforts was "The Idol Dancer."

Although the motion picture appetites of all Detroiters were whetted to a high pitch two weeks ahead of the engagement by the appearance of punchy, eye-catching teaser ads in all of the Detroit newspapers, telling of a South Sea Island native who would shimmy her way right into their hearts, and by the appearance on billboards, street cars and, in fact, every possible location for poster paper, that something far and away out of the ordinary was in store for them, the sight that met their gaze in the front, the lobby and the interior of the Madison theatre formed an ad talk in itself that made dinner table conversation in every home and cafe in Detroit during the engagement.

The usually conservative front of the Madison theatre, over night, took on the appearance of a typical domicile in the South Sea Isles.

The roof and the sides of the front were thatched with straw of a greenish brown color and the seaweed that hung down from the box office, also improvised into a tropical hut, brushed each patron as the tickets were purchased.

Idols made from beaver board and painted in weird designs and colors, and topped by dangerous looking shields, were placed lengthwise through the center of the lobby. On the side walls were some scenic efforts in keeping with the occasion. Large, beautiful palms were also used plenteously and with excellent effect.

On the stage, a straw hut at either side, banked by palms and with a beautiful scenic streamer below the picture curtain made a striking effect for the special prologue that was provided.

A "real live" Samoan dancer, attired in perfect replica of Clarine Seymour, the heroine of the story, performed a terpsichorean act at each performance, to the accompaniment of a quartette of Hawaiian exponents of the ukelele and guitar. The quartette also furnished blending music at various timely intervals during the showing of the picture. Coupled with an excellent musical score provided by the large Madison orchestra, the symphonic accompaniment was of a nature that created much comment.

The men who are in a great measure responsible for the success of this engagement are Howard O. Pierce, director of publicity for the John H. Kunsky organization, and Thomas D. Moule, manager of the Madison theatre.

They went to work early, as soon as they heard that Mr. Griffith's second release for First National was to be a story of the South Sea Isles, with sensational dance scenes, and laid their plans carefully. Every move in a campaign that went into action three weeks ahead of play dates was studied and debated at every angle.

In addition to his publicity work for the Madison and Adams theatres, Mr. Pierce supervises and plans the erection of the mammoth stage and lobby settings in both of these large downtown theatres. He has displayed exceptional ability along these lines and the wide comment that is heard among Detroit theatregoers on the elaborateness of the decorative effects, are the culmination of his efforts. A special shop for painting drops and building special scenery is maintained and put at the service of Mr. Pierce by the Kunsky organization.

Travelogue Used as Introduction to "Paris Green"

As a sort of a prologue for "Paris Green" at the Rialto this week, a scenic of rather unusual merit, a part of the Kineto Review No. 2 under the title of "Scenes From Paris" is being projected preceding the screening of the feature.

Owing to the fact that the first sequences of the Ray feature purport to be laid in Paris the reel makes a very appropriate selection for a short subject with which to balance the program.

Those who will play "Paris Green" will do well to remember this reel.

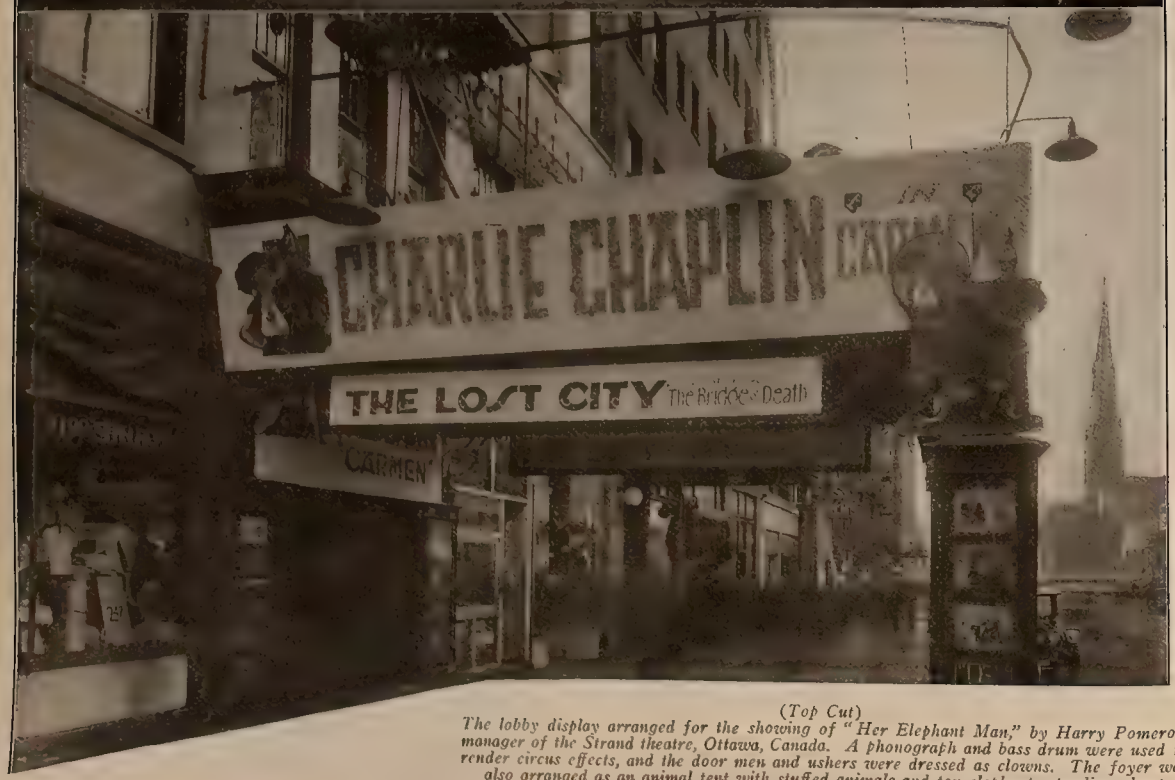
The picture itself aside from its value in the connection we have mentioned is worthy of being given some extra attention.

Attractive Stage Settings At Small Cost

Julius K. Johnson Demonstrates How Presentation Effects May Be Achieved

INEXPENSIVE stage settings can be made an attractive feature even in a small theatre by judicious use of stage lighting as has been demonstrated by Julius K. Johnson, manager of the New Garrick theatre at Minneapolis. Electrical devices for acquiring brilliant and beautiful effects are cheap and plentiful according to Mr. Johnson and should be a part of the equipment of every theatre no matter how small.

Mr. Johnson's latest effort was accomplished with two simple devices, a sketched piece of beaver board, a borrowed Alaskan Carryall and a set of ceiling bank lights, in addition to the regular foot light equipment of the theatre. It was used as a prelude to a showing of Marshall Neilan's "River's End" and was invariably the provoker of applause. The electrical effects ran for five minutes.



The setting was based upon the opening scenes of the production which take place in the far north. Mr. Johnson had a typical arctic scene containing three igloos in the foreground sketched in grays and blues upon beaver board. In front of this he placed the carryall, an effect which lent a good perspective to the scene. The New Garrick is provided with a felt curtain in front of the screen, but the same effect as that obtained by Mr. Johnson could be obtained by starting from darkness.

Mr. Johnson lighted deep blue lights and then had the curtains withdrawn disclosing the arctic scene. Gradually the lights became brighter until they had become semi-bright blue. Flashes from the Aurora Borealis were seen in the background gradually becoming more distinct, first white, then yellow, then flaming red. The flashes again became fainter and a faint flurry of snow began, the snow fell thicker and thicker, and then the Aurora became more lively, flashing up again to its highest brightness, and again dwindling away while the stage lighting gradually faded back to the deep blue, with the snow falling faster and heavier.

The borealis was obtained from a rippling machine with a double disc. The falling snow effect was used in back of the rippling machine and that was the whole picture, combined with the brightening and dimming of the foot lights and ceiling banks. The result was much more beautiful than the description sounds.

Two Exceptional Ideas For Decorating Your Lobby

Orphans Guest of Detroit Jeweler

SIX hundred inmates of the orphan asylums in and near Detroit attended a special showing of "Huckleberry Finn" at the Broadway-Strand theatre recently as the guest of Sol E. Sallan, the Detroit jeweler.

The Simons Sales Company, local distributors for the Willys-Overland products, donated ten new Overland Sedans; the Dodge Motor Car Company forwarded twenty new Dodge Sedans; the J. L. Hudson Department store furnished four trucks and the Crowley-Milner company were represented by four huge trucks for the purpose of safely transporting these orphans to the theatre and return.

And with huge streamers on each vehicle, reading, "We're Going To See 'Huck Finn' at the Broadway-Strand theatre" this fleet of cars came from all sections of the city into the busiest section. Throughout the trip the orphans sang songs of joy and made the afternoon a memorable event.

The thirty-eight vehicles arrived at their destination and lined up solidly for one square where they remained for over two hours despite traffic regulations forbidding their remaining this length of time.

In the theatre special comedies were shown and the orphans gave three cheers for their benefactors. After enjoying "Huck Finn" they marched out of the theatre and in the lobby each child was given a half pound box of "Huckleberry Finn" donated by a Detroit candy manufacturer who insisted that his name be kept secret.

Gusdanovic Pulls 'Em in With Good Advertising

"THE FORBIDDEN WOMAN" opened its Cleveland, Ohio, engagement Sunday, March 21st, at the Strand and Orpheum theatres. And now comes the story of how Manager Paul Gusdanovic planned and carried out an advertising campaign that was responsible for a great week's business for both houses.

One week before the picture opened, the local newspapers carried this insert:

If the sky is green—it is the Strand; red—it is the Orpheum; blue—it is the Knickerbocker; pink—it is the Metropolitan. Watch the sky the night of March 20th.

This was the stunt originated by Harry Reichenbach for the picture's New York opening.

That was all. Not a word about a theatre. Not a hint about a picture. Just enough to get folks in training for a rubberneck party. And fortunately, Saturday, March 20th, was a pretty day, without a cloud in the sky. But there was something much more valuable to Gusdanovic than a cloud in the sky that night. For that was the night that the Northern Lights were flashing around, and they afforded a most beautiful background of crimson red for the big navy searchlight that was spreading a sea of red light over a radius of fifteen miles all over the city, in all directions, from the roof of the Strand theatre.

With little expense, many thousands of people had their attention directed to the Strand and Orpheum theatres by this simple but far reaching stunt. There was another little stunt that Gusdanovic and his associates employed to catch the public interest that was cheap but very effective. On Monday night he had four men in automobiles scattering keys in all parts of the city. There were five thousand of 'em. Twenty-five hundred had tags saying, "This is the front door key to the Strand theatre!" The other twenty-five hundred had tags saying, "This is the key to the Orpheum theatre." Simultaneously, the newspapers carried this announcement:

LOST

Front Door Key to Strand and Orpheum Theatres. Reward if Returned

ORPHEUM THEATRE
Ninth, Near Euclid

STRAND THEATRE
Prospect at Ninth

The keys might have been stray cats by the way they came home. Three extra girls had to be installed at each house to take care of the finders of the keys, who came for their rewards. And they got 'em. Everyone who returned a key got a pass to see "The Forbidden Woman."

Rialto Magazine Contains Decided Novelty

AS a part of the Rialto theatre, New York, magazine this week a strip from the library of Lyman H. Howe under the title of "Sculptured Impressions of Musical Personages" is being given which registers as a decided novelty.

The strip consists of pictures of busts of a number of the noted composers with the clay being manipulated in various ways before the image is finally completed, and photographs of a page of the score of one of each composer's compositions. The orchestra at the Rialto plays the composition as the picture of the composer and the selection comes on the screen.

The strip is given a timely interest by using as subjects for busts the still living composers, George Cohan, Harry Lauder and John Phillip Sousa. The other pictures shown are of the noted composers of classical music, mostly deceased.

Ancient Car 'Frisco Advertising Medium

WALLY REID'S "Excuse My Dust" suggested the use of the "first Buick to reach San Francisco via the 'Horn' in the days of old and the days of gold."

Whether the car burned coal or wood or was equipped with a "bellows" or something exuding large clouds of dust the sign "Excuse My Dust" was rendered perfectly appropriate.

Youthful Dancers Aid "Pollyanna" Showing

As a special added attraction for the presentation of "Pollyanna," starring Mary Pickford, at the Russell theatre, the large dramatic house of Ottawa, the Canadian capital, during the week of April 5, an interesting and entertaining prologue was staged in which many youthful dancers participated.

The prologue was called "Pollyanna at the Court of Gladness" and the principal role was taken by a young lady who was garbed in a fashion similar to Mary Pickford's characterization in the feature. The sketch was presented in several scenes and was complete in itself, a pleasing little story being worked out in the number. The various dances were carried out under the direction of Prof. Sinclair, a local dancing master, and special orchestration was featured throughout the prologue and the feature as well. The work of the young artists proved to be of the finished variety and the stunt was very pleasing. A number of details were prepared by W. McLaughlin, the moving picture editor of the Ottawa Journal.

It was the first real attempt to stage an extensive prologue in connection with a moving picture in Ottawa and a large crowd greeted the first performance on Easter Monday. The show also did big business throughout the whole week.

Exhibitors Warned About All Oral Agreements

The following is an excerpt from a statement issued by the New York F. I. L. M. Club, and addressed to managers and proprietors of motion-picture theatres:

"On and after March 22nd, 1920, no claim will be entertained by the Credit Bureau or Grievance Committee of the F. I. L. M. Club to enforce an oral promise or an oral agreement with respect to a contract for film service. No manager or salesman in the employ of any of these Companies is authorized to vary or change the terms of any of the written contracts by oral promises. Therefore, insist that any terms of the agreement which you make, shall be incorporated in the written contract and that all provisos and conditions of your contract shall be entered into the agreement by a clause in writing. This is especially important with respect to terms for protection detailing the amount of protection, theatres covered, the run and any other items with respect to which you attach any importance.

"As a final word, insist that every promise made you be made in writing and be made a part of your contracts."

England Finds the Prologue Adds to Presentation

One of the prettiest houses in Texas is the Jefferson of Dallas. This house is a firm believer in the electric sign as a business getter. The big sign always carries the title of the feature photoplay. When this photograph was taken the house was playing "The Wings of the Morning"

Two scenes are herewith shown of the elaborate prologue staged by the Alhambra theatre, London, England, for its presentation of "Broken Blossoms." The complete act is described on the opposite page

How England Staged "Broken Blossoms"

"BROKEN BLOSSOMS" was given its first English presentation at the Alhambra theatre, London, one of that city's best houses, which with one or two exceptions has adhered to a legitimate program.

The Alhambra gave the Griffith picture an elaborate presentation which included a prologue. A special stage setting representing a Buddhist temple was built.

When the gong in the temple behind the curtain struck three sonorous notes, the curtains slowly rose to reveal a Buddhist interior, with a dim green light illuminating the face of the Buddha on the altar. With measured steps two Buddhist devotees, having made obeisance, remained in an attitude of reverence before the altar steps. The recumbent figure of a Chinaman in the centre took up a Chinese chant and at its close the kneeling Chinamen in the background prostrated themselves, the Buddhist gong sounded three ominous notes—the curtain fell to rise again on the screening of the picture. A finale was reached with the Epilogue, which showed the Chink and the Child in centre of stage, the prone form of the Chink lying beside the bier of White Blossom, which was strewn with broken blossoms. Over the proscenium top hung cages of birds whose sudden twitters had an electrifying effect upon the audience. The stage front and sides were decorated with plum and apple blossoms, and this scheme of dressing was carried over the orchestral pit, which was covered in, and the top covered over with the same flowers.

The ushers throughout the house were garbed in Chinese costumes. The Chinese scheme of decoration was carried out both within and without the house, the electrical lighting being carried out in rose pink.

At this première of "Broken Blossoms" three members of the British Cabinet attended, seven Ambassadors, twenty-four members of the House of Lords, forty-four M. P.'s, members of the Royal Academy and other notables.

Salt Lake Telegram Starts Guessing Fever

Desiring to create interest in motion picture stars, and incidentally taking the first step toward the inauguration of a metropolitan theatrical page, the Salt Lake Telegram, one of the leading daily newspapers of Salt Lake City, Utah, recently started a "Motion Picture Players Guessing Contest" to cover a period of sixty days. The contest is open to all except employees of the paper and employees of any theatre or film exchange.

Each day for sixty days a photograph of some popular star is published, to be clipped from paper by contestant and the name of player as guessed by the contestant written in a space provided for same. A series of prizes is being awarded by the Salt Lake theatres in conjunction with the prizes given by the newspaper.

Capitol Repeats "Pagliacci" This Week

"PAGLIACCI" in English and in an abbreviated form is being repeated this week as the opera portion of the Capitol theatre, New York bill.

The program states that the rendition of the dramatic composition by Leoncavallo is "by request," which of course there is no use telling you showmen may or may not mean anything.

However there is a rather significant fact to be considered in the presenting of the opera so soon after its initial rendition at this theatre. Does the popularity of an opera grow as audiences become more familiar with it? It is fair to presume that even in the largest theatre in the world, located in the greatest city in the world, there is a regular patronage each week which figures on seeing each change of bill. Will these people be satisfied with an opera which they heard sung but a short time ago? Whether they will or not will determine the fate of opera as a permanent portion of picture house program, for unless audiences will enjoy hearing the same compositions sung over and over, the repertoire of any house will consist of the limited number of such operas as are in existence. The result of the Capitol experiment will be awaited with interest.

Posters Advertise Dempsey Picture at Prize Fight

WITH the co-operation of the Pathe branch office at Minneapolis the leading exhibitors of that city who are showing the Jack Dempsey serial "Daredevil Jack" have put over an exploitation stunt which has properly introduced the World's Champion in motion pictures to all the fight fans of the town. The exhibitors proceeded on the theory of going after business where the best results might be expected and they went right into the Gibbons-Roper fight in the Armory Annex where six thousand fans were gathered for the most important boxing match in that section of the country in many moons.

Before the fight started a great display of "Daredevil Jack" posters, two three-sheets, a six-sheet, and a banner, were suspended from the gallery at one end of the great hall. The display was the only bit of decorating in the armory, with the exception of sundry black and blue stuckko affairs on some eyes in the preliminaries, and it caught the attention of every fan. In the audience of six thousand were sixteen hundred Ford managers from various parts of the country, who were assembled in Minneapolis for a convention.

The posters and the banner remained in place after the fight and for a week following a social function with thousands in attendance was held in the hall every night. The stunt attracted a good deal of attention and it is believed that exhibitors in many other cities will work with fight promoters in getting the Dempsey banners prominently displayed at important bouts.

"Turkish" Girl Gets Attention of Salt Lake City

"ARRAYED in the costume of her native land and creating a curious sight with her bright hued garments on the streets of Salt Lake, Sari Hadahismo, a little Turkish girl, heavily veiled, arrived in Salt Lake and registered at the Newhouse hotel."

This is the opening paragraph of one of the numerous news stories run in the local papers of Salt Lake as publicity for "The Virgin of Stamboul." At a cost of about $40 Manager William Cutts, with the assistance of his publicity man, Steve Maloney, put over a live bunch of publicity when it counted big; that is during the Mormon Conference. Thousands of people from all over the state flocked to Salt Lake during this conference and during the week preceding.

The conference proper opened Sunday April 4. The young lady who took the part of Sari attracted much attention when she mounted a gaily caparisoned steed which was waiting at the hotel entrance and took an airing about the city.

It was intimated in the news stories that the mystery girl might be the Arab girl for whom Ben Mahomet, Arab Shiek, was searching and who had eloped to the United States from her native land with a sailor, the reports of which were carried by the Associated Press.

Then Sari suddenly disappeared and the following news story was run; "Registered at the Newhouse hotel only yesterday, Sari Hadahismo, a little Turkish girl who startled Salt Lakers in the lobby of the hotel yesterday when she appeared in full Turkish costume, has disappeared. Besieged by reporters, Miss Hadahismo locked herself in her room after arrival and refused to see anybody. She refused to say anything about her alleged connection with Ben Mahomet, a sheik of Arabia." And etc.

Then the following day appeared this story; "Sari has been discovered! The little Turkish girl who has been startling Salt Lake by appearing in a quaint costume of the East has been identified. She is a little girl representative of Sari, the beggar girl of Stamboul, the principal character of "The Virgin of Stamboul," which opens a week's engagement at the Kinema tomorrow." More space was given to the stunt and the adventures of the girl while playing her part.

In the window of a prominent music store of the city a young man posed as an Arab Sheik and smoked the typical water pipe while reclining on elaborate cushions. The only indication of the publicity was the word Sari on a card pinned above him on a rear curtain.

Teasers had been posted up all about town and together with the paid advertising the publicity packed the house at every performance. Long lines of people could be seen waiting for the show to open each day and the only difficulty was in accommodating the crowds.

Brooklyn and Milwaukee Furnish Excellent Ideas

A most novel lobby display for "Overland Red" was recently originated by O. T. Meister, manager of the Whitehouse theatre, Milwaukee, as shown by the illustration to the left. The whole display was not expensive and resulted in a lot of extra patronage for the theatre according to Mr. Meister

Among the latest exponents of staging grand opera in conjunction with pictures is Edward L. Hyman, manager of the Strand theatre, Brooklyn. Below is shown the stage setting and the singers in costume for the presentation of selections from "Aida" recently rendered as a part of the Strand program. Clever Advertising Used by Louis K. Sidney

WITH Holy Week in view, Louis K. Sidney, managing director of the William Fox Washington theatre, Detroit, arranged a thorough advertising campaign with the intention of making a poor week in show business turn out a winner.

The attractions booked were Shirley Mason in "Molly and I" and as added features Harold Lloyd in "His Royal Slyness," Fox News, Mutt & Jeff, Washington Male Quartette, and a little child musical marvel of seven completed the program.

Six thousand postal cards with a photograph of Shirley Mason on one side were mailed to a selected list by a local addressing company. The postal cards were mailed from Chicago, addressed and carrying the following message: "Dear Frank: Just saw Shirley Mason in 'Molly and I' and its wonderful. Be sure and see it at the Fox Washington theatre. Love. Hazel." These were written individually, and were mailed to reach their destination prior to the opening of the picture. Much comment was aroused through this angle.

5,000 dodgers were used in the autos, during the week of the attraction's play date. Much publicity was secured through the Police Commissioner stopping the theatre from distributing this style of advertising on account of using the line "By order of the Detroit Police Department, etc."

Another splendid publicity angle was a series of open letters addressed to the voters and to the Mayor and the Detroit, United Railway. For twenty-five years there has been a fight on the present street car system. The newspapers carried front page stories regarding the coming election on same. The Mayor and the Railways had the town plastered with paper regarding the coming election and it is a bitter fight. The letters calling attention to the street cars for Shirley Mason proved a unique method of advertising and aroused great comment.

A special Molly matinee for girls named Molly was held Monday, when all girls endowed with that name were admitted as guests of the management. One hundred Mollies attended and postals bearing Shirley Mason's photographs were distributed to each and every Molly who attended.

5,000 wrappers were used by Kresges 5 and 10 store—2,000 were used by the largest music store in the city, Grinnell Bros., for the same purpose.

The result was an excellent weeks business for Holy Week.

"Edgar" Number Two Scores Big Hit

GOLDWYN, to use a phrase of the season, has hit the ball over the fence with the second number of the "Edgar" series under the title of "Edgar's Hamlet."

If the show which Johnny Jones and his company of juveniles, including one dusky lad who does the ghost, doesn't furnish more hearty laughs than any comedy, no matter who is the star, that you have played in a good many moons then your efforts to provide your audience with something to chase away the blues is wasted effort.

This is assurance for the theatres which have booked the Edgar series that they have made a good buy. It may also be taken as a hint for those who haven't that unless they want to let one of the best bets of the season get by it is time to get out the fountain pen.

Gets Unusual Interest for "Modern Salome"

H. C. McCourt, manager of the Family theatre in Jackson, Michigan, tied up with all of the principal stores in the town for a two-page advertising display when he exhibited Hope Hampton's production of "A Modern Salome."

In his advertising Mr. McCourt placed his emphasis on the $3,000 cash prize contest for the best essays on "A Modern Salome." In addition to the regular prizes offered by Hope Hampton Productions, Inc., he agreed himself to give ten prizes. For this purpose he selected three local judges to read essays written by people in Jackson. These essays were all forwarded to New York after the reading, giving the ten local prize winners an opportunity to compete for the $3,000 prizes in the national contest.

Novel Lobby Display for "Hawk's Trail"

A novel lobby display to aid exhibitors who have booked "The Hawk's Trail" is available from the producers.

The device has for its main base a life size plaster cast of a hawk, dyed an ebony hue. Suspended from the beak of the statuette are several dozens vari colored silk skeins of lengths sufficient to span the depths of the average theatre lobby. The imitation flier when suspended over the entrance of lobbies suggests something of the motion of the predatory bird after which it is fashioned, and the skeins running from its bill when fastened to various points of the side walls and ceilings of the arcades end at illustrations that depict different situations of the drama the scheme aims to advertise.

How Carpenter Won Front Page Publicity

Salt Lake Newspaper Sees News Value in Exploitation Stunt

GEORGE CARPENTER manager of the Paramount-Empress theatre, Salt Lake City, recently reached the much to be desired goal of the publicity man, the front page of the newspapers with his exploitation of "Excuse My Dust."

This is the story which the Salt Lake Herald gave Mr. Carpenter and the Paramount Empress and also describes Mr. Carpenter's stunts in the interest of the attraction booked for his house.

"Transit of a classy electric coupe down Main Street Saturday at the dignified pace of three miles an hour created considerable comment and likewise hilarity, because utterly unconscious therein sat two prim ladies while on the back of the electric vehicle was prominently displayed a pennant bearing the legend 'Excuse My Dust.' Small boys gleefully raced past while the drivers of cars which passed the slow moving coupe smiled back.

"Within half an hour all sorts of gasoline propelled buggies from the plebeian 'Henry' to the aristocratic twin six were sporting similar pennants the drivers of which for the most part being utterly oblivious of unsolicited adornments flaunted across the gas tank. Then the police took a hand and investigated until the solution was forthcoming with the laconic statement on the part of a disinterested party that he guessed George Carpenter of the Paramount-Empress was pulling another advertising stunt.

"Mr. Carpenter subsequently admitted that such was the case. 'We had five hundred of those pennants printed and I turned some of our boys loose to tag the automobiles parked on Main street, and the fun of the thing is that while we expected to get arrested and secure some free publicity thereby for Wallace Reid in 'Excuse My Dust' which starts today at the theatre, the automobile drivers took blindly to it and in a number of cases even drove up to the theatre and asked if it had a few more pennants to spare, as they had a friend who owned a speedy car and they knew he would like to tack one on the back and cut loose down the pike.

"Before six o'clock the five hundred pennants had been distributed with the result today if a car passes another and flaunts 'Excuse My Dust' in the face of the slow-going vehicle, the owner of the latter will know that it is not intended as an insult, but is simply another of those advertising dodges on the part of the versatile motion picture exhibitor."

How Grauman's Rialto Broke A Record in Pictures!

The exploitation campaign which "Why Change Your Wife?" received at Grauman's Rialto theatre, Los Angeles, had no small part in its record breaking run at this theatre

Grauman's Rialto Gets Business by Use of Novelties

"Why Change Your Wife?" Stunts Instrumental in Extending Engagement

THE pre-release showing of "Why Change Your Wife?" at Grauman's Rialto theatre, Los Angeles, has proven to be a great success, thanks to a number of things among which was a fine picture and an exploitation campaign which even Los Angeles thought unusual.

Many novelties in publicity were used with telling effect.

Before the opening of the picture at the Rialto, it was arranged with a number of automobile owners and an automobile distributing agency to carry a banner saying "'Why Change Your Wife?' Grauman's Rialto next Sunday." This was for the individually owned machines. The agency machines carried a banner with the following line: "'Why Change Your Wife?'—when you can buy her a (Name of car) and make her happy—Grauman's Rialto next Sunday." A teaser campaign in the newspapers was carried for a period of three days reading "'Why Change Your Wife?' the vital question of the day." This was followed by a three day ad. previous to the opening, reading. "The vital question is answered in Cecil B. DeMille's new Paramount Artcraft Picture this Sunday, Grauman's Rialto."

Scene stills from the production were selected and then colored in oils by a superior artist. Instead of framing these oils, velvet drapes, blending in color with the colors of the specific picture, were procured. Because of the beauty of the pictures, some of the leading Broadway merchants were glad to give them a featured display in their show windows. In each case, an announcement card was used.

The five daily newspapers were extensively covered with display copy and special publicity stories.

An "Essay Contest" on the title, "Why Change Your Wife?" was instituted by the Los Angeles Express with $250 in prizes awarded in the following amounts—First prize $100, second $50, third $25. The five next best essays to receive $10 each, and the next five in order to receive $5 each, the winning essays to be published at the termination of the contest with the names of contestants. Among the judges were Judge Taft, of the Superior Bench, Rev. C. C. Lawton and one leading society woman and one prominent club woman. The contestants had to be married, or have been married, that they might know whereof they write. The announcement in the paper at the beginning of the contest read as follows:

"Why Change Your Wife?"

$250 in Cash Prizes for Best Essay.

The Evening Express in an effort to combat the increasing number of divorces and maintain the integrity and sanctity of the home, has arranged to devote a department each day for the next two weeks to the printing of opinions from its readers as to the best ways and means to accomplish this. Cash prizes will be paid for the best essays offering solutions of the divorce problem, such as legislation, the conduct of the husband towards the wife and vice versa; a higher code of morals for both sexes; willingness to realize that individual tastes may differ and yet fundamental principles be agreed upon; recognition of the fact that the complete attainment of the ideal is impossible; courtship of such duration as to insure that the contracting parties are thoroughly conversant with one another's characteristics; an unselfish love that is based on mutual respect rather than mere sex attraction, and such other remedies for the divorce evil as may suggest themselves to the contestants for prizes.

No personalities must be used and essays must not exceed two hundred words. Only those essays which the editor considers worth while will be printed each day. Mail all essays to the editor, Los Angeles Evening Express.

In the next day's issue of the paper on the drama page appeared a two-column, two-inch deep ad reading "$250 in Cash Prizes will be paid by the Evening Express for the best essay on 'Why Change Your Wife?'"

The same copy appeared each day of the contest and on the stipulated page appeared one or more of the essays received from the contestants. The space covered by these essays was usually a column and a half to two columns.

At the close of the contest, the picture of the winners of the first three prizes were printed in the paper. It proved a very interesting campaign both for the newspaper and the photoplay.

Overture Novelty Presented at the Rialto

DR. HUGO REISENFELD, managing director of the Rialto, Rivoli and soon of the Criterion theatre, is presenting a decided novelty at the Rialto this week in a film accompaniment for the overture number "Sixth Hungarian Rhapsody."

A motion picture of the orchestra in action playing this composition, of Dr. Reisenfeld directing and of several of the soloists performing as the strains of the composition lessen to one instrument all timed by fixing the speed of the projection machine to synchronize with the piece's rendition, has been made and is projected as the orchestra plays. This includes a picture of Bela Nyary, the cymbalom soloist, who has been added to the Rialto orchestra personnel for this week and who has an important part in the rendition of the number, performing on his peculiar instrument.

The fact that the idea is new, that the synchronization is so perfect and that the individuality of Director Reisenfeld and of Professor Nyary stand out, makes this a most interesting bit of stage craft.

Suggestions for the Small Exhibitor

Charles E. Brady, house superintendent of the Liberty theatre of Spokane, Wash., has come through with a reply to our request, with some presentation suggestions designed especially for the small town exhibitor that should be read with interest and profit by every showman who comes under the category mentioned above. These are the suggestions that Mr. Brady offers:

It is the smaller house that has no large stage on which to present a prologue and no modern electrical equipment to create an atmosphere that I offer these few suggestions. I have tried them in a small house and I know they have box-office value and will appeal to your patrons.

The lights in your house can be dipped in various colors. Green is very good for the ordinary romance and love story for the oriental and mystery picture, the use of red and yellow will create the atmosphere. For storm scenes and tense dramatic action, darken your house as much as possible, even to pulling all house lights except your exit lights. The use of different lighting effects in this manner will help wonderfully to hold the attention of your audience. In the lobby of your theatre you have your largest opportunity for your presentation. Create in your lobby the principle scene of action of your picture and you will accomplish two things. You have an advertising medium that has no equal and your patrons are immediately cast into the atmosphere of the picture when they buy their tickets. Carry this idea into your inside lobby as much as you can. Even if you only change a few lights in your lobby the creation of a new and different atmosphere is going to help your different pictures. I realize all pictures can not offer you a good chance to attract the eye of your patrons, but don't overlook the ones that do offer these opportunities.

"A Child for Sale" Is in Heavy Demand

Ivan Abramson reports that his latest release, "A Child for Sale," is being booked with a rapidity that indicates conclusively how well this picture is thought of among exhibitors. The heavy demand likewise verifies the good opinion registered by the critics concerning the production, says Mr. Abramson. The David V. Picker circuit has booked "A Child for Sale," providing for longer runs on this feature than any shown in the Picker houses up to the present, it is stated. The same applies to the U. B. O. circuit. The M. & S., Charles Steiner and the S. R. S. circuits have also booked "A Child for Sale" In New Jersey, the U. S. Theatre, Paterson; Strand Theatre, Hoboken; Park Theatre, Rutherford; Rialto, Passaic, and Empire, New Brunswick, have also signed the Abramson picture for a showing.

Advance Publicity for Vitagraph Pictures

Vitagraph's special production, "The Courage of Marge O'Doone," is about to be placed on the market with a fanfare of advance publicity and prestige which bids fair to set aside all rules, is the report from the Vitagraph office. The name of its author, James Oliver Curwood, has attained magic charm from his other recent novels and the films that have been made of them. In its original form, "The Courage of Marge O'Doone" has been making a sensation for more than a year.

The locale of "The Courage of Marge O'Doone" is the region that borders on the Arctic circle. There are scenes of blizzards, bear fights and man fights of great heroism and hardship.

David Smith directed this special feature. Pauline Starke and Niles Welch have the leading roles. It is announced that the film has been received at the Brooklyn studio of Vitagraph, where it is receiving its final editing.

Chicago and the Mid-West

Covered By L. H. MASON

Manager Aschmann, of Pathe's Chicago office, reports remarkably heavy bookings for the second series of Harold Lloyd's two reelers. According to Mr. Aschmann, the first series of six pictures which ended with "The Eastern Westerner" has proved one of the greatest box-office attractions Pathe ever had to offer and, realizing this, exhibitors are eagerly awaiting the forthcoming releases.

L. Y. Crump has joined the feature sales staff of Pathe's Chicago Exchange, and will cover the South Side. Mr. Crump formerly was connected with First National.

"The Woman He Chose" has entered the second week of its definite run at the Ziegfeld theatre in Chicago, and, as it is playing to constantly increasing crowds, indications are that it will be there for some time to come. The picture has received remarkably laudatory criticisms from reviewers of the Chicago press without exception

"Why Change Your Wife," De Mille's big picture, starring Gloria Swanson, has proven so successful at the Randolph theatre that Jones, Linick & Schaefer have given it a clear field to run as long as it likes, by setting back all future bookings. It entered upon its second week on the 17th of April.

Star Walsh, for many years treasurer of the Wilson Avenue theatre, has been appointed assistant manager of the Randolph, succeeding Walter Moore, who has retired because of ill-health. Among other recent appointments in the Jones, Linick & Schaefer string of theatres, is that of Al De Vito as assistant manager of McVicker's, and that of George Burkick as assistant manager of the Rialto theatre.

Greater Stars have received the prints of the "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" picture, featuring Sheldon Lewis, and are planning to release the production at once in the Chicago territory. Messrs. Brockell & Elliott are planning some special exploitation and advertising to put this picture over in a big way.

Manager Max Levy, of Robertson-Cole Chicago office, has received word that Georges Carpentier will appear in Chicago on May 26th at the Coliseum, and the publicity staff is planning to exploit his coming to the limit.

While the construction of moving picture theatres is far in the lead of that of legitimate houses in Chicago, the movies are not going to entirely overshadow the legitimate as is evidenced by the completion of plans last week, for one of the new theatres to be erected here by A. H. Woods, and it is announced he will begin the erection of half-million-dollar playhouse there on May 1st. Mr. Woods has taken a twenty-one-year lease on a loop site, and will pay the Leander J. McCormick Company fifteen thousand a year rental until the theatre is opened and ninety-six thousand a year thereafter.

Watterson R. Rothacker has returned to Chicago after several weeks spent on the Pacific Coast, but will be in the city for only a short time, as, according to his present plans, he will start for Europe at an early date. Douglas D. Rothacker also is back at the Rothacker plant in Chicago after a trip to New York. He was wearing a broad smile when he rolled into Chicago, as he carried five important industrial film contracts in his pockets.

Jester Comedies are to play an important part in the entertainment of downtown movie fans in Chicago as Lee Herz, of the Silsee Film Exchange, has made contracts with four loop theatres for the series. The theatres which will show the Jesters are: The Star, Boston, Bijou Dream and State Congress.

Irene Conahan, cutter for Constance Talmadge, recently brought the special color scenes which will be put into prints of "The Love Expert" to the Rothacker Chicago laboratories. The same day John G. Hahn, secretary of the Rothacker Film Company, met the California Limited and relieved J. D. Williams, of the negative of Anita Stewart's latest, "The Yellow Typhoon." William F. Abbe joined his brother Oscar on the Rothacker camera force. William Abbe began turning the crank at Essanay. Then he was cameraman for International Harvester Company and General Pershing

Aaron J. Jones is vacationing at French Lick, resting up after an extremely busy winter in Chicago, and has decided to remain there until April 25th. During his absence John J. Jones, his oldest son, is in complete charge of Jones, Linick & Schaefer's offices.

Manager Stoughton, of the Cort theatre, Pekin, Ill., has purchased the Princess theatre at Peoria. The theatre is to be improved and rehabilitated and run as a first-class moving picture house.

Carl Harthill has been made manager of the Chicago office of Reelcraft Pictures Corporation, and has taken over his new duties. Mr. Harthill was manager of the Beehive Exchange when Beehive was taken over by the new Reelcraft organization, and is occupying his old quarters.

Abe H. Kaufman, president and general manager of Kaufman Specials, Memphis, Tennessee, was in Chicago last week looking over the picture market and while here closed contracts with the Capital Film Company for that company's Neal Hart and Al Jennings releases for Tennessee and Kentucky territories. Mr. Kaufman reports business in the south going strong and that exhibitors generally are making money. He, like many exchangemen, notes a great demand for two-reelers and other short features.

"The Virgin of Stamboul," which opens at the Playhouse on April 18th, is making a splendid booking record in the Chicago territory, according to Manager Lesserman of Universal. Three of the big Chicago circuits have booked the picture solid for all their houses. They are Ascher's, Lubliner & Trinz and Schoenstadt.

Mrs. Frank Brown, who shot her husband dead Thursday night during a domestic quarrel, has been exonerated by a coroner's jury. On the stand she swore she shot her husband after he had hit her with an ink bottle. Brown was an official of the Motion Picture Operators' Unions.

The Chatterton Opera House at Bloomington, Illinois, has been thoroughly renovated and entire new equipment installed and will be reopened on April 26th, "The Virgin of Stamboul" being the feature picture on that occasion. A. L. Rule, manager of the house for Hall & Griffin, owners, will install a fourteen-piece symphony orchestra and promises an adequate presentation for every production to be offered hereafter. He also states that only the biggest and best pictures will be screened at the Chatterton.

J. W. Howland, manager of the V. F. Grubb interests in Macomb, Illinois, for several years, has resigned his position. He has not formally announced his future plans but it is understood that he is all set.

Aaron J. Jones of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, is paying a flying visit to New York following the return of his partners, who have been enjoying a long vacation on the Pacific Coast.

Jack O'Toole, Chicago manager for United, is spending several days at the home office in New York conferring with officials on forthcoming productions.

Floyd Brown, Indianapolis manager of First National, and J. F. Cubberly, manager of the Minneapolis office, gave Harry Weiss, of the newly-formed Superior Screen Service, a party to celebrate the launching of his new enterprise. The outing was held at the Chateau Desplaines, Lyons, Illinois, and among those attending were: J. H. Harris, of Chester Outing; J. F. Friedman, of Friedman Film Company, Indianapolis; J. N. Jacobs, of First National, Indianapolis, and several others. Harry recently was seen trying to kick himself and when questioned said that it was because he had not gone into business for himself sooner. Mr. Weiss now has a total of nine salesmen on his payroll, having added the following to his force: R. E. Weilman, for Indiana territory; Nathan Margoles, for Wisconsin; Harry T. Hartman, Milwaukee, and George Berry. Appointments for southern Michigan and the northern peninsula will be made during the week and Superior Screen Service offices will be opened in Milwaukee and Indianapolis shortly.

Sam Katz, of Balaban & Katz, is expected to return to Chicago from the west coast within a few days.

Ike Van Ronkel says there is no truth in rumors which have been floating around for some days that he has handed in his resignation.

Among out-of-town visitors in Chicago last week were: C. A. Robertson and C. B. Viant, of the Viant-Robertson Company, owners of a string of theatres in Indiana; R. O. Lawhead, of Lincoln Square Theatre, Decatur, who booked up enough pictures to last him till June, and Miss Maude Roberts, representing the Roberts Circuit of Olney, Casey, and other towns in southern Illinois.

Work on the new Barbee Theatre, which wil be the first of the new de luxe theatres to open in the Chicago Loop, is being rushed by three shifts of men, twenty-four hours per day and it is the hope of Mr. Barbee to open his doors early in April. "She Loves and Lies," featuring Norma Talmadge, has been booked for the opening feature, and Manager Ben Beadell of Select, is elated over having one of his pictures as the premier production at the handsome new house.

Jones, Linick & Schaefer report that "Huckleberry Finn," a Paramount Artcraft feature, broke all house records at the Randolph Saturday and Sunday and the big attendance continued throughout the week.

Ross C. Cropper is in Chicago for a week, having returned to the windy city to confer with Frederick J. Ireland and others in regard to matters concerning the newly organized Reelcraft Picture Corporation.

Cosmopolitan to Produce Broadway Plays

Cosmopolitan Productions is going in for the production of stage plays as a side line to its motion picture activities, according to a statement issued from the office of Henry M. Hobart, vice-president and general manager.

Stage productions will be made on an extensive scale and it is planned to have at least two shows on Broadway at the opening of the season this fall. Following their run on the stage these plays will be picturized and released as Cosmopolitan Productions. The first of these will be a three-act comedy version of Harry Herschfield's famous cartoons, "Abie, the Agent."

Bray Pictures Takes Larger Quarters

Due to the rapid expansion of its Industrial Division, The Bray Pictures Corporation has been forced to seek larger quarters for the Western Studios. The new location is at 7514 N. Ashland Avenue, Chicago, where they have secured ample space in a new and modern building.

The new studio is in charge of E. Dean Parmalee, vice president of the Bray Pictures Corporation. Jack Norling will have charge of the Animated Technical Department. The camera room, developing and printing departments, and the taking of actual photography will be under the direction of Walter Schaefer.

Fox Star Starts Work on Second Picture

Vivian Rich, William Fox's newest star, has started work on her second Fox production, "A World of Folly." Frank Beal, who has been absent from the Fox corps of directors for some months, returns to direct Miss Rich in this new drama.

Playing opposite the star is Augustus Phillips, who makes his Fox debut as leading man for Miss Rich. He supported Viola Dana in many of that star's successes.

New Series for Workers

Rothacker Makes Pictures to Be Shown to Employees of Big Firms

EXHIBITORS will never see a series of motion pictures which the Rothacker Film Mfg. Co. is now producing, but the films are of great importance to the exhibitors, inasmuch as the pictures have to do with the welfare of working men and women who have considerable dealing with the young lady enthroned behind the tickets.

A number of big employers commissioned Watterson R. Rothacker to produce films which would help employees to help themselves—which would inspire workers to improve their condition by winning promotion. Originally Mr. Rothacker suggested the films to the employers, but recently several whom Mr. Rothacker did not approach have taken up the idea. Within the last two months seven such pictures have been made and as many more are now on the Rothacker production department's schedule. These pictures will be shown to employes only, and invariably they will be exhibited at the plant.

A corporation which operates a chain of retail stores employing hundreds of girls has had a five reel photoplay made which is now touring the country, making stops at every city where the corporation has a store, in order that all employes may see the film. The picture preaches the doctrine of efficiency. Three other large concerns are also having similar pictures made to be shown to their employes.

Wagner Writes for Ray

Popular Magazine Writer Does Scenario for First National Star

ROB Wagner, who for five years has been writing humorous and informative motion picture articles for the Saturday Evening Post, has at least turned to the screen and has made his first scenario for Charles Ray.

Although Mr. Ray, under his recent arrangement with Arthur S. Kane and the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, is appearing mainly in suitable stories adapted from plays of reputation and big novels, the star's admiration for the work of Mr. Wagner and for the latter's unusual popularity among millions of Post readers has led to the acceptance of two original scenarios from the pen of the humorous writer. The initial First National vehicle in which Arthur S. Kane will present the star is "Forty-five Minutes From Broadway," adapted to the screen from the play by George M. Cohan.

Because of the stress laid by exhibitors on the value of vehicles that are known widely through the country and not merely in certain localities, good story material from the Saturday Evening Post has long been considered particularly desirable by producing organizations The value of the Saturday Evening Post Stories, as attested to by showmen, is not to be doubted, with a circulation figure, according to the publishers of ten million readers. A story by Mr. Wagner is therefore considered doubly valuable because his appeal in this national magazine has been entirely to the followers of motion pictures.

A steadily increasing demand for pictures of the great outdoors is said to have been reported to the Pathe headquarters during the last three months. The Edwin Carewe production, "Rio Grande," to be released by Pathe on April 25th, is declared to be an ideal picture to meet this demand.

Second "Jiggs" Film Due May 16th

It has been announced by the Pathe Exchange that the second of the International "Bringing Up Father" series of comedies, "Father's Close Shave," will be released on May 16th.

M. A. Dodge, president of the M. A. Dodge Film Company of Chicago

"Build Pictures Around Personality"-Dodge

M. A. Dodge, president of the M. A. Dodge Film Company, who recently completed "Witches' old" and who is planning a series of feature pictures which are to embody some advanced ideas in photoplay construction, is a firm believer in the use of material written solely for the screen and also has developed some interesting theories in regard to building pictures around personality.

"My formula is," said Mr. Dodge, "first find the interesting personality—find it in real life, not merely in imagination. After finding it, then give it sympathetic and analytical study so that true and logical action will develop into a unified drama. I have one such 'star' under contract and am studying others. Judging from the results already accomplished in preliminary work, I am confident that some production will be released this year which will, at least, be different."

Additions to Casts of Goldwyn Features

Additions to the casts of "Officer 666," the celebrated Cohan & Harris stage success, and "Milestones," the famous play by Arnold Bennett and Edward Knoblock, were made at Goldwyn Pictures Corporation's Culver City Studios, last week.

Jeanne Calhoun has been assigned to the role opposite Tom Moore in "Officer 666" while Priscilla Bonner will portray the part of Sadie, and Hardee Kirkland that of the police captain. The "Milestones" production has been augmented by the inclusion of Corrine Kirkham, George Swan and Jack Donevan.

Charles Simone Will Resume Production

Charles Simone, one of the pioneer producers of the industry, announces that he is planning to resume production work during May. For this purpose, he will establish himself in New York, terminating his exchange activities in Albany, where he has been holding managerial posts for the last two years.

View of Metro's new administration building at the Hollywood studios, complete and up to date in every detail

Metro Enlarges Studio

Seven Acres and Five Buildings Are Added to West Coast Plant

PURCHASE of seven and one-half acres of ground south of Metro's present West Coast studios site in Hollywood, Cal., is announced by Metro officials, together with the statement that work will be commenced at once on the construction of five new studio buildings. Chief among this quintet of new structures is to be an enclosed stage of steel, concrete and glass construction, 250 feet long and 100 feet wide.

An appropriation of nearly $250,000 has been made for these building activities. Besides the stage there will be put up buildings for the property department, a carpenter's assembling shop, cutting rooms, a film vault and isolated quarters for the scenario department, it is declared.

Three adjoining city squares and one-third of another square in the Los Angeles suburbs are now owned outright by Metro Pictures Corporation. Within two months practically every foot of the seventeen acres now covered by the producing plant will be occupied by stages, laboratories, technical workshops and other structures that go to make up modern motion picture studios.

In addition, Metro has at its disposal a location park of sixty-five acres north of Hollywood, in the beautiful San Fernando Valley. This is utilized for big exterior settings, such as streets and small villages, with a natural mountainous background.

Good Cast in "Miss Hobbs"

Harrison Ford to Play Opposite Wanda Hawley in Realart Film

HARRISON FORD has been selected as Wanda Hawley's leading man in "Miss Hobbs," Jerome K. Jerome's comedy, which was recently announced as the new Realartist's first starring vehicle. In addition, a cast of well-known players that includes Jack Mulhall, Lila Lee and Helen Jerome Eddy, has been assembled to support the star. The production is now under way at the Realart Studios in Hollywood, under the direction of Donald Crisp, whose impersonation of the prizefighter in "Broken Blossom" was one of the big individual hits of last season.

Mr. Ford has acted with Miss Hawley several times previously, and they are well acquainted with each others' methods. Director Crisp was enthusiastic over having obtained Mr. Ford's services for Miss Hawley's first production, and said that the combination would insure a most auspicious start for her starring career.

Jack Mulhall, who has appeared as leading man in a number of important productions, also has been obtained for the cast, and Lila Lee and Helen Jerome Eddy have been assigned to a prominent part. Walter Hiers and Julanne Johnston has been engaged by Director Crisp to round out what is considered by Realart to be an exceptionally distinguished and well-balanced cast.

Particular care in casting was required for this production, by the story itself, says Realart. In the original stage production of the play, it was presented by a practically all-star cast that included Annie Russell, Clara Bloodgood and Charles Richman. Its screen adaptation, Realart officials decided, should have an equally strong cast.

Loew Bookings for "Sex"

Metropolitan Circuit Contracts for New Louise Glaum Production

NICHOLAS SCHENCK and Fred Mitchell have signed contracts for the complete Marcus Loew metropolitan circuit booking of seventy-seven days for J. Parker Read, Jr.'s Louise Glaum production, "Sex." This contract was made with Marx S. Nathan, New York exchange manager of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, by Mr. Schenck in person and foretells a heavy advertising campaign to be made by the Loew theatres under their aggressive publicity manager, N. Grandlund. The Loew booking calls for twelve prints of "Sex" and the completion of the booking across the entire circuit in two weeks. The Loew officials were said to be delighted with the spectacular appeal and power of Miss Glaum's story and with its quality of production.

Announcement will be made in a few days of the first run booking on Broadway of "Sex" and indications from the New York Hodkinson exchange are that "Sex" will be the most widely booked production that has been seen in the metropolitan territory in the past twenty-four months.

Important first run contracts that have been closed for "Sex" in addition to more than two hundred already announced through the trade press include the following: The Savoy, Wilmington, Del.; the Majestic, Sheboygan, Wis.; the Strand, Sioux Falls, S. D.; the Virginia, Vallejo, Cal.; the Century, Petersburg, Va.; the Hill, Newark, N. J.; the Star, Elgin, Ills.; the Orpheum, Green Bay, Wis.; the Casino, Chester, Pa.; the Capitol, Macon, Ga.; the Regent, Saginaw, Mich.; the Bijou, Battle Creek, Mich.; the Fischer, Danville, Ills.; the Washington, Richmond, Ind.; the Victory, Kokomo, Ind.; the Starland, Anderson, Ind.; the Colonial, Galesburg, Ills.; the Orpheum, Rockford, Ills.; the Majestic, Beloit, Wis.; the Majestic, Appleton, Wis.

"Sex" opened auspiciously on Sunday at the Goodwin theatre, Newark, N. J.; where Miss Glaum's previous J. Parker Read, Jr., success, "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," smashed all house records during its two weeks' engagement in January, Moe Kridel, the power behind the Goodwin, heralding the coming of "Sex" with a big newspaper and billboard advertising campaign.

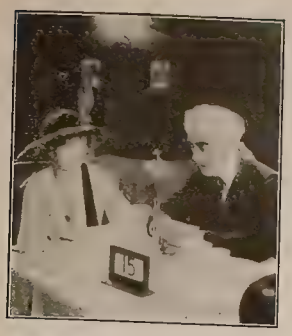
Roy A. Grombacher, managing director of the Liberty theatre, Spokane, Wash., has booked "Sex" for a week's run in early May and has already started his drive on the production with first page newspaper teaser ads, while James Clemmer in Seattle is making ready for a 16-page ad on "Sex" such as he used in heralding "The Westerners" in the fall.

Eileen Percy Made Star

Fox Signs Leading Lady for Long Term; Picture Not Yet Announced

Eileen Percy

EILEEN PERCY has done such good work in "Leave It To Me" and "Big Jim O'Kane"—future releases in which she appears opposite William Russell, under the direction of Emmett J. Flynn—that she has been signed by Fox Film Corporation to a long-term contract. Miss Percy will be starred, and in the near future will begin work in her first stellar production under the direction of Mr. Flynn—with whom she has been associated both in Fox and in American Film Company photoplays. Announcement has not yet been made as to what story will be used to introduce the newest star of the screen.



Miss Percy is said to have a delightful personality, and a face and figure that show to excellent advantage on the screen. Although still in her early twenties, she has had a wide experience on the stage.

She went from the Gest musical show to motion pictures, playing opposite Douglas Fairbanks, with whom she remained one year. Robert Warwick was the next star she supported, and then Metro signed her for a picture.

Work on the first Eileen Percy picture will be started within the next fortnight at the William Fox studio in Hollywood. Her stories will be of the light comedy type—a line of work for which, it is believed, she is admirably equipped by both nature and experience.

"Stolen Kiss" Called Realart's Finest

"The best thing Realart has offered," is the statement made by one New York critic in regard to "The Stolen Kiss," the recently released Constance Binney feature.

Sessue Hayakawa and Rhea Mitchell in a scene from a new picture starring Hayakawa for Robertson-Cole distribution, "The Devil's Claim"

"The Devil's Garden" Bennett's First

Whitman Bennett announces that the first of the four releases he will produce for First National Exhibitors' Circuit, starring Lionel Barrymore, will be "The Devil's Garden," from the novel of the same name by W. B. Maxwell, the noted European author, who first attained fame with the publication of his "Cotton Wool." Work on the production is already under way, and filming has been going on for the past week.

"The Devil's Garden" was decided upon for the initial production, because some of the settings demanded a location of out-of-doors in the spring time, and Director Kenneth Webb decided there was no time like the present.

Widely Known Authors on Hampton Staff

Among the "staff writers" of Benjamin B. Hampton plays are some of the best read authors of the day. Among them are Zane Grey, Steward Edward White, Emerson Hough, Winston Churchill, Vicente Blasco-Ibanez, William Allen White, Harry Leon Wilson, Owen Wister, Upton Sinclair, Opie Read, B. M. Bower, Thomas Nelson Page, Hulbert Footner, Eleanor H. Porter, Henry Sydnor, Harrison, William McLeod Raine, George W. Cable.

These authors are under contract to Mr. Hampton, who will produce their works in special all-star photoplays. Six Benjamin B. Hampton plays, featuring the names of authors and titles of the novels from which they are taken, have already been produced.

New Lloyd Comedy Will Be Released May 2nd

With the announcement that "An Eastern Westerner," last of Harold Lloyd's first series of two-reel comedies for Pathe release, has been scheduled for issue on May 2nd, bookings on the second series have received a strong impetus. Among the first of the foremost theatres of the United States, outside of the Strand and Capitol, which signed two weeks ago, to book the new Lloyds, is the Merrill of Milwaukee. During the past week the complete series of six was booked by the New Orleans Exchange over the entire Saenger circuit, one of the most powerful in the South.

Flock to Watch Carpentier Work

Great Number of Visitors, Including Sportsmen, at Solax Studios

THE interest in the appearance of Georges Carpentier on the American screen finds its reflection in the number of people who are visiting and attempting to visit the Solax Studio in Fort Lee, where Carpentier has been busy daily for the past few weeks. While the sporting fraternity is greatly in evidence, the large number of women visitors is best proof of the fact that Carpentier's clean and attractive personality is admired by both sexes. If one were to begin to name the sporting editors who have spent time in the studio, it would be necessary to name nearly every one of the most prominent sporting writers in New York, it is declared.

Such has been the rush of applications for admission to the studio on one pretext or another, John G. Adolfi, who is directing the society drama which is Carpentier's starring vehicle, has given very strict orders barring not less than ninety per cent of the applicants. One has to be very prominent or to have legitimate business in the studio in order to gain entrance.

Nothing is permitted to obstruct the progress of the picture and so quickly has the work been pushed forward, working both night and day, that it is possible for Robertson-Cole to announce that the pre release date of the Carpentier picture will be Decoration Day, May 30th. Actual work on the production commenced April 3rd.

The first scenes "shot" depicted a large ballroom of a prominent country club. In the latter scene, it is asserted more than four hundred people were used. The studio was later converted into a big gymnasium in which Carpentier will be seen for the first time in the picture in his fighting regalia.

Commenting on the pugilist's early efforts before the camera at the Fort Lee studio, Robertson-Cole declares:

"The most astonishing thing to the habitues of the studio is the ease with which Carpentier works before the camera. Nothing phases him and he is a natural pantomimist, according to the other actors in the drama. Despite the fact that Carpentier speaks but very little English, Director Adolfi has had no difficulty in making himself understood. Armand Cortez is acting as interpreter, but owing to Carpentier's high intelligence, Cortez has little to do.

"Those who have been constantly with him predict that the American public has a great surprise in store for them as Carpentier has the knack of transferring his million dollar smile and personality to the film. His smile, they say, will make him as famous to the screen as his punch has made him champion in the squared ring.

"While it is not proposed to disclose the story of the drama before the picture is completed, it can be said that it is quite different to anything heretofore attempted by ring heroes. However, sporting enthusiasts will be able to see enough of Carpentier's speedy work with the gloves to get a better idea of the French contender for the world's heavyweight championship. It can also be said that the story is good fiction not a mere succession of stunt incidents. When Carpentier puts on the gloves there is a logical reason for it, not an imaginative excuse to display his fistic prowess."

Critics Agree on Metro Films

A CONSENSUS of critical opinion in the motion picture trade papers and the daily press as compiled by Metro reveals that in the third round of its series of "fewer and better" pictures Metro has surpassed its previous efforts by a wide margin.

The third round is now being released. Four productions have already been shown. They are: "Alias Jimmy Valentine," starring Bert Lytell; "Shore Acres," featuring Alice Lake; "Old Lady 31," with Emma Dunn as star, and "Dangerous to Men," starring Viola Dana. Two others are about to be released—"The Cheater," starring May Allison, and "The Hope," a Drury Lane melodrama, with an all-star cast.

Wid's greeted "Alias Jimmy Valentine" as "clever, suspenseful, appealing, amusing—a real picture." Its box-office analysis for the exhibitor said: "Go the limit and watch the crowds grow bigger each day." "The Best of All Crook Films" was the headline in the "Exhibitors' Trade Review" for Helen Rockwell's comment. "Quite the most fascinating crook picture it has been our good fortune to see."

Matthew A. Taylor, in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, wrote: "Details of the production are so perfect that they force themselves upon our attention. The picture has been produced and acted in such splendid fashion that you can be proud to bring back 'Jimmy' once more to your patrons." The Motion Picture World reviewer said: "Once in a blue moon is a stage play so well adapted to the screen." The Telegraph's comment was: "The photoplay is likely to rival the success of the stage version. . . . It is tremendously suspensive drama."

"Shore Acres" met with an equally enthusiastic reception from the reviewers. Besides the New York critics who commented favorably on this picture, there was Mae Tinee, of the Chicago Tribune. "See this," she writes, "take the children and tell your friends."

Then there were the reviews of "Old Lady 31," with another unanimous verdict of praise. "'Old Lady 31' is a feature fundamentally true," said the reviewer in the Telegraph—"a gentle, kindly, whimsical and shrewdly observant transcript of human nature and human experience." In the Exhibitors' Trade Review, George T. Pardy said: "Emma Dunn's screen debut in the character of Angie Rose, which she created on the stage bids fair to make her equally well beloved as a star of the silent drama."

"Tears and laughter in excellently produced comedy-drama," was the caption for the MOTION PICTURE NEWS review by Matthew A. Taylor. "It pulls at the heart strings and knocks at the funny bone throughout six reels," he added. Margaret I. MacDonald, in the Motion Picture World, also found the picture splendidly adapted for the screen.

"Dangerous to Men" had a screening recently in the Metro projection room in New York, and won some favorable comments. This third round of "fewer and better" pictures will be complete with the showing of "The Cheaters" and "The Hope."

Wire Briefs From Coast

ISADORE BERNSTEIN, the former manager of Universal City, has been appointed general-manager by Carl Laemmle. He entered upon his new duties on April 19th. On the evening of the 19th, Mr. Bernstein was the guest of honor at a banquet tendered to him by Mr. Laemmle and the members of the producing staff.

Eddie Cline, former director for Mack Sennett and director of the Sunshine Comedies for the past year, has been signed by the Metro Pictures Corporation as supervising director. Metro has under contemplation the construction of a special comedy stage, which shall be used by four comedy units. The first of these companies to use the new stage will be the unit led by Buster Keaton.

The names of the four directors to work under Cline's supervision have not been announced as yet.

Stroheim in East Takes Charge of Editing

Eric Von Stroheim, the Universal director, has come to New York to supervise the final cutting and editing of his latest production, "The Devil's Pass Key," which is a Universal-Jewel picture of Parisian life, love and intrigues. Mr. Stroheim says that his new picture is an improvement on "Blind Husbands" in the way of characterization, setting and verisimilitude.

Fox Studio in Full Swing

Twenty-eight Sets in New York Building with Room for More

IN spite of the fact that finishing touches still are being put on various sections of the immense new Fox studio on West 55th Street, production operations have suffered little interference so far as settings for various Fox features are concerned.

At the time of writing, according to the Fox officials, twenty-eight full sets are standing on the studio floor of the 55th Street building, in use by directors or awaiting their turn in sequence. In emphasizing the size of the studio the Fox offices call attention to the fact that, with these twenty-eight sets standing on the floor, there still is room for as many as twelve good-sized sets in the space unoccupied. Some of the sets now standing are being used by Dell Henderson, some by Harry Millarde, some by George A. Beranger; others are in use in productions being directed by Richard Stanton and Charles J. Brabin.

Work on the new laboratories is reported as progressing favorably, and it is thought that Fox feature films will soon be completed under the same roof where they are staged and photographed. Equipment for the special novelty subtitles has already been received at the building, and will be installed in conjunction with the laboratories on the ground floor of the building.

Paramount Film Finished

George Fitzmaurice Makes Successor to Popular "On with the Dance"

COMING at a time when the memory of "On With the Dance" is still fresh in the minds, the announcement that George Fitzmaurice has just completed his second production for Paramount-Artcraft is a matter of much interest to the trade and public. The same quartette that was responsible for "On With the Dance," Ouida Bergere, scenarist; Mae Murray and David Powell, featured players, and Director Fitzmaurice co-operated on the second production.

Persons who have viewed the picture in the studio projection room are said to have been pleased with the result Mr. Fitzmaurice has obtained. Like his first special production, they say, it has an entertaining story with gripping heart interest and dramatic situations that at times reach the highest pitch; in addition to the featured cast are such names as Holmes E. Herbert, Macey Harlam, Alma Tell, Frank Losee and Lawrence Johnson, a versatile child actor, last seen in "His House."

Atmospheric shots, that always abound in Fitzmaurice productions, include a picturesque beggar's corner of the streets of Constantinople; a harem, realistically reproduced; an old patriarch praying in a mosque. One of the biggest scenes is an embassy ball in Constantinople, for which several hundred extras were used.

Read Units Going Full Blast at Ince Plant

The J. Parker Read, Jr., units are reported to be working in full force at the Ince studios, Culver City. Hobart Bosworth is filming "Buckoo McAllister," a South Sea Island story, under direction of Roy H. Marshall. The entire company will go to the Santa Cruz Islands for exterior locations. Wesley Ruggles has been engaged to direct the new Louise Glaum production, which is as yet untitled. James Kirkwood will play the leading masculine role. Beautiful gowns will be a feature, it is said.

PRODUCTION RECORD SET BY SIMPLEX PLANT

THE week just past, according to Mr. E. M. Porter, general manager of the Simplex plant, saw all records broken for machine production since the building of the Simplex Projector was first started.

"It is nothing short of marvelous," said Mr. Porter, "to think that we should see a record-breaking week of machine production two months following a disastrous fire which deprived us of a five-story building. The loss of such a building, fully equipped with new machinery and tools, was naturally a severe blow, and came at a time when we were getting into our stride in the over-production program we had planned.

"A blow of this sort would have halted, temporarily at least, some manufacturers with a less efficient organization, but to see the greatest number of Simplexes that have yet been manufactured in a week's time going out of our factory in spite of the fire surely speaks volumes for our organization."

Aerial Scenes Will Be Filmed in Storm

Vitagraph reports that all is in readiness for the filming of what is described as one of the most hazardous scenes ever attempted in picture-making. Two aeroplanes are to be sent up in the midst of an electrical storm, according to Vitagraph. One plane will be manned by a man and a girl; the other by a cameraman, his equipment, a searchlight, flare bombs and the necessary hands to manipulate these accessories.

The scenes are to be taken in connection with "The Girl Out of the Sky," featuring Wallace MacDonald and Marguerite De La Motte under the direction of Tom Terriss. Everything is ready for the storm scene, at Catalina Island, California, says Vitagraph—everything except the storm.

"Tony" Moreno, serial star, appearing in Vitagraph productions.

Bryson Shows Universal Pictures at Sea

A free picture show every evening during the trip was the gift of Jimmy Bryson, of Universal, to the passengers of the S. S. Sonoma, bound for Australia. Mr. Bryson collected before the trip such pictures as "Blind Husbands," "The Hearts of Humanity," "The Virgin of Stamboul," and "The Great Air Robbery."

Mr. Bryson was formerly connected with Minneapolis office of the Universal Film Company, and was chosen by President Laemle to represent his company in the East, on account of his good work in the Middle West.

Jack London Novel Is Completed for Metro

Final scenes have been shot for the C. E. Shurtleff, Inc., production of "Burning Daylight," Jack London's great novel of the northland. The cast includes Mitchel Lewis, Helen Ferguson and William V. Mong. The picture, which was made at the Metro Studios in California and in the Truckee snow country, was directed by Edward Sloman, and will be released shortly through the Metro distributing system.

Pathe Sales Drive a Success

Albany Branch Shows Largest Increase In Keen Race

A REMARKABLE tribute has just been paid to Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., in the record breaking business done during the March competition, known as "Brunet Month," the winners of which are announced this week by Director of Exchanges Elmer R. Pearson.

In a driving finish, which brought up its total increases in collections and new business to 124 per cent above the average for November, December and January, the Albany Branch in the Eastern division, captured the team competition for its section. When the final figures were tallied, Branch Manager B. M. Moran, showed an increase in collections of 75 per cent, and a 49 per cent increase in the matter of new business. The Washington office, managed by E. R. Champion, was runner-up to Albany, with a total increase of 55 per cent.

In the Central Western division, where the competition resulted in a much closer race than in the Eastern territory, Milwaukee carried off the honors, with a total increase in collections and new business of 109 per cent. J. H. Mergener recently took over the management of the Milwaukee exchange, and his record is an exceptional one, showing an increase of 47 per cent in collections, and 62 per cent increase in new business.

Detroit, with G. W. Sampson at the helm, gave Milwaukee a close fight for the honors, showing a total increase of 75 per cent.

It was in the Southern territory that the greatest competition developed, with Oklahoma City, managed by F. B. Pickrel, winning with the astounding increase of 248 per cent. Of this, 177 per cent was new business, and 71 per cent increase in collections. The Charlotte and Dallas branches, guided respectively by E. E. Heller, and D. J. Coughlin, fought stubbornly for second honors, with Charlotte coming out successful, showing an increase of 140 per cent, against 130 per cent for Texas territory.

Probably the sternest fight for leadership resulted in the Western division, where the chief award went to the team of the Denver office, led by manager W. E. Scott. Recording a total increase of 102 per cent, these figures showed an increase of 50 per cent in collections and 43 per cent in new business. San Francisco filed a return of 85 per cent over the average for November, December and January, and won second place. H. J. Hemmick led the San Francisco team. Los Angeles and Portland tied for third place with 65 per cent increases. These branches are managed by F. Carmichael and M. G. Winstock, respectively.

On the whole the thirty-two branches of Pathe in every section of the United States, showed a gross increase of 45 per cent over the collection and new business figures for November, December and January. These figures are made more remarkable by the fact that November was a "drive month," and the business written during that period was virtually the greatest that had ever been previously recorded by Pathe.

Broadway House for Kaufman

Plans Call for Theatre to Present Producers Pictures

ALBERT A. KAUFMAN, who recently formed a producing alliance with Marshall Neilan, arrived in New York recently from California for the purpose of closing an arrangement whereby he takes over a big Broadway theatre primarily, with the purpose in mind of working out several new ideas he has in connection with the public presentation of Dorothy Phillips-Allen Holubar and Agnes Ayres Productions.

In this connection Mr. Kaufman stated that it was not his intention to become interested in the exhibiting field, but that his plans involving the purchase of a New York theatre were formed solely for the purpose of giving his productions their national premieres here for long runs. He stated that the theatre he is negotiating for is right in the heart of Times Square, and admitted that it was not a picture theatre.

"My idea in taking over a New York theatre is to give my productions presentation and exploitation along lines that will insure and make possible long runs," said Mr. Kaufman. "I have several ideas along these lines which I would like to try out.

"In short, the presentation here would act as a showroom for my pictures, not only in so far as the productions themselves are concerned, but also as regards the physical presentation and exploitation. I plan to have one of the best known showmen handle this theatre in a manner that will facilitate the presentation of these pictures throughout the country in a way never before attempted."

As to his producing plans, Mr. Kaufman said: "As soon as I possibly can, I will return to California to start work on the initial Dorothy Phillips Allen Holubar production. I feel that it is premature to give details concerning this picture, but I will say that I have just closed with Olga Scholl, author of 'Heart of Humanity' and 'Right of Happiness,' to do the story. Miss Phillips, of course, will play the star part under the direction of Holubar."

Mr. Kaufman, who shares the studio with Marshall Neilan, stated that the latter is just finishing his third independent production following "Don't Ever Marry," and has already started on the fourth. "'Don't Ever Marry,' said he, 'will easily prove a bigger attraction than even 'The River's End,' and will disclose something absolutely new in film plays."

The initial Phillips Holubar picture, it was stated by Mr. Kaufman, will be produced on a big scale, so that it can be presented to the public on an elaborate plan, augmented by a large national publicity campaign. This standard will be followed in other Phillips Holubar pictures.

In connection with the distribution of his product, Mr. Kaufman said: "I am not thinking further ahead than the production of my first picture and its premiere here. When I get back I will devote all my time to the making of a picture which I consider has most unusual possibilities."

Simplex Notes

Mr. Harry Asher, Executive Head of the Boston Motion Picture Supply Company, was at the Simplex Factory last week conferring with Mr. E. M. Porter, Simplex General Manager on matters that will eventually find their expression in a well organized drive covering the southern section of New England.

Mr. Asher reports that not only is Boston being thoroughly Simplexized but Fall River, Lawrence, Lowell and New Bedford are beginning to answer the call for Simplex. In one day, so Mr Asher reports, eleven orders for Simplex were received last week for theatres in the cities enumerated and in each case they represent replacements of machines of other makes previously installed.

The Boston Motion Picture Supply Company now located at 54 Broadway, Boston, has leased the corner location formally occupied by the Select Picture Corporation at the corner of Church and Shawmut streets and when the artisans now working out the construction plans, have finished the new home of this Boston Supply House will be hard to duplicate either for location, equipment or size.

The present quarters of this company are now regarded as the finest in New England, but with Mr Asher's plans in effect, concerning the new building, Boston will surely have occasion to be proud of its leading supply house.

Several Simplex officials plan to go to Boston within the next few days in order to suggest the working out of various details in the new establishment as are followed in other head quarters of Simplex Distributors thruout the country.

J. Frank Brockliss, the well-known English Film Distributor and the head of the house of J. Frank Brockliss, Ltd., of Wardour street, London, has just completed another round trip across the Atlantic and comes back this time with reports of many sales of Simplex Projectors, for which machine the Brockliss Company are exclusive distributors in Great Britain.

Mr. Brockliss states that the main difficulty seems to be the preponderance of orders over deliveries.

Harley Knoles Co. Off For Charleston

After waiting patiently for two days for some let-up in the railway strike, Director Harley Knoles and the Dorothy Dalton company were able to leave New York at 1.30 o'clock Wednesday morning for Charleston, S. C., where they will take scenes for "This Woman—This Man," Avery Hopwood's play, which is the star's second production for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Pathe's Releases for May

Keenan, Lewis and Henley Pictures Are Scheduled for Release in May

ENCOURAGED by reports from branch managers all over the country to the effect that motion picture attendance will reach greater levels than ever before, the Pathe Exchange has arranged for the release of four new productions during May. Frank Keenan will be seen in "Dollar for Dollar"; Hobart Henley will present "The Miracle of Money," and "Sherry," an extra special feature, comes from Edgar Lewis, whose production of "Other Men's Shoes" is now meeting with the greatest popular favor in every territory. In addition to these three productions, another Pathe extra special will be released, the details of which will be announced shortly.

"Dollar for Dollar," to be released on May 2nd, is a Keenan drama of high finance, society and politics. It is a play with touches that reach the emotions in the manner so well exemplified by Mr. Keenan in previous productions.

"Sherry," the latest Edgar Lewis production, will be released as a Pathe extra-special on May 30th, according to Pathe, and it will be a fitting production to succeed "Other Men's Shoes." It is the story of a man's regeneration, of his battle for his own soul.

In "The Miracle of Money" Hobart Henley is said to have produced a picture which reminds one of his best efforts in the creation of Pauline Frederick, Will Rogers, and Frank McIntyre features. The story is from "Marrying Off Emmy," by Beulah Poynter, and it is described as a quaint tale rich in philosophy.

Neilan Kills False Rumor

Foreign Made Pictures Will Be Released Through First National

MARSHALL NEILAN last week nailed the rumor which has appeared in several publications, to the effect that he will not release his European-made pictures through the First National Exhibitors Circuit. Mr. Neilan also expressed himself emphatically as regards the status of his new producing affiliation with Albert A. Kaufman, who is now in New York.

"In the first place," said Mr. Neilan, "I wish to deny most emphatically the story which has been printed in certain papers, that the productions which I will make abroad will go to a releasing concern other than the First National Exhibitors Circuit.

"I have under way a number of plans involving the production of some very unusual pictures, staged in the exact locales of the various plots involving some of the most famous landmarks in England, France, Ireland and Belgium and Spain. These productions will I feel, fill a long-felt want not only in this country, but all over the world, due to the fact that for the past four or five years practically nothing but American-made — and chiefly California-made, pictures have been available to the motion picture public."

These pictures, said the producer, would be released through First National.

Comedy Praised at Initial Showing

The first intimation of how the public will receive "Down on the Farm," the new Mack Sennett five reel comedy, was made known recently when Mr. Sennett was wired by the manager of the Strand theatre, of Fort Wayne, Ind., where the production had an early release.

"We opened 'Down on the Farm' on Easter Sunday," wired the exhibitor, "and compelled to turn away business despite severe snow storms raging which swept entire Middle West. Opposition very strong. On third day with miserable weather still standing them up. Using barn yard setting, prologue, and rube orchestra and live animals. Expect tremendous week. Regards."

This reception to the new picture leads Hiram Abrams, of the United Artists Corporation to predict that it will exceed the popularity attained by Mr. Sennett's former picture.

Inter-Ocean Will Have West Coast Offices

An announcement of more than ordinary interest to the trade is embodied in a statement issued this week from the offices of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, according to which it plans to establish West Coast offices through which it will handle the distribution of motion picture accessories in that territory, and which offices will serve to expedite shipments of motion pictures and accessory products to Far Eastern and Australian foreign countries. The large increase of business is given as the reason for the new offices.

Cosmopolitan Acquires Magazine Stories

Cosmopolitan Productions, through its vice-president and general manager, Henry M. Hobart, has added another famous writer to its staff of literary luminaries. Jack Boyle whose crook stories have been widely read has signed a contract whereby all his stories appearing in Hearst's, Cosmopolitan, Good Housekeeping, and Harper's Bazaar magazines will, for an indefinite period, be subject to first call for motion picture purposes by Cosmopolitan Productions. Frank Borzage, director of "Humoresque," will direct the first of Boyle's stories.

Portland Service Company Breaks Records

The Service Film and Supply Company of Portland, Oregon, under the management of W. A. Mr. Stone has been selling Motiographs for three years and during that period two-thirds of the projectors he sold have been De Luxe machines.

Premiere Staged by Grauman

EQUITY Pictures Corporation announces the premiere at Grauman's Rialto Theater, Los Angeles, Sunday, April 18, of Clara Kimball Young in Marah Ellis Ryan's story "For the Soul of Rafael," made under the personal direction of Harry Garson. Manager Sid Grauman arranged a superb presentation and personally supervised the decorations of the house. A prologue of charm and an elaborate musical score were rehearsed to elaborate the presentation.

A rousing publicity and exploitation campaign has been mapped out by Harry L. Reichenbach, and every conceivable method of exploitation, including what is said to be the finest newspaper campaign ever put over in Los Angeles has been inaugurated. It is Mr. Reichenbach's purpose to see that no stone is left unturned to acquaint Californians with the fact that a super-production is in their midst.

The engagement of Miss Young at Grauman's is of special import in that "For the Soul of Rafael" marks the first time in the history of Grauman's big theatre that any other than a Paramount production has been shown.

Regarding the production of "For the Soul of Rafael," which is said to be of an elaborate character, the Equity Pictures Corporation has issued the following statement:

"Since its earliest conception, Harry Garson, president and general director of the Garson Studios, planned to make the production as important to the screen industry as the novel was to American literature, and the combined efforts of star, director and author have resulted in one of the greatest screen achievements ever accomplished.

A scene from Clara Kimball Young's new picture, "For the Soul of Rafael," an Equity Pictures production

"For the production of the picture the most able historians and technical experts on every phase of the life and customs of the early Californians were secured as an advisory board, and Marah Ellis Ryan, the author, moved to Los Angeles during the period of production so that she could be present in the studio and be with Miss Young and her company on all locations. Many of the scenes were taken in the exact locations and the exact buildings described in the book. Every important mission from Los Angeles in the south to Mount Shasta in the north were visited for appropriate locales for the attractive story.

"A number of the most dramatic episodes of 'For the Soul of Rafael' transpire in and around the missions during the celebration of the ceremony of the New Year by the native tribes of Hill Indians who, in the religio proceedings, relight the sacred fires on their altars in honor of the Sun and dispatch their couriers, with lighted torches, to bear them to the tribes of the Four Winds. For these scenes, two hundred Indians were borrowed from the Soboba, Pima and Cocopah government reservations near Los Angeles, and were used in the tribal ceremonies, every detail of which is absolutely authentic and historical.

"The total cost of producing 'For the Soul of Rafael' was enormous. The time required to product it was six months, including the elaborate research work carried out by Clara Kimball Young, Mrs. Ryan, Mr Garson and technical experts.

"One of the most important factors in connection with the production is the unconquerable cast which Harry Garson assembled in support of Miss Young. Such names as H. Frank Glendon, Juan de la Cruz, Ruth King, Bertram Grassby, Eugenie Besserer, Maude Emery, Helene Sullivan and Edward M. Kimball are seen in the important roles."

Mary Pickford in Slavey Role

Her New Characterization Is Said to Be Best of Career

A STATEMENT from the offices of the United Artists of the forthcoming production, "The Duchess of Suds," starring Mary Pickford, gives expression to the opinion that in this picture "Mary Pickford reaches the greatest height of her inimitable characterizations for the screen." The statement follows in full:

"In the character of Amanda Afflick, a little cockney laundry drudge, in 'The Duchess of Suds,' her next release through United Artists Corporation, Mary Pickford reaches the greatest height of her inimitable characterizations for the screen. Already a great part of the production has been finished, and Hiram Abrams has announced this picture, the second Mary has made for the Big Four, for an early release.

"What portions of the picture have already been shown to the members of the organization and from the stills that have already issued for exploitation, advertising and publicity, there is no reason to doubt but that the character Miss Pickford portrays gives her the greatest opportunity of her screen career to vent her inimitable qualifications. The character itself is a wonderfully appealing one, effective and triumphant in its every degree of simplicity. There are many moments of cheerful fun and hilarious antics, and others of tearful emotion. Yet, the story draws its line cleverly between the changes, and its whole is filled with much action, heart interest and suspense, ending naturally with that ultimate justification that sends 'em away with that grand and glorious feeling.

"The role that Miss Pickford portrays is wonderfully unique; demanding a make-up which in many of the slavey scenes makes her so unlike herself that she is almost unrecognizable, yet crediting her with an art for characterization that is beyond imitation. There is more pathos and human nature compressed into this character than is found anywhere else in the characters Miss Pickford has ever done, and she has been so carefully painstaking with this production that the predictions are that it will be her best.

"This character of Amanda Afflick is that of a young English girl, born in a work-house and apprenticed to a French laundry woman. She has read and re-read the cheap novels, the only literature that has come to her notice, all of which have dealt with the upper social strata, until her dreams and her life are composed of the most fanciful imaginings, which invest her sordid surroundings with all sorts of potential greatness. Such a character as it is affords a most wonderful opportunity for unusual endeavors on the part of Miss Pickford, and gives her that long looked for chance of portraying a character that will long last in the memory of her followers.

"The story of the plaintive type has no complications that tantalize and no plot that thickens, but just pathos alternating with humor in rapid succession so that you don't know whether you are laughing or crying, and feel quite torn with conflicting emotions when the story finishes.

"Everyone, everywhere is anxiously awaiting this production since Miss Pickford has made it plain that she is going to give to exhibitors a picture that will be startling in its every particular, for besides the unique characterization and the charmingly appealing story, the settings will be lavish, the cast well rounded out and the production as a whole, the kind all people will talk about."

"ALIAS JIMMY VALENTINE"
Screen Classics Metro

DIRECTOR ..... Not credited
AUTHOR ..... Paul Armstrong
SCENARIO BY ..... Sol Polito
CAMERAMAN ..... Pink Fox
AS A WHOLE..... ..Wonderfully suspensive and appealing production of well-known play
STORY..... ..Builds interestingly from very outset and works up fine suspense through various sequences.
DIRECTION..... ..Handled all sequences with great appreciation of their values; comedy element delightful.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Generally good
LIGHTINGS..... Mostly plain; few effects are good
CAMERA WORK ..... Very good angles
STAR ....Plays skillfully and makes big appeal
SUPPORT..... Wilton Taylor fine as detective; great types throughout.
EXTERIORS ..... Few but appropriate
INTERIORS..... ..Bank and prison stuff very fine
DETAIL ....Players build up their characterizations through innumerable comedy and human touches.
CHARACTER OF STORY..... ..Reformed crook's efforts to evade vengeful detective and his romance with benefactress.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.. About 8,800 feet
(Here's a real picture. One that has something worth while in each of its scenes. It has a remarkable suspensive story, a romance that contains a big appeal, comedy that sparkles. In adapting it they have followed pretty closely to Paul Armstrong's play, allowing for omission and additions here and there, and the result is that all the sustained action, the appeal, the cleverness and the comedy of the original work have been transferred to the screen.

For the introductory sequence they flash a cracker jack fight which takes place on a Pullman between Jimmy and his drunken partner who insults Rose Lane, one of the travellers. With a final punch Jimmy sends him off the tram. A few minutes later he breaths his last but has squealed on Jimmy before the end. So Jimmy goes to prison on the charge of cracking a safe.

Though guilty Jimmy stoutly maintains his innocence, and one day when the warden comm him to open the office safe to exhibit his ability to vinitors, he refuses claiming that he doesn't know modern fashions. Rose is a member of the party. It is through services that Jimmy receives his pardon and father, a bank president, gives him a job as works under the name of Lee Randall.

After three years he has become assistant cash and received Rose's promise to marry him. And then Doyle, the detective shows up, fully intending to arrest the ex-convict for an old job he pulled in Massachu setts years before. In an exceedingly clever sequence Jimmy almost succeeds in proving to Doyle that he is after the wrong man. They have built this up wonderfully with innumerable suspensive and comedy touches. Then just as Doyle goes, Jimmy is told that Rose's little sister has been locked in the new vault being installed in the bank. So Jimmy sand papers his fingers and goes to it, opening the vault after some very intense action of which Doyle has been a spectator. But the detective has seen the real man in Jimmy and walks away leaving him with Rose.

It is impossible to include here all the fine bits of business with which the players build up their roles and many of them haven't run a month in a legitimate house. "Alias Jimmy Valentine," however, was a real success. The title is known the country over. Play it up and go to it

Go the Limit and Watch the Crowds Grow Bigger Each Day

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You can go the limit on advertising this for you seldom have the chance to book a picture that is so downright good from start to finish. Its appeal is unlimited and you will find your audiences sitting right up and responding to it all the way through. The fact that the picture has been made before ought not to detract from the business of this one. This has been proven before with other pictures.

In your advertising besides giving Bert Lytell the real prominence he deserves concentrate a lot on the title of the play and the author, Paul Armstrong. You hear a lot about great Broadways successes these days and many of them haven't run a month in a legitimate house. "Alias Jimmy Valentine," however, was a real success. The title is known the country over. Play it up and go to it

Old Time Crook Play as Thrilling as Ever

METRO has lost little of the gripping suspense or thrilling action of this drama of crook plays. The picture is carefully produced and good in detail. While Bert Lytell is the star, it is not a one-man production. His supports are well cast, and keep the acting up to the standard set by the star who does good work throughout, but especially as the convict in the opening reels.

It was the original and tense climatic situation that helped to give the play a year's run on Broadway some years ago. A little girl is locked in a safe. There is no combination, and to open it with his sand-papered fingers, Lee Rondall must reveal his identity as the long sought for criminal Jimmy Valentine. While this scene in the picture is strong enough to make any audience lean forward in their seats, it seems as if the producer could have made even more of this high spot. The sudden change of character of the man-hounding detective, which is about the only thing in the story which doesn't quite satisfy, is skipped over very quickly in the picture.

"Shore Acres"

Metro Production, with Alice Lake, Transformed Old Stage Favorite to a Splendid Screen Spectacle.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE outstanding feature of Metro's version of "Shore Acres," transferred to the screen from the famous stage play of that name, is the fact that while it has retained much of the homely life that once touched a universal chord, it is subordinated to new thrills of wonderment. The story scenes is no mere melodramatic situation artificially suggested. It becomes a real part and a prominent factor of the production. It breathes a new and artistic spirit of life into the old drama and intensifies that; it probably the most intense and vivid portrayal of its kind ever shown on the screen. With practically all the characterizations in the hands of players who have been identified with the parts on the stage, with the harmony between brothers, yet it stands alone in the matter of treatment. Its design and action are concerned with pictorial effects for their own sake, quite the reverse of being adjuncts to the play. This new screencraft has long been trying to accomplish, and with practically all the characterizations, with the Berry fields Berry's inside subordinated to the Berry fields outside and those of the Berry fields outside subordinated to the Berry fields inside, Alice Lake as Abbie Berry has limited opportunity as the pure artist, her heart into all of a true artist, her heart into the generally good, and Martin, and Some of

See This, Take the Children, and Tell Your Friends

By Mae Tinée.

Lush with the sentiments, passions and tragedies of simple hearts, the beloved James A. Herne stage success of two generations comes to the screen.

I tell you it is an achievement to make such a picture as "Shore Acres." It inspires you with both love and hate for the movies. You love them for giving you something so good, and you hate them for the horrible things they so heedlessly inflict upon you. When there can be a "Shore Acres" how dares there be a "Menace of the Moron"?

With the exception of Joseph Kilgour, there is nobody in the cast with whom you are familiar. Which arouses the question—why pay fortune for names? Everybody, with, again, the exception of Mr. Kilgour, who isn't supposed to do it, walks right straight into your heart and stays there from start to finish of the picture. And while you don't love Mr. Kilgour, you realize that he does some fine and realistic acting.

Edward Connelly takes the part so long and wonderfully portrayed by Mr. Herne—that of the old lighthouse keeper. And he is just great! An Abraham Lincoln sort of character, homely and slow and shrewd and tender, possible of blazing into a white fury when the honor of those he holds dear is touched.

You will have to see Frank Brownlee as Martin Berry, brother of the lighthouse keeper Nat, and owner of Shore Acres, and Margaret McWade as Martin's tender, loyal, weary, worn and gallant wife. I can't begin to tell you. Alice Lake is charming as the daughter, and Robert Walker as the poor young man she defiantly clings to through perpetual disapproval and storms at sea, you approve of.

Before closing I've got to hand it to that imp of Satan, young Nat Berry, as played by Burwell Hamrick. He is immense.

IT IS seldom that an old-time melodrama which has served as a standard stage attraction for a generation or two can be reproduced on the screen with the happy results attained in this picture of "Shore Acres" are not only preserved in the film version, but accentuated by a wealth of detail which could only be achieved by the magic power of the camera. The photography is faultless, nothing more spectacular and thrilling than the shipwreck scene in the final reel has ever been filmed and the marine views as a whole are remarkable for their beauty and natural charm.

As regards the acting honors go to Edward Connelly and Frank Brownlee, respectively cast as Uncle Nat and Martin Berry. This assertion is not intended as an adverse criticism upon the merits of the other principals but is due to the fact that the two brothers are the chief characters in the play, the course of the feature relies for its comedy color, although for the most part the feature relies for its interest upon sound emotional appeal. Perhaps the most beautiful shots of their kind that have ever been photographed will be found in the production. They are abundant and each more wonderful than the last.

The picture is too long and the director has used up the earlier reels for a lot of unnecessary detail that naturally drags the real opening of the story. However, once he gets into the theme, he goes along at an acceptable pace and when the climax is reached, wastes very little footage in closing, which is very much more to be desired than if he were to bring in his detail here rather than at the beginning.

Nat Berry and his married brother, Martin, have shared the old homestead on "Shore Acres" for many years and tended the light-house on the rocky coast. Nat, the older and wiser of the brothers, is deeply grieved when, through speculation, Martin loses what he owns on the farm and it seems necessary to sell. But the wily promoter who caused the loss suggests that if he can marry Martin's lovely daughter, the debt will be overlooked.

Election Influenced By Rothacker Picture

Projection of a picture made by Watterson R. Rothacker on the screens of Detroit picture houses is credited with swinging the recent Detroit election in favor of the $15,000,000 bond issue to build new railway lines. Thus the influence of the picture theatre in public affairs is again demonstrated.

The picture made by the Rothacker Company was largely cartooned and first visualized the present Detroit situation. Tiny street cars which flitted about the screen showed the roundabout way many workers have to travel, the time thus wasted and the number of transfers necessary. At frequent intervals were flashed in Detroit street scenes showing the present cars, crammed to the steps, passing crowds of weary workers at the street corners.

Fifteen prints were thrown into Detroit just before election. Voters decided they wanted a system like the one they saw built for them at the movie show.

Selig Producing Forces Going Full Blast

From all reports, Col. W. N. Selig has an ambitious production program and is speeding up all his resources to realize his plans. "Isobel," by James Oliver Curwood, is well under way under guidance of Director Edwin Carew. House Peters is the lead in "Isobel." Jane Novak is supporting him. All preparations for the production of "Kazan," the famous dog story, have been made.

"The Mask," first of the Selig specials, has been dressed with art subtitles, and releasing arrangements are being made. Jack Holt is the lead, supported by Hedda Nova, William Clifford and Fred Malatesta. "Vanishing Trails," is nearing completion in fifteen episodes at the Selig studios.

F. P.-Lasky to Release Two Big Features

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation announces as its Paramount-Artcraft releases for April 30 "The Cost," with Violet Heming, and Robert Warwick in "Thou Art the Man." Both are adaptations of novels well known to the reading public, the former being from the pen of David Graham Phillips and the latter having been written by F. E. Mills Young, an English author who has a considerable following in this country.

Supporting Miss Heming in "The Cost" are Ralph Kellard, Edwin Mordant, Edward Arnold and other well known screen and stage players. With Mr. Warwick in "Thou Art the Man" are Lois Wilson, J. M. Dumont, Clarence Burton and C. H. Geldart.

Seek Bessie Love Vehicles

Andrew Callaghan Comes to New York to Find Stories for Star

Andrew J. Callahan who will visit New York in search of stories suitable as starring vehicles for Bessie Love

ANDREW J. Callaghan, head of the producing company which was recently organized with Bessie Love as its star, is about to leave Los Angeles for New York City, where he will confer with his Eastern representatives on additional screen vehicles of reputation for his star. The Eastern offices of the Callaghan concern are located at 25 West 43d Street.

Mr. Callaghan represents a group of Chicago capitalists who are said to be sparing no expense in surrounding Miss Love with high class materials and direction in her new era of production, and his journey across the continent is being made in the belief that the choice of suitable stories amply warrants the expenditure of time and money to come to the New York market.

"It is because we are convinced," said Mr. Callaghan, "of the absolute importance of the story in the making of our pictures, that I am taking valuable time during the first months of production to make the trip across the continent. After having conferred at some length with Miss Love, and Miss Park and Mr. de Grasse, her directors, on the type of narrative suitable for the uses of our star, I know definitely what I want and shall take all the time necessary in New York to get a wealth of good material for Miss Love and the Callaghan Producing Company."

Pictures at Marine Show

Screen Takes Important Place in New York Industrial Exposition

THE daily newspapers of New York united last week in saying that the National Marine Exposition at the Grand Central Palace was the most important affair of its kind ever held in the United States. Some of them, including the Times, the American, the Journal of Commerce and the Brooklyn Eagle, admitted in news stories which were given large space notwithstanding the railroad strike and the shortage of print paper—that motion pictures constituted the chief feature of the exposition.

On Monday night it was estimated by marine trade paper editors present that at one time men representing five billion dollars of invested American capital were watching "Keep the Flag at Sea," a motion picture produced by Harry Levey of the Universal for the Baltimore Dry Docks & Ship Building Company. During every day of the show the program called for one or more motion picture exhibits.

"Square cuts" are the costumes for Maurice Tourneur's production of "Treasure Island" in which Shirley Mason is starred as "Jim." The picture is released through Famous Players-Lasky Corp.

Pathe News Claims New Speed Record

Pathe Exchange, Inc., claims a new record in the matter of getting big current events on the screen after their occurrence. Three weeks to a day after the German revolution resulted in the temporary overthrow of the socialist government, the most important incidents connected with the event were shown in Pathe News, No. 28th, released April 7.

According to the Pathe report, three representatives were dispatched from France to Berlin when the first word of the coming trouble was received. These cameramen were in Berlin on March 13, when the revolution took place. Among other scenes, the entrance of the reactionary troops into the city through the Brandenburg gate was filmed. The negative was smuggled to Paris, it is stated, carried to London by aeroplane; and brought over on the Belgic, which was met at quarantine by a speedboat to convey the films to the Pathe Studio in New Jersey.

"The Sea Rider" Will Be Issued in May

Vitagraph announces that its latest Harry T. Morey feature, "The Sea Rider," will be released in May. In the meantime Mr. Morey and a large company are at work amid picturesque surroundings near Ashville, N. C., on his next picture, "The Gauntlet of Greed."

Mr. Morey recently gave an exhibition of his starring vehicle, "The Birth of a Soul," to the citizens of Bat Cave, a backwoods town. All the natives for miles around are said to have responded to Mr. Morey's invitation.

Exclusive Club Seen in Mayflower Picture

The stately Millionaires' Club, Sixtieth street and Fifth avenue, New York, is practically thrown open to the public in the screen reproduction of Robert W. Chambers' novel, "Athalie," now fast nearing completion under the direction of Sidney A. Franklin, for Mayflower. It is considered an unusual privilege to obtain permission to take interior scenes in this exclusive club.

In the Mayflower presentation, Miss Sylvia Breamer enacts the title role. She has made a rigorous preparation to properly portray the part of the heroine, who is supposed to be actuated by supernatural powers. Conrad Nagle is the leading man.

Metro Stars Start on Magazine Stories

Two of Metro's popular feminine stars, Viola Dana and May Allison, are starting their new pictures together at the Metro Studios in Hollywood, and both of them are based upon current literary material. Miss Dana is to do "Head and Shoulders," by F. Scott Fitzgerald, a story which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post. Miss Allison's new starring vehicle is "Held in Trust," the novel by George Kibbe Turner, now running in the Red Book magazine.

Both of these vehicles are considered by Metro forces to offer great opportunities to the stars to display their peculiar talents.

Educational Acquires New Travel Series

A new series of travel and scenic pictures produced by an artist hitherto unknown to American audiences is announced by Educational Films Corporation. There will be about forty reels of these pictures, taken by Rene Moreau, a French photographer of nature, and these will probably be released bi-weekly, alternating with another of the Educational series.

Mr. Moreau has spent several years in visiting various portions of the world and in selecting the spots of the most appeal both from the standpoint of interest in the lands and their peoples and from that of artistic photographic effect. His entire work was brought to this country, his contract with Educational Films Corporation giving that company the privilege of selecting the material that it desired.

Big New York Bookings for Aywon Features

"Blind Love," the super-feature in which dainty Lucy Cotton is the star, has been enjoying exceptional bookings in New York and New Jersey, according to a statement from Nathan Hirsh, president of the Aywon Film Corporation, who handles the feature for the states mentioned. The Marcus Loew Circuit of Theatres in New York City has booked "Blind Love," while several other large circuits and first-run houses are also showing the picture.

"The House Without Children" is also being shown in a number of the first-class houses in New York state, announces Mr. Hirsh.

Goldwyn Gives Its Schedule

NEW Goldwyn Pictures recently completed and scheduled for distribution through Goldwyn's twenty-two exchanges in May and the early part of June are "Dollars and Sense," starring Madge Kennedy; "Out of the Storm," an adaptation of Gertrude Atherton's novel, "The Tower of Ivory"; "Jes' Call Me Jim," starring Will Rogers; "The Great Accident," starring Tom Moore, and "The Slim Princess," in which Mabel Normand is the star.

According to Goldwyn's distribution system, which has been emphatically endorsed by exhibitors during the past year, definite release dates are not given productions. It has been found more satisfactory to make a number of pictures available to first run exhibitors at the same time in order that they may take their pick.

Every reader of the Saturday Evening Post is familiar with the stories of Octavus Roy Cohen, who has turned his creative genius to the writing of original scripts for production by Goldwyn. "Dollars and Sense," the first of his works prepared especially for motion pictures, is marked by the natural humor and strong human appeal that have given this author's stories such a high place in current fiction. Although it does not come under the head of a vehicle modeled to suit the personality of a star, Mr. Cohen conceived a central character in which the ability of Miss Kennedy has ample scope. Harry Beaumont directed.

Will Rogers as he looks in "Jes' Call Me Jim," a Goldwyn picture

Exhibitors who already have had an opportunity to find what they want in Eminent Authors Pictures by Rupert Hughes, Mary Roberts Rinehart, Leroy Scott and others, will be particularly interested in Gertrude Atherton's first contribution, an adaptation of "The Tower of Ivory," the most popular of all her novels. The dramatic quality of this picture places it among the emotional masterpieces of the screen, and in addition to the human interest of the situations, there are spectacular scenes presented in a vivid fashion, under the direction of William Parke.

From all quarters come reports of the sensational rise of Will Rogers, whose following has been increased by thousands with the release of each new production. "Almost a Husband," "Jubilo," "Water, Water Everywhere," and "The Strange Boarder" will find a worthy successor in "Jes Call Me Jim," a story by J. G. Holland in which the comedian's four-year-old son figures prominently. "Jes' Call Me Jim" is peculiarly adapted to Rogers' type.

Tom Moore comes to the front again with a fast-moving story that it still fresh in the minds of readers of the Saturday Evening Post. It is "The Great Accident," by Ben Ames Williams, directed by Harry Beaumont. The plot structure of this exciting narrative makes it an ideal subject for motion picture treatment.

The fame of "The Slim Princess" as a stage play in which Elsie Janis scored one of the greatest successes of her career has lasted through many years. The title, in conjunction with the name of Mabel Normand, who is starred, will prove a magnet for followers of the stage, as well as regular motion picture patrons.

The "River's End" Scoring

Contracts, Totaling $300,000, Are Reported 46 Days After Release

IT is announced that Marshall Neilan's initial independent production, "The River's End," released through First National, has reached the $300,000.00 mark on the forty-sixth day following its first public showing. Contracts, totaling this amount, are said to have been approved by the New York offices of the Neilan organization, and this figure is considered a record-breaker for gross sales on a production released in this manner to motion picture theatres in this short space of time.

It is expected by those who are in a position to know, that "The River's End" will reach a million dollars gross. This assumption is reached in view of the manner in which contracts are now coming in from communities large and small, not only for original bookings but also for return dates. In many cities the second and third run showings of this production, it is asserted, have reaped the benefit of the national popularity and advertising accorded it.

It is stated that small-town exhibitors are finding "The River's End" a particularly exceptional attraction.

Exhibitors in these small communities, through tie-up arrangements with Waterson, Berlin & Snyder, publishers of the song and the Cosmopolitan Book Corporation, publishers of the book, are enabled to secure free of charge a large supply of advertising material including cutouts, street banners, lobby displays, slides, orchestrations, singers, window displays, store cards and other material which gives them enough advertising matter, gratis, to circus the showing of this production.

Feminine Appeal a Feature

"The House of Toys" Was Built to Appeal to Women, Says Hutchinson

Charlotte Merriam, the attractive ingenue who plays the role of "Blondie" in "The Honey Bee," a Flying A special starring Mme. Marguerita Sylva and released through Pathe.

"'The House of Toys' will make a strong appeal to women fans," says its producer "It was planned," according to S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company, "and produced with the idea of appealing to women. It is a play every woman will take her daughters and her husband to see.

"The slogan which appears on all the posters—Is your husband faithful—and the subtitle of the feature—The story of a gamble in matrimony are captions which will interest and attract women generally." To the exhibitors, Mr. Hutchinson said, "Play up these points of appeal strongly in all your advertising and publicity, and your house will play to stand-up business."

The unthinking girl whom Henry Russell Miller made the heroine of his story, "The House of Toys," believed it would be romantic to be poor and live in a cottage with the man she loved while he climbed the ladder to the fame they were both sure was in store for him. But the young architect did not find this "dream girl" of his a very inspiring "helpmate" when his plans were turned down, when competitors got the business, and when the unpaid bills accumulated. And when, with the assistance of others who were ready to say "I told you so," the young wife decided he was a failure, our hero found another woman who did understand.

Goes South for Exteriors

Corinne Griffith, Heading Large Company, En Route for Location

CORINNE Griffith, Vitagraph star, heading a large company, leading and extra players, left New York several days ago for Savannah, Georgia, to make the exterior scenes for her new feature, "Gumshoes 4-B." It had been planned originally to send the company to New Preston, Conn., but on two day's notice the arrangements were changed, owing to the tardiness of spring in the North. Foliage and flowers were necessary, and the South offered at this time the only locations possessing these things.

The company that went south is regarded by Vitagraph as one of the largest that ever have been dispatched on a similar mission. It is under the direction of Edward H. Griffith, assisted by Jack Evans. Mr. Griffith recently directed Miss Griffith in her feature, "The Garter Girl," which will be released soon.

Much of the exterior scenes of "Gumshoes 4-B" are to present political gatherings, rallies and parades. The extra people transported with the company are to typify the usual crowds and secondary characters in such surroundings. "Gumshoes 4-B" is an adaptation of a prize story by Forrest Crissey, that was published in an O. Henry Memorial contest by the American Society of Arts and Sciences. The supporting cast includes Webster Campbell, George Fawcett, William Holden, Frank Norcross, Roy Applegate, Blanche Davenport, Joseph Burke, Wes Jenkins and Frances Miller Grant.

After the completion of "Gumshoes 4-B," Miss Griffith is to go to St. Augustine, Fla., for her next picture, which will be taken from the story, "The Whisper Market," written by W. F. Scutt and recently published in a national magazine. It is a South American story dealing with international intrigue.

Denver Has New First Run

Tabor Theatre Acquires Rights to First National Attractions

DENVER is to have another first run motion picture house through the operation of a contract just closed whereby the Tabor theatre has obtained virtually exclusive rights to the First National Exhibitors' Circuit attractions.

This contract went into force Saturday, April 10, when the Tabor began its First National program with the showing of "The River's End," the Marshall Neilan production from James Oliver Curwood's book by the same name. "The River's End" will run for a week and changes will be made each Saturday, as at present arranged by the Tabor. In a formal announcement in the Denver newspapers a few days before the contract went into effect, Manager Thomas G. Vick Roy, of the Tabor theatre, explained the change in the house's policy as follows:

"Saturday, April 10th, the Tabor opens its doors as Denver's foremost shrine of the silent art and motion pictures, discontinuing vaudeville. Contracts have been entered into between the Vick Roy Amusement and Investment Company and the First National Exhibitors' Circuit by which we will stage the first runs of the First National releases.

"Many of the leading motion picture stars will appear on our screen including Norma and Constance Talmadge, Charles Ray, Anita Stewart, Katherine MacDonald and many others, as well as several of the Griffith and Marshall Neilan Productions."

The William Fox Rivoli theatre, which has been playing most of the First National releases in Denver, will continue to present features already contracted for.

Edwin Mortimer has been selected to direct the forthcoming Metro production, "The Misfit Wife."

Fox Plans For Further Foreign Expansion

Reports of action taken by his foreign representatives have just been received by William Fox, president of Fox Film Corporation, in connection with recent instructions by the producer regarding expansion of the corporation's offices and exhibitors' service in the foreign market.

Advices from both the London and Paris branches announce completion of plans for opening additional offices in several cities of England and France. Even Africa is invaded by the latest advance. A branch office has already been opened in Algiers, and a fine business in this field is reported.

Two More Players for Hampton Pictures

Robert McKim and Claire Adams have been engaged by Benjamin B. Hampton on a term contract basis to appear in that producer's photoplays of famous novels. Miss Adams was an ingenue of the English stage, and has appeared in a few motion pictures before her tryout in Mr. Hampton's Zane Grey story, "The Desert of Wheat."

Lasky Reports New Productions

Issues Statement on Production After Reaching East

UPON his arrival in New York this week, after a visit of several weeks to Hollywood, Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, made several important announcements regarding the production affairs of the corporation.

In the first place, Mr. Lasky announced that the title of the new super-special which Cecil B. De Mille has just finished at the Lasky studio in Hollywood is "Something to Think About," and Mr. Lasky predicted that this picture not only would give exhibitors and the motion picture going public something to think about, but would prove one of the greatest photoplay sensations of recent years.

"I have seen 'Something to Think About,'" said Mr. Lasky, "and it is my opinion that Cecil B. DeMille has never done anything that can compare with it. By 'Why Change Your Wife,' 'Male and Female,' 'Old Wives for New' and others of his big super-specials, Mr. DeMille has educated the public to look to him for the most artistic handling of big, dramatic themes. But in 'Something to Think About' Mr. DeMille has a theme which is even bigger and of a more profound and widespread appeal than that of any of the pictures he has already made.

"The exact nature of 'Something to Think About' I am not at liberty to discuss at this time, but I will say that the picture treats of a big modern question which comes in close relation to the lives of all of us.

"'Something to Think About' marks the return to the screen of that sterling actor, Elliott Dexter, who has completely recovered from his recent illness. Mr. Dexter has an important role in this picture, and his many admirers will be glad to renew their allegiance to him.

"Gloria Swanson, who has appeared in so many of Mr. DeMille's pictures, has a leading role in 'Something to Think About.' Theodore Roberts, Monte Blue, Julia Faye and other well known players have prominent parts. The scenario is the work of Jeanie Macpherson, who has 'Male and Female,' 'Don't Change Your Husband,' and other big successes to her credit."

Mr. Lasky has announced the promotions of Robert E. MacAlarney and Howard Turrill. Mr. MacAlarney, who has been scenario editor of Famous Players-Lasky for several years, will take over greater responsibilities in the Eastern production activities of the company. Mr. Turrill, who also has been in the production department, will act as Mr. Lasky's personal assistant.

Mr. Lasky also announced that George Melford, who produced "The Sea Wolf" and "Everywoman," and who is now nearing the completion of Sir Gilbert Parker's story, "The Translation of a Savage," will shortly begin on a special production of William Vaughn Moody's great stage success, "The Faith Healer." This production, it is expected, will prove a fitting successor to George Loane Tucker's "The Miracle Man." Milton Sills, originally chosen by Mr. Moody to play the title role in the stage production, will appear in the title role in the screen version. Mrs. Moody already is in Hollywood collaborating on the adaptation of the play to the screen.

George Melford also will produce the new screen version of Denman Thompson's famous play, "The Old Homestead." Theodore Roberts will play the role created by Denman Thompson, while others in the cast will include Monte Blue and Mabel Juliene Scott.

Another interesting announcement was that Joseph Henabery, one of the best known directors, who has made a number of the biggest Paramount Artcraft pictures, will direct Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle in his new five-reel feature comedies.

Tracy Novel is Completed

"The Silent Barrier" Now Being Cut and Titled by Its Director

W. W. HODKINSON Corporation announces the completion of "The Silent Barrier," first of Louis Tracy's novels produced for the screen by Louis Tracy Productions, Inc. The new production is now in the process of cutting and titling at the Leah Baird studios, Cliffside, N. J., under the supervision of William Worthington, a well-known American cinema director.

"The Silent Barrier," a drama of the Swiss Alps, was enacted for the most part at Lake Placid, N. Y., and Director Worthington had as his chief aid and art director, Ernest Des Baillets, a noted Swiss illustrator. Some of the snow scenes are said to be of a most unusual character and all of them have a direct bearing on the gripping plot in the Tracy story, and include plunges over precipices, mountain sledge races, skiing competition and other difficult mountaineering feats.

"The Silent Barrier," a full-of-action drama with a remarkable love story woven into a maze of thrilling adventure, was enacted by an aggregation of stage and screen favorites, the cast including Sheldon Lewis, Gladys Hulette, Fuller Mellish, Florence Dixen, Donald Cameron, Corinne Barker, Mathilde Brundage Jack Raymond and Joseph Burke.

Perfecting Publicity Plans

Important Place Is Assigned to Press in J. Parker Read's Drive

WORK is progressing rapidly, it is stated, on J. Parker Read's publicity campaign for the Louise Glaum and Hobart Bosworth productions. In an announcement just received from Culver City, the place that has been assigned to the press is especially emphasized. The statement from the Read offices follows:

"Mr. Sig. Schlager, Mr. Read's personal representative, has been touring the country for the past two months and has completed arrangements with hundreds of the country's most important and influential newspapers whereby they will enlist their aid in an entirely new and novel exploitation stunt. Possibly the most important of all is the trade paper campaign, and elaborate preparations are being made for the advertising layouts. Mr. Read fully realizes that the only way to get in personal touch with the men in whose hands rest the success of his productions is through the medium of the trade journal.

"Mr. Read's policy of fewer and better pictures is being adhered to and already Hobart Bosworth and Miss Glaum have started on the year's special productions. In addition to Miss Glaum's and Mr. Bosworth's production, two all-star photoplays of big proportions will be made under the Read banner. Coincident with this announcement, Producer Read states that the press department at the studio has inaugurated a direct to exhibitor department and will aid in the exploitation of the Louise Glaum and Hobart Bosworth films."

Jose Will Direct Farrar

Associated Exhibitors Prepare for Initial Offering of Star

Edward Jose, who will direct Geraldine Farrar's productions for Associated Exhibitor's release.

EDWARD JOSE has been engaged by Associated Exhibitors, Inc., to direct Geraldine Farrar's initial production for that organization. Mr. Jose has just finished directing Anita Stewart in "The Yellow Typhoon." It is expected that production of Miss Farrar's first Associated picture will begin very soon—as soon as she returns to New York from a Southern operatic tour. The Associated Exhibitors have made no announcement of the title or nature of Miss Farrar's first vehicle under their banner.

Mr. Jose is believed to be one of the most capable directors in the field. He has directed such stars as Norma Talmadge, Elsie Ferguson, Pauline Frederick, Anita Stewart, Lina Cavalieri and many others; also he has produced several big specials with all-star casts. His directorial genius has been responsible for numerous highly successful photoplays, and it is believed that in his new connection Mr. Jose will be given greater opportunities than ever before.

Mr. Jose's stage and screen experience dates back considerably more than a score of years. He was born in Antwerp, Belgium, and studied at the Paris Conservatory for pianists. His twenty years of stage experience in France, England, Belgium and South America included a long term as stage director for Sarah Bernhardt. He directed all the plays at the Theatre Antoine in Paris for several years. His screen career included connections in a directorial capacity with Pathe, Selznick, Artcraft, Famous Players and many others.

New Screen Proved Success

Says Glifograph Has Solved New York Roof's Projection Problem

WITH the installation of the new scientifically constructed Glifograph screen in many of the Loew theatres, exhibitors are giving more attention to projection.

One of the most severe tests given projection was on the New York Roof during the run of John Barrymore's "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," when capacity was played to at every performance, it is stated. The New York Roof has always presented, perhaps, the most difficult problem in projection known. The Roof is a block wide, and the screen is in the center with half a block of seats on either side. With the ordinary flat screen in use, it was almost an impossibility to get patrons to sit anywhere on the Roof except in the center sections, it is asserted, the many boxes and seats on the right and left of the center sections remaining unfilled.

Flynn to Direct Mix in "The Untamed"

After completing "Big Jim O'Kane," the fifth Fox feature in which he has directed William Russell on the Fox program, and having established that popular artist as a Fox star, Emmett J. Flynn has been assigned to direct Tom Mix, the daredevil of the screen, in what is declared to be the greatest story in which that dashing Western actor has appeared—"The Untamed," by Max Brand.

The Mix-Flynn Company will leave Hollywood early next week for the California mountains. It is expected that six weeks will be spent there making the exteriors.

Universal Serials Are Going Strong

The new Universal serial, "The Moon Riders," is causing much favorable comment by the exhibitors who have booked it, states Universal. It is full of real western action. Art Acord, who plays the lead, is well known as "Buck Parvin," the screen cowboy hero of the stories which ran in the Saturday Evening Post a few years ago. Supporting Art Acord is Mildred Moore, a former "Follies beauty." The second episode will be released May 3rd. The thirteenth episode of "Elmo the Fearless" is ready for release.

Charles Urban Offers Single Reel Novelty

Charles Urban, president of the Kineto Company of America, has devised a new kind of screen entertainment, the distribution of which in the United States and Canada will shortly be announced.

The novelty will be known as "Movie Chats" and its aim is "to offer pictorial information in the chatty, informal style of one who has traveled much and observed much." Mr. Urban's staff includes Norris Wilcox, Carl Horton Pierce, and Henry McMahon.

Geraghty Will Write for Famous Players

Thomas J. Geraghty, scenario writer, has just signed a long-term contract with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, according to announcement by Jesse L. Lasky, First Vice-President.

He will be attached to the scenario staff of the company at the Lasky studio and his first work will be the scenarioizing of "Burglar Proof" for Bryant Washburn, Paramount-Artcraft star, which picture will be made following "A Full House," on which Mr. Washburn is now engaged.

"His Temporary Wife" Winning Bookings

Fulfilling the prophecies made before release date, "His Temporary Wife," the Hodkinson all-star production, is bringing in a steady stream of contract bookings, according to the producers. Following its big week engagement at Tom Moore's Strand theatre, Washington, D. C., "His Temporary Wife" played to excellent business at fully fifty first- run theatres.

Objects to a Ban on the Serial

R. H. COCHRANE, vice-president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has taken vigorous objection to published reports of the National Motion Picture League urging a ban on serials. Far from agreeing that serials are detrimental to moving picture progress and harmful to certain classes of patrons, Mr. Cochrane maintains that there is just as much need for good serials as for any other film product, and that high-class serials are coming into their own in the best houses.

"The National Motion Picture League," explained the film official, "has been fit to convey to the public a series of reports emanating from various public school principals flaying certain phases of the motion picture industry. I am heartily in accord with all attempts to better the industry, but I find it necessary to take exception to certain activities of this League.

"Where official or unofficial organizations are formed to further the interest of the screen, they deserve encouragement and co-operation by film men and by the general public. Such organizations, however, have their greatest scope in aiding the exhibitor to present his pictures under the most acceptable conditions. Where there are adequate laws regulating motion picture exhibitons, they should co-operate with the exhibitor to obtain the maximum possible observance of such laws. Where there are no adequate laws, it is to their interest to further proper legislation.

"The average exhibitor is only too willing to improve the conditions in his theatre. He cannot be held responsible for the individual actions of each of his patrons. He

"It is unwise, however, for volunteer screen improvement societies to take upon themselves censorship authority. There already are sufficient censor boards—more than enough, in fact. It is equally as harmful for volunteer organizations to attempt to influence the policies of the picture producers. Film manufacturers take good care to make only the kind of pictures the public wants to see.

"The National Motion Picture League has recently disseminated reports condemning serials on the ground of sensationalism, and because they are alleged to form the 'motion picture habit.' The League further pretends to trace a devious connection between serials and juvenile delinquency.

"Nothing could be more erroneous or absurd. Serials have a well-defined place in moving picture programs. Any attempt to cast dispersion upon them is to exhibit an ignorance of the reasons why serials are popular.

"The serial is the continued story of the screen. In serials the plot, characterization and action can be developed to an extent not possible in a five or six-reel photodrama. Just as a man delights in picking up his weekly periodical one evening a week and reading the installment of some popular novel, so the motion picture fan relishes the weekly episode of his serial. It is about as conducive to 'the moving picture habit,' whatever kind of a disease that may be, as a Saturday afternoon trip to the public library is conducive to the bookworm malady.

"Terror Island" is Released

Houdini and Enid Bennett Productions on Paramount Schedule

ONE of the real high spots of the Paramount-Artcraft schedule, it is declared, is "Terror Island," Houdini's second feature production which, along with "The False Road," a Thomas H. Ince production starring Enid Bennett, which was released April 18.

Arthur B. Reeve and John W. Grey, who wrote Houdini's successful Paramount-Artcraft thriller, "The Grim Game," are the authors of "Terror Island." The latter, moreover, is said to be a unique creation of its kind, in that it not only fits the peculiar talents of Houdini like a glove even better than did "The Grim Game"—but it also involves a thoroughly romantic story in which the love element is uppermost.

The writing of the scenario was entrusted to Walter Woods, one of the most experienced of the Famous Players-Lasky staff scenarists, who won, perhaps, his highest honors when he put "The Grim Game" into screen form. James Cruze, who has won distinction with his production starring Wallace Reid, was the director. Several novel locations had to be dug up, at least five hundred extras were used, and the action throughout was of the lightning speed, dangerous type that taxes the nerves and ingenuity of a director to the utmost.

The story of "Terror Island" presents Houdini as the inventor of a secret submarine device with which he hopes to salvage the cargoes of wrecked ships.

Finkelstein Rubin Book "The Sagebrusher"

On the heels of their success with Benjamin B. Hampton's Zane Grey production, "Desert Gold," Finkelstein and Rubin, the Northwest exhibitors with a chain of theatres in Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth, have given Mr. Hampton's newest W. W. Hodkinson release, "The Sagebrusher," their approval in the form of a big contract-booking whereby the Emerson Hough production will be given early presentation for week runs at the Finkelstein and Rubin houses.

Barret McCormick, the prominent Indianapolis showman, also has booked "The Sagebrusher" for a week's showing at his Mister Smith theatre.

Springfield Operators Get Wage Increase

Springfield, Illinois, motion picture operators have been given an increase in pay and a shortening of hours. The new scale, which went into effect April 1, calls for $30 a week, with two operators in all downtown theatres, each man working a six-hour day. This applies to the Lyric, Gaiety, Princess and to the Vaudette, which will be opened in the fall.

The second run theatres pay the first operator a $32.50 scale, with a man and a half in charge. This means that there will be three operators for two theatres. Theatres included in this arrangement are Royal, Savoy, Amuse-U and Capitol.

New Scenic To Be Made By Marion H. Kohn

Closely following his announcement that he would shortly take over the production and distribution of a prominent new weekly, Marion H. Kohn president of the Marion H. Kohn Productions, has stated that he is about to enter the scenic field. Death Valley, made famous in many novels has been picked by Mrs. Kohn as the first target for his cameramen.

GEORGES CARPENTIER IN RING TOGS AT LAST

FOR the first time since his arrival in America, Georges Carpentier will fight in ring costume next Monday evening in the Solax Studio, Fort Lee, N. J. The appearance will be a part of Carpentier's American society drama, which is being directed by John G. Adolfi, and which is to be distributed by Robertson-Cole.

The many efforts made since Carpentier's arrival in America to get him into the ring to show his physical development have been of no avail, owing to the terms of his contract with Robertson-Cole, says a statement from the office of that organization. To the fight scheduled for Monday night 500 well-known New Yorkers, sporting editors, trade-paper and newspaper writers, sporting scribes and critics have been invited. Carpentier will meet a real fighter, it is announced, and thus the bout is expected to possess all the elements of a genuine ring encounter.

"Buddy" Post Comedies Issued by Goldwyn

"Buddy" Post, in two-reel Capitol Comedies, to be produced by the National Film Corporation, will be distributed through Goldwyn exchanges, beginning at an early date, according to an announcement issued by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation this week. The first of the pictures starring the giant comedian is being completed at the Coast Studios of the National Corporation. Whether or not the working title of the initial comedy will be retained, "Love and Loot," is undetermined. In his new series of Capitol Comedies, "Buddy" is directed by Mark Goldaine, who also directed Neal Burns. Helen Howard, a clever ingenue, has been selected to play opposite "Buddy."

Kohn Busy Producing in Hollywood Studios

The Marion H. Kohn pictures which are being filmed on the National Film Corporation lot, are reported to be keeping the Hollywood studios agog with activity. It has been decided to revive "Sheriff Nell," the character made famous by Polly Moran when she was on the Keystone payroll. The new "Sheriff Nell" comedies will be written by Harry Wulze and directed by Warde Hayes. In the first of these, "Sheriff Nell on the Job," Polly Moran appears with some very unique and exciting slapstick innovations.

Grace Cunard has finished her third serio-western, "A Daughter of the Law" and is now at work figuring out some new stunts to add dash to her next picture.

New Publicity Manager for American

Grace Wynden-Vail, who recently completed the publicity for Numa Pictures Corporations production of "The Return of Tarzan," is now associated with the American Cinema in like capacity. During this past week she has covered the activities of both companies, but will soon sever her Numa affiliations. Mrs. Vail has had splendid training for her work, having served her apprenticeship in newspaper work on dailies in Madison and Milwaukee, Wisconsin; Battle Creek, Mich. and Chicago. She handled publicity for the Crescent Amusement Company at Nashville, Tenn., for Tony Sudekum, for Jake Wells in Atlanta, and for Gaumont at Jacksonville.

McLaughlin Busy Casting for New Pic ture

Robert McLaughlin, author of "The House Without Children" and "Hidden Charms," both state-right productions made by Argus Enterprises under the direction of Samuel R. Bradley and distributed by Robert W. Priest through The Film Market, Inc., is in New York selecting players for his new picture production to be made by Bradley Features, Inc., and his Cleveland summer stock company.

Hank Mann Comedies Are Sold Abroad

The Paris office of the Arrow Film Corporation has just concluded a deal whereby it has sold the Arrow-Hank Mann two reel comedies for France, Switzerland, Holland, Belgium, Spain and Portugal. These comedies have also been sold for South America, New Zealand, South Africa, India, Burma and Ceylon.

Publicity Manager Returns From Auto Trip

Agnes Egan Cobb, of Schomer-Ross productions, has returned to New York from a motor trip to Washington, where she visited the various exchanges. "The Sacred Flame," featuring Emily Stevens, which Miss Cobb is now exploiting, is being handled by the Screen-Art Picture Corporation of Philadelphia in that territory.

Transatlantic Sells Feature

C. H. Hoagland Describes "Common Level," New State Rights Picture

PLANS for the sale of "A Common Level," a six reel special production made by Transatlantic Film Corporation, are now in full swing, according to an announcement of Herbert C. Hoagland, vice-president and general manager of the company. The picture will be distributed on a state rights basis, and Massachusetts and several other states have already been disposed of.

The picture is a product of two continents, some of the scenes having been made in Europe and others in America. Claire Whitney and Edmund Breese are the featured players and Burton King directed, while the story is from the pen of Lloyd Lonergan. Care in production is evident throughout and it is said that in some scenes fully 8,500 people appear before the camera. The cost of the feature is well above the $200,000 mark.

"It is going to prove a real sensational picture," said Mr. Hoagland, in describing the production, "for besides the spectacular element, there is a gripping story of modern American life, showing how the moneymad business man of today, fights with his dollars, as Attila the Hun fought with his sword, to accomplish his designs."

Mr. Hoagland is a newcomer with Transatlantic. He started with Pathe twelve years ago and was partly responsible for the first news reel and the Pathe serial program. During the war he served abroad as director general for Europe of the division of films of the United States Bureau of Public Information.

A new era of activity of Transatlantic will be begun soon, stated Mr. Hoagland, with the production of American stories, with American casts, in foreign settings. Details of the plan are promised shortly.

Plan Serial's Exploitation

Canyon Pictures at Work on Campaign to Push "Vanishing Trails"

THE Canyon Pictures Corporation, which has just announced that "Vanishing Trails," the new fifteen episode serial, produced by Colonel William Selig, featuring Franklyn Farnum and Mary Anderson, will be state righted, and are already at work on a big exploitation campaign for this production, it is stated.

Jack Weinberg, president of the company, left for a trip to the Coast last week, where he will confer with Colonel Selig regarding future productions, featuring Franklyn Farnum, the popular western character, and will en route also visit many of the prominent state right buyers. J. M. Goldstein, secretary and treasurer of the company, will handle other sales from the New York office.

The success enjoyed with the two-reel Farnum Westerns produced at the Selig Studios, led to the production of "Vanishing Trails," and Mr. Weinberg is taking many new western stories to the Coast with him, which will be used in future Farnum productions In addition to a contributing staff, which includes such writers as Frederic Chapin, author of "The Lost City"; William E. Wing, author of "Vanishing Trails"; E. M. Bower, Bertram Sinclair and many others, the company should have a list of very pretentious material. Leon de la Mothe will direct Mr. Farnum in his new productions. Mr. La Mothe also directed "Vanishing Trails."

Maurie Meyers will handle the publicity and advertising campaign on the serial and the new Farnum productions. The company will work in direct cooperation with the state right buyers, and they are planning a press book comprising nearly forty pages, according to reports.

Broadway Cabaret Used In Jans Production

In order to supply the proper atmosphere and details for "Madonnas And Men," the eight reel special produced by B. A. Rolfe for Jans Pictures Inc., Herman F. Jans, president, rented the Palais Royal, one of Broadway's cabarets, for two days for the purpose of filming scenes. Director Rolfe, the players, and four hundred extras were on hand and the entire place was transformed into a busy cafe.

According to Director Rolfe, the cabaret scenes are some of the most important in the production and he feels that in order to bring the proper atmosphere into the story it would be better to secure the scenes from the real thing instead of building a set. Owing to the fact that quite a number of scenes had to be taken the cafe was rented for an extra day.

Oscar Jacobs Finishes "The White Rider"

The Oscar Jacobs Productions have completed their first feature photoplay, a mystery drama of the Southwest, entitled "The White Rider." This company has been formed to produce Western pictures of life in the great outdoors. Eileen Sedgwick and Joe Moore are featured in the cast, which also includes Robert Gray, Robert Kortman and G. A. Williams. William J. Craft directed "The White Rider."

Southern States Sold For "The Confession"

George H. Davis, owner of "The Confession" the National Film Corporation production featuring Henry B. Walthall, has announced the sale of Tennessee and Kentucky territory to Colonel Fred. Preparing Five-Reel Comedy

FINE ART PICTURES, INC., of which Murray W. Garsson is president and Charles F. Schwerin secretary and treasurer, will prepare the five reel super comedy production, "Up in Mary's Attic," for independent buyers of the country. This picture is described as original, clever, and of a type of comedy never before offered the market. It is a five reeler, built to sparkle, and sparkle it does, if previews of some of the prints are indications of what is coming, says the Fine Art Pictures.

"Up in Mary's Attic" will receive more concentrated exploitation than any other five-reel comedy ever manufactured, according to executives of the Fine Art organizations. A vast quantity of posters, printed matter and other accessories have already been placed upon order, it is declared, while an extended advertising campaign will be started shortly in the trade press.

The Fine Arts Pictures concern has the following statement to make about its forth-coming release:

"'Up in Mary's Attic' takes its plot from the story of the beautiful girl in the —— but the story is one of its most scintillating features, and must not be divulged. Suffice it to say that charming Eva Novak and Harry Gribbon, the inimitable comedian, never had more delightful parts in any picture, and never did either of them appear to better advantage than in this special production.

"The super-comedy will be ready for showing within six weeks it is believed. With more than sixty thousand feet of negative to work from, Elmer J. McGovern, who edited 'Mickey' and a score of other shining successes, has started to work. He has said that it will require more than a month to whip the feature into best shape.

'A special and particularly interesting feature of 'Up in Mary's Attic' is the fact that more than a hundred of the most charming and bewitching bathing beauties it was possible to assemble form a graceful background for much of the action and the development of the story. Each one of this bevy passed muster in the judgment of a number of judges of feminine beauty before being given a part in the picture. They are the liveliest, most bewitching set of sirens who ever faced a camera, according to those who have seen the picture.

"The development of the original story related in the film sets this comedy apart as one of the most novel and delightful productions of the year, it has been said. 'It is a smashing comedy hit!' declared one New York exchangeman, after viewing several reels of it. 'It is the type of high comedy the independent market has never as yet had, and is one that the boys will certainly be glad to get!'

"Although a release date has not yet been set, Mr. Schwerin, who is in charge of sales, has received innumerable requests for information regarding the feature, and one prominent buyer has already made a substantial bid for rights to the entire West."

Educational Gets "Torchy"

Contract Calls for Thirteen Two Reelers; Release Every Four Weeks

E. W. HAMMONS, vice-president and general manager of Educational Films Corporation, announces that his company has acquired the "Torchy" Comedies, produced by Master Films, Inc. The contract calls for thirteen of these two-reel comedies, from the stories by Sewell Ford and starring Johnny Hines, to be supplied in a year. They will be released every four weeks, the first to be available soon after the opening of Educational's new exchanges.

First of these comedies, titled simply as "Torchy," was recently given a pre-release showing at the Strand theatres in Manhattan and Brooklyn, where it was given enthusiastic receptions by the fans and won unusual praise from the daily newspaper and trade press critics. President Charles C. Burr, of Master Films, has been able to give Mr. Hammons ample assurance that the other comedies to be produced will be fully up to the same standard.

Crane. Great care has been taken in casting the picture, beauty and freshness among the women and youth and cleverness on the part of many of the male support being required. Certain of the characters will probably to carried through the series.

"Torchy" comedies are expected to have an unusual appeal to the exhibitor not only on account of the worth of the productions themselves, but because of the widespread popularity of the star. These stories have been appearing in leading magazines and newspapers for several years and already seven volumes of the stories have been published by N. J. Clode, who is one of the officials of the producing company.

Johnny Dooley Coming in Five Part Farce

According to announcement from Radin Pictures, Johnny Dooley, the Ziegfeld Follies star, will soon make his appearance in a five-part farce comedy now being completed under the direction of Jack Schultz, who supervised the shorter length comedies which served to introduce Dooley to the screen.

Practically all of the picture has been filmed and the final scenes will be photographed in Philadelphia when the Ziegfeld Follies Company arrives in that city to play an engagement at the Forrest theatre.

Inter-Ocean Acquires "The Gift Supreme"

Private showings of "The Gift Supreme," recently acquired by Inter-Ocean Film Corporation for exclusive foreign distribution, have disclosed a production which, in the opinion of many Inter-Ocean officials, is one of the finest pictures it has had the privilege of offering to foreign buyers in many moons. The story was adapted to the screen from the "best seller" of the same name by George Allan England, under the direction of Ollie Sellers.

Southern Theatre Does Well With Serial

From the National theatre in Ybor City comes the spontaneous appreciation of "The Hawk's Trail," starring King Baggott, Grace Darmond and Rhea Mitchell, and produced by Burston Films, Inc. Benny and Annette Put on Boxing Bout

Benny Leonard, the lightweight champion, recently met Annette Kellerman at a dinner party on the Coast. "Can you swim?" asked the Diving Venus of the pugilist. Benny deliberated, and after a pause responded, "Some; can you box?" Annette replied she could, but would like to know a little more of the game. A lesson was forthwith arranged, and Benny and Annette put on the gloves. Be it said to Benny's credit, that although Miss Kellerman proved to be a shifty opponent, the only time she landed on Benny was when they both posed for the still camera.

Arrow Six Reeler is Offered to Buyers

The Arrow Film Corporation report a new six-reel feature called "The Daughter of the Don," which is to be offered to State Right buyers. It deals with the feuds between the Californians and the Mexicans. There are said to be some very stirring scenes in this picture and through it all runs a love story that will have a big appeal to all classes of motion picture fans.

The Arrow reports that when the print of this subject had been in this office only a short time, two big sales are reported.

Burton King Completes Cast for New Film

Madelyn Clare has been signed for the heavy role in "The Hidden Path," Burton King's second independent production. This completes the cast, which includes Grace Darling and Rod La Rocque in the leading roles; William H. Turner, James Cooley, William Corbett and John Nicholson. Lloyd Lonergan wrote the continuity.

"Blind Love" Sold for Northern New York

Aywon Film Corporation, handling the distribution of Gerald F. Bacon's "Blind Love," starring Lucy Cotton, has sold the northern New York territory to the Robins Film Corporation, Utica, New York. The Robins Film Corporation will present Bacon's picture as a special attraction.

Jans is Planning Exploitation

Special Campaign Book for Olive Tell's New Picture

NOW that the second of the Jans Pictures, Inc., featured in which Olive Tell is the star has been completed and is ready for screening, the company announces its plans for special exploitation and publicity on the photodrama.

Much is to be made of the title "A Woman's Business," an adaption of Charles Belmont Davis' popular novel "Nothing A Year." Various ways in which this title can be used for advertising and publicity purposes will be carefully explained and outlined in the elaborate campaign book now being prepared.

This campaign book will contain many unusual features that will, it is claimed, be of decided interest to the exhibitor. Every effort is being made to get away from the cut and dried ideas that have been used in press books for so long, and to introduce novel and original exploitation stunts that will go a long way toward bringing in extra business at the box office during the run of this Jans feature.

Special attention will be given to various ways in which the theatre manager can tie up with local merchants, organizations and clubs while many new ideas in the way of advance advertising will be suggested. Newspaper advertisements will be prepared that will not only advertise the picture itself but will also advertise the theatre in which it is playing and the balance of the bill to be presented at the same time. In other words the material presented in the campaign book, "A Woman's Business," will not only help the exhibitor obtain publicity on the picture but on his theatre as well.

In addition to all the publicity and advertising suggestions outlined in the campaign book Jans Pictures, Inc., are making arrangements whereby the home office of the organization will co-operate with exhibitors in the matter of exploitation. Exhibitors who book this picture, through the various independent exchanges, no matter where located, can depend on the heartiest kind of assistance from the home office of the producers in "putting the picture over." Experienced exploitation men will have this matter in charge and the exhibitor may rest assured that the best in the way of exploitation will be made available for them at all times.

Herman E. Jans, president of Jans Pictures, Inc., knowing the exhibiting business as he does from actual experience, believes that the arrangements his organization is making to help the exhibitor in putting the company's pictures over will develop into the finest kind of co operation that has ever been instituted in this regard.

Dodge Sells Oil Production

Capital Film Acquires World's Rights of Texas Oil Field Story

B. Herbert Milligan, general manager and treasurer of Capital Film Company

THE Capital Film Company through Manager B. Herbert Milligan has just closed a contract with the M. A. Dodge Film Company for the world distribution of "Witches Gold," the first of a series of pictures made in the atmosphere of and based on the stirring life and dramatic environment of the great Texas oil fields.

The scenes of the picture were personally directed by M. A. Dodge and the entire company was taken from California to the northern Texas oil fields on two trips to complete the exterior scenes in the oil fields where the two greatest wells have been brought in during the last year or two and make the setting of the picture realistic.

Mr. Milligan believes that the Capital Film Company has a genuine find in this picture as the subject of oil is the liveliest fiction topic of today in the United States and the public generally is deeply interested in oil, in fact every other person you meet has some shares in an oil company, he states. Mr. Milligan sees great exploitation possibilities for the production and declares that the picture will make good any advertising given it.

Other announcements of interest to the industry are expected from the Capital Film Company within the next two weeks.

Inter-Ocean Plans for 1920

Year's Releasing Schedule Said to Contain Many Big Productions

A WIDE variety of subjects is offered to foreign buyers this year by Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, according to a statement issued this week from the New York offices of the company.

The 1920 list of Inter-Ocean releases is said to embrace a number of "special" productions which will be obtained for exclusive foreign distribution from the ranks of many well-known producers. In this connection, plans have already been made with a number of independent producers for the acquisition of several "specials," the titles of which will be announced as soon as details are perfected. While none of the names of the producers in question has been divulged, it is understood that they are well-known producing organizations specializing in the production of high-grade independent attractions.

Conspicuous among Inter-Ocean's 1920 list of releases is the series of Louis Tracy Productions now in the course of production by Gibraltar Pictures, Inc., under the direction of William Worthington. The first of this series of pictures, "The Silent Barrier," has already been completed, and is now available for distribution in foreign markets. The reputation of Louis Tracy as a novelist and a journalist is not confined to America and England; his works have been translated and are known in several foreign tongues. Among Mr. Tracy's works which will be transferred to the screen are "The Bartlett Mystery," "The Terms of Surrender," "His Unknown Wife," "The Stowaway," "Diana of the Moorland," "Cynthia's Chauffeur," "The Wheel of Fortune," "The Red Year," "The Revelers," "The Postmaster's Daughter," "The Message," "The Captain of the Kansas" and "Karl Krier."

"The Gift Supreme," recently acquired by Inter-Ocean Film Corporation for exclusive foreign distribution, is another of Inter-Ocean's 1920 releases. The production was made by the McCauley's Photoplays, Inc., producers of "Bearcat," a picture which has been successfully distributed in foreign territories by the Inter-Ocean sales force. Following the release of "The Gift Supreme," the producers will film another production, which, under the terms of a contract, will be taken over for foreign distribution by Inter-Ocean. Production of the new picture has already been started, though the name of this release has not yet been decided.

In addition, Inter-Ocean Film Corporation will, in all likelihood, take over a number of other productions for foreign distribution during the course of the year.

The production will be backed up by an extensive advertising and publicity campaign in the domestic and foreign trade press, which is to be conducted under the supervision of A. L. Feinman, in charge of Inter Ocean's advertising and publicity.

WARNER BROTHERS announce the first independent release of the Al. St. John comedies which is entitled "Trouble." Heretofore the Al. St. John comedies were produced by the Warner Brothers, were released by the Famous Players-Lasky Corp., and were known as the Paramount Al. St. John Comedies; but since that company discontinued short reel subjects, the Warner Brothers made arrangements to release these comedies to the independent field.

There will be twelve of these comedies a year, released at intervals of one every month. This will enable the independent exchanges and exhibitors throughout the country to meet the problems arising from the desire of the public to see good comedies.

Although the first independent release has just been announced, the following state right buyers have bought the distribution rights for their respective territories, and, it will be seen from the list that some of the foremost exchanges throughout the country will release these comedies, which in itself is an endorsement that Al. St. John is a box office attraction.

The Criterion Film Service, Atlanta, Georgia; First National Exchange, Chicago, Illinois; First National Exchange, Pittsburgh, Pa.; First National Exchange, Louisville, Ky.; Grand Central Film Company, St. Louis, Mo.; A. H. Blank Enterprises, Des Moines, Ia.; H. Lieber Company, Indianapolis, Ind.; First National Exchange, Los Angeles, Cal.; All Star Features Distribution, Inc., San Francisco, Cal.; Robbins Film Co., Utica, New York; First National Exchange, Cleveland, Ohio; Electric Theatre Supply Co., Philadelphia, Penn.

Thirty Reelcraft Exchanges

New Producers and Distributors of Short Subjects in Many Cities

REELCRAFT PICTURES CORPORATION, the recently organized producer and distributor of short subjects exclusively, lists thirty of the leading independent exchanges as distributors of the Reelcraft program.

The independent exchanges listed includes besides the five Reelcraft exchanges in New York, Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, and Indianapolis, the Standard Film Service, Cleveland, Ohio; Standard Film Co., Detroit, Mich.; Standard Film Co., Cincinnati, Ohio; R. D. Lewis Film Co., Dallas, Texas; R. D. Lewis Film Co., Oklahoma City, Okla.; R. D. Lewis Film Co., San Antonio, Texas; R. D. Lewis Film Co., Little Rock, Ark.; Arrow Photoplays Co., Denver, Colo.; Arrow Film Co., Boston, Mass.; Consolidated Film Co., San Francisco, Cal.; Consolidated Film Co., Los Angeles, Cal.; Crescent Film Co., Kansas City, Mo.; Dooley Exchange, Inc., Syracuse, N. Y.; Dooley Exchange, Inc., Buffalo, N. Y.; E. & H. Distributing Co., Atlanta, Ga.; Eltrabran Film Co., Charlotte, N. C.; Exhibitors Film Exchange, Washington, D. C.; Greater Features Films, Inc., Seattle, Wash.; Magnet Film Co., Davenport, Iowa; Masterpiece Film Co., Philadelphia, Pa.; Quality Film Co., Pittsburgh, Pa.; United Film Service, St. Louis, Mo.; and the Samuel Exchanges in Canada.

Chaplin Comedies Are Being Well Received

The offices of Victor Kremer Film Features, Inc., report continued interest in their four-part Chaplin Comedy—"A Burlesque on Carmen," and the "Champion," "Jitney Elopement," "Work" and "By the Sea."

Victor Kremer, president of the organization, now touring the country in the interest of these pictures, has consummated a deal whereby the Standard Film Corp., of St. Louis, acquired the four short length Chaplins.

Arrangements were also consummated this week between Sid Grauman, of Grauman's theatre, Los Angeles, and Victor Kremer Film Features, Inc., whereby the "Champion," starring Charlie Chaplin, will be given a run of two weeks or more at Grauman's theatre in Los Angeles. The length of the engagement is unprecedented inasmuch as the "Champion" is a two-part comedy.

Offer is Received by Owners of "Democracy—the Vision Restored"

MANY inquiries from distributors, state rights buyers, and exhibitors are arriving daily at the offices of the Democracy Photoplay Company regarding the drama, "Democracy—The Vision Restored."

"The eagerness of shrewd state rights buyers in many parts of the country for this screen attraction would seem to point to that field as the logical avenue of release," states Lee Francis Lybarger. "However, I am in no haste to tie up my picture with exclusive contracts in any territory, at least for the present time. Primarily, I am considering an excellent offer advanced by a leading theatrical manager to present 'Democracy—The Vision Restored' as a regular legitimate theatre attraction in New York and other important cities of the United States."

"Democracy—The Vision Restored" was directed by William Nigh. It has as its theme the solution of the elimination of the great problem of class hatred. It is said to contain a delightful, soul-gripping romance of graphic realism.

Our-Door Advertising Started By Pioneer

The first step in the plan recently approved by the Pioneer's General Staff for a country-wide exploitation of its product through a medium of out-door advertising was made last week. Broadway was invaded by two huge illuminated signs, one on "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" with Sheldon Lewis, and the other on "Bubbles" in which Mary Anderson plays the leading role.

Kellerman Film Shows 75-foot Dive

A seventy-five foot dive from the mast of a full-rigged schooner yacht into the rather tempestuous waters of the Pacific Ocean off the coast of Balboa Beach, California, was the feature, it is stated, of the final week of scene shooting for Annette Kellerman's newest starring vehicle, which the diving Venus is making under the Sol Lesser banner.

The Kellerman picture, which is the star's first modern comedy-drama, has been sixteen weeks in the filming and has already run up a cost-sheet in excess of $225,000, it is asserted.

Albert Capellani Has Started Production

Albert Capellani has started on his first Cosmopolitan production, "The Inside of the Cup," by Winston Churchill. The cast consists of W. P. Carleton, David Torrence, Jack Bohn, Richard Carlisle, Margaret Clayton, and Margaret Seddons. Dan Pennell is Capellani's assistant, and Al Ziegler is the cameraman. The big interior scenes are being taken at the Cosmopolitan studio, in 127th street and Second avenue, while the lesser interiors are filmed at the studio in West 125th street.

Director Edwards Dies While on Vacation

A cablegram received last Wednesday by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, announced the death in Honolulu, Hawaii, of Walter Edwards, for the past three years a director of Paramount Artcraft pictures. The message was very brief and omitted all details as to the cause. Mr. Edwards was on a vacation on the island.

David Kirkland Sails for Europe May 15

Another member of the motion picture profession joined the transoceanic movement yesterday when David Kirkland, director for Constance Talmadge in the John-Emerson-Anita Loos comedies, announced that he will sail to Europe on May 15th.

An exciting moment in Pathe's serial production, "Trailed by Three"

Pathe Serial Units Are Busy

THE announcement last week by Pathe that the Gasnier Production, "The Third Eye," co-starring Warner Oland and Eileen Percy, would follow "Daredevil Jack," on the serial program of that company, designates May 23 as the day on which the third fifteen episode serial of the year will be released by Pathe, and indicates the elaborate plans of the company for its 1920 serial program.

The first offering of the year, "Daredevil Jack," released February 15, was produced at the Robert Brunton Studios. "Trailed by Three," which began its run on April 3, is an independent production from the Arthur F. Beck Serials Productions, Inc., while Pathe's next offering comes from the Astra Studios of Louis J. Gasnier.

At present Pathe serials in the making are in production at two studios, the George B. Seitz Studio in New York, and the Astra plant in Glendale, where Ruth Roland has her company at work on a new episode film.

The Seitz Studio is the scene of activity for two companies, the Seitz unit which is producing a serial in which Mr. Seitz will co-star with Marguerite Courtot, and the Juanita Hansen Company, which is making headway on a scenario written by Seitz and being directed by Bertram Millahuser.

Charles Hutchison is now in Los Angeles, and as the present plans called for him to start work on his first serial under his new contract with Pathe on April 19, at the Brunton Studio, four companies are now producing Pathe serials.

Charlotte Merriam in "The Honey Bee"

Charlotte Merriam is an actress of seventeen who is seen in the vivacious role of "Blondie" in "The Honey Bee," with Mme. Marguerite Sylva. During her two years' motion picture career she has made an enviable reputation for herself in comedy parts. However, Miss Merriam has a decided preference for dramatic work and is working toward that end.

"The Silver Horde" is Booked for Capitol

Rex Beach's latest, and, according to all reports, his greatest production, will have its first showing in New York at the Capital theatre, where it has been booked for the week beginning May 9.

The success of the production at a number of pre-release presentations in large western theatres justifies the faith, it is stated, which the Goldwyn executives manifested in "The Silver Horde" by placing it in the class of specials. The picture is in seven reels that unfold a dramatic story in an Alaskan setting.

Forestry Department Praises Picture

To supplement the many expressions of exhibitor approval voiced about "Back to God's Country," the Curwood-Carver attraction distributed by First National Exhibitors' Circuit, the Canadian Department of Interior Forestry has bestowed upon the producers warm words of thanks.

The instance in the picture which accounts for the attention of the Branch of Forestry occurs at a point where a member of the Canadian police has trapped an outlaw at the latter's fireside in the Canadian woods.

"Slam Bang Jim" Brings Box Office Returns

A heavy volume of business continues to come in on the latest American comedy-drama starring William Russell, "Slam-Bang Jim." William Russell and a strong supporting cast put it over with great success and the producers report that this picture is bringing good prices and long runs.

Elmo Lincoln Coming In New Serial

A new serial proposed for Elmo Lincoln, the star in "Elmo the Mighty" and "Elmo the Fearless," the two Universal serials, will be called "The Lightning's Eye." The story and scenario are by Phillip Hubbard and A. H. Gooden.

Harry Ham, foreign representative for Marshall Neilan

Neilan Party to Work During Ocean Voyage

Harry Ham, Marshall Neilan's foreign representative, has just arrived in London to make advance arrangements for the production of European subjects made under Mr. Neilan's direction. Passage has been engaged for an entire producing unit which will accompany Mr. Neilan abroad, and a large part of the boat will be reserved for the exclusive use of the film people, it is stated. During the trip over the company will be busy going over the scripts of the pictures to be staged abroad, and much of the preliminary work in conjunction with the actual shooting of scenes will be attended to enroute, it is planned.

Activities at the Neilan studio in Hollywood are being speeded up so that a third production following, "Don't Ever Marry," will be completed before he leaves.

Morey Made Manager for Robertson-Cole

M. E. Morey, known as one of the most capable executives and as one of the best salesmen in the motion picture industry in New England, has just been appointed manager of the Boston exchange for Robertson-Cole to succeed F. F. Kimmerle, resigned.

UNIVERSAL

THIS week saw four companies making two reel films. The list of producing units includes Jacques Jaccard directing Leonard Clapman and Virginia Fair in "The Scarlet Rider"; Phillip Rosen, "Neath Purple Skies," with Magda Lane, Alfred Regnier, Clarence Hodge and Joseph Neary; Jack Ford making the western, "Two from Texas," with J. Farrell Macdonald, Ethel Ritchey, Jennie Lee, Dick Cummings and others, and the "Hoot" Gibson Company directed by Mack Wright, now producing "The Bronco Kid." Yvette Mitchell is playing the lead opposite Gibson. Another company under the direction of William J. Craft has just completed a two-reel western, "The White Rider," which features Eileen Sedgwick and Joe Moore.

Four feature producing companies continue. Lynn Reynolds is at work on "The Red Lane," with Frank Mayo; Rollin Sturgeon continues on "The Girl in the Rain," featuring Ann Cornwall; Harry Franklin is nearing the completion of "Alias Miss Dodd" with Edith Roberts, and another week will see the completion of Harry Carey's subject, "Human Stuff."

Three companies are busy with the making of Universal comedies. Noel Smith is directing Harry Mann in "Love and Gasoline"; J. A. Howe is making "Stripes and Stars," featuring Billy Engel and Jessie Fox, and Fred Fishback has just finished making a comedy featuring Jimmy Adams which will be released under the title of "A Movie Hero."

INCE STUDIOS

A WESTERN story which gives Enid Bennett the name part in "The Boss of the Big Bonanza" was put in production this week under the direction of Fred Niblo. Many of the scenes will be laid on the California desert with a number of night shots of camp life.

The title for the Ince special production featuring Lloyd Hughes, originally "Wheelbarrow Webster," has been changed to "Homespun Folk," and is now ready for release. Rowland Lee, who has appeared in several Thomas H. Ince and J. Parker Read productions has been selected for the featured role in a forthcoming Ince special production. Definite title for this film has not been selected. The direction will be in charge of John Griffith Wray. Lee will be remembered as playing opposite Enid Bennett in "The Woman in the Suitcase."

Lewis Stone and Lloyd Hughes have been cast for important parts in the first of a series of Louis Joseph Vance stories, "Beau Revel," to be filmed by Thomas H. Ince. This story, laid in New York cabarets is now being scenarioized by Luther Reed.

Douglas MacLean and Doris May are now working in "The Yancona Yillies," adapted from the Hershall S. Hall short story of the same name. Agnes Christine Johnson wrote the continuity for this farm life comedy. The title is derived from a breed of fluffy chickens which will be used in the picture.

John H. Blackwood, scenario editor of the Ince studios, was at San Diego this week to witness the premier performance of his newest stage farce, "Coil Oil Johnny," which was produced at the Strand theatre in that city.

GARSON

UPON the return of Harry Garson, Clara Kimball Young and Herbert Somborn from a business trip to Chicago, preparations were begun for the filming of the Sir Arthur Wing Pinero play, "Mid Channel," at the Garson studios. The direction of this Harry Garson production will be in charge of Mr Garson, and the cast to support Miss Young now selected includes J. Frank Glendon, as leading man; Bertram Grassby, heavy; Edward M. Kimball, Mrs. Katherine Griffith, Eileen Robinson and Helen Sullivan. The name for this play is derived from the strip in the middle of the English channel which is always rough, and Pinero likens it to a period in the lives of many married couples when they are between the ages of thirty-five and forty-five. That period is the rough portion of married life. The play itself was an English society drama, and on the American stage it served as the starring vehicle for Ethel Barrymore.

Particular significance is attached to the booking of the Harry Garson production, "The Soul of Rafael," which has been booked by Sid Grauman for showing at Grauman's Rialto theatre for an indefinite period beginning April 26th. The play was recently completed and given its final screen examination during the past week. It is an adaptation from the Marah Ellis Ryan story of early California with the screen version by Dorothy Yost. The production will be released for general distribution in about six weeks. In the two and a half years that Grauman has conducted Los Angeles theatres, he has booked but one film production that has not born the Paramount-Artcraft trade mark, this being, "The Luck of the Irish," Mayflower production released by Realart. The engagement of this Clara Kimball Young picture at the Rialto will be for an indefinite period, and it is expected it will run at least four weeks.

F. P. LASKY

FROM the Famous Players-Lasky studios comes the announcement of renewal of the contract of Lila Lee, the engagement of Tom Geraghty as scenario writer, Frank Campeau, as character actor, and the selection of Viora Daniels as a leading woman for Roscoe Arbuckle.

According to the announcement, Lila Lee is to continue in the class of roles she has been playing for for the past several months, and similar to the one she is now taking in the William D. Taylor production of "The Boy." It is understood the contract covers a period similar to the original one made with this young actress.

Viora Daniels has been with Famous Players-Lasky for the past eight months playing minor parts of importance with the Lasky units, and her appearance opposite Roscoe Arbuckle in the screen version of "The Life of the Party," gives her her first leading woman role on the screen. Joseph Henebery is to direct this from a script prepared by Walter Woods. The Roscoe Arbuckle picture will be released as a Paramount-Artcraft subject.

Tom Geraghty is now writing his first scenario for Paramount-Artcraft release under his new engagement with this company which will be, "Burglar Proof" for Bryant Washburn, and will be made immediately following the filming of a "A Full House," the Fred Jackson play now in production with Washburn. Geraghty came west for Famous Players-Lasky about three years ago, and after a period of one year with that company did free-lancing. For the past six months Geraghty has been with Douglas Fairbanks, his most recent release being, "When the Clouds Roll By."

Frank Campeau, who has been with Douglas Fairbanks for the past two years, is to make his renewed appearance with the Famous Players-Lasky subjects in the Roscoe Arbuckle subject, "The Life of the Party."

William C. deMille has begun the filming of "Conrad in Quest of his Youth," with Tom Meighn in the title role. Meighn arrived in Los Angeles last week from New York after playing in the film version of "Civilian Clothes." The Conrad story, by Leonard Merritt, has been prepared for the screen by Olga Printzlau.

Frank B. Chamberlain, general service manager of Famous Players-Lasky, has been the guest of the studio for the past several days after making a tour of the Intermountain and coast exchanges. He was accompanied by Mrs. Chamberlain.

It has been definitely decided that William D. Taylor's next production following the filming of "The Boy," which Taylor is now working on, will be the screen version for "The Furnace," one of the notable English stories by the author known as Pan. No cast for this film has been selected to this time.

VITAGRAPH

ONE of the most spectacular thrillers ever made on the west coast for a film was that taken this week when William Duncan destroyed a bridge over a 200-foot span across a canyon in grounds adjoining the Vitagraph studio's plant. This will be used in the Duncan serial, "The Silent Avenger." The bridge was first wholly demolished by dynamite, and caught fire, making a huge conflagration.

Earle Williams, Director Chester Bennett and Cameraman Jack MacKenzie have spent a week searching for locations for this star's new story, script for which is now being prepared by J. Grubb Alexander.

R. N. Bradbury is now writing continuity for the next James Oliver Curwood super feature to be made by Vitagraph, which will be made under the direction of David Smith. Many of the scenes for this will be taken at Portland, Oregon, and Niles Welch will play the leading role.

Director Tom Terriss and Company are back from Palm Springs for a two week stay at the studio to make interior scenes for, "The Girl From the Sky," an adaptation from the Gouverneur Morris story, "Trumpet Island." As soon as interiors are completed the company will go to Catalina Islands for a stay of two weeks. Wallace MacDonald and Marguerite de la Motte are the principals.

"The Veiled Woman" serial company, under the direction of Webster Cullison, are working at Balboa, California. Antonio Moreno is the featured player of this unit, and Pauline Curley is playing opposite.

"The Hidden Danger" serial unit with Joe Ryan and Jean Page, are working on location at Chatsworth.

Joe Rock, who has played "straight" in two recent comedies made, has again returned to his eccentric make-up for the next Big V Comedy which is being directed by Grover Jones.

"Chuck" Reisner is directing Earl Montgomery who takes the part of a plumber's helper in the comedy being made; and Jesse Robbins has just finished a burlesque cowboy comedy with Jimmy Aubrey.

METRO

PLANS providing for the additional expenditure of $250,000 for buildings and equipment at the Metro West Coast studios, have been given the approval of Marcus Loew, and the work of building is to commence shortly.

The first improvement at the studios to be started will be that of the erection of a new building to be occupied exclusively by the scenario staff. This will be apart from other buildings, and adjoining will be a garden enclosed and separated entirely from the other part of the studio.

Elliot J. Clawson, late continuity writer for Goldwyn following several years with other west coast companies, has been made a member of the Metro scenario department.

The screen version of "The Marriage of William Ash," a play by Mrs. Humphrey Warde, which was the starring vehicle for Grace George, is being prepared for Metro by Percy Heath, who has just written the script for "Head and Shoulders," the Viola Dana subject.

The Bert Lytell Company has returned to the Metro studio for interior scenes for "The Temple of Dawn," following two weeks work on East India location scenes north of Hollywood. Shrine of the image of Buddha was the setting used this week by the Lytell Company. The image is considered a very remarkable bit of sculpture work, and by experts is considered authentic.

Rex Ingram and assistant have gone to San Francisco to select locations for scenes of the Drury Lane melodrama, "Hearts are Trumps," and the production work is to be started shortly.

The second Jack London story to be filmed by C. J. Scherrell is to have a title of "The Mutiny," instead of the book title, "The Mutiny of the Elsmore."

GOLDWYN

THE Goldwyn studio this week saw the beginning of two new productions. Tom Moore playing in "Officer 666," with a cast that has Jeanne Calhoun as lead, Priscilla Bonner and Hardee Kirkland, as captain of police. The other subject put in production is "Rose Alvira," starring Mabel Normand under the direction of Victor Schertzinger. The players to support Miss Normand are Hugh Thompson, Doris Pawn, Tully Marshall, Eugenie Besserer, Buster Trow and Pearl Curran.

Director Paul Scardon is continuing on the filming of "Milestones," and to his already big cast has been added Corrine Kirkham, George Swan and Jack Donovan.

The Pauline Fredericks production, "Madame X," directed by Frank Lloyd, has been finished, and after a short vacation the star will begin work on another story which will be the last for her under the present contract. Rumors have it that Miss Fredericks has contracted with First National, but no authentic statement has been made.

The first scene for the Mary Roberts Rinehart picture, "Empire Builders," have been shot by Director E. Mason Hopper, and it is expected Al Green will next week begun the filming of another Jack Pickford subject.

Director Clarence Badger continues on the Will Rogers film, "Alex Hood."

CHRISTIE

Al Christie and Scott Sidney, who were in charge of the direction of the Chuck Sales initial release, "The Smart Alec," have completed the filming of this picture, and Director Sidney is now giving his attention to the editing. General Manager A. S. Kirkpatrick, of Robertson Cole, was given a preview of the subject during his short stay in Los Angeles this week. At this time the film was in eight reels.

Work has been started on the next two reel Christie Comedy which will mark the return of Fay Tincher after a vacation of two months. Jimmie Harrison is to play the opposite lead, and other principals are Charlotte Mariam and Eddy Barry. William Beaudine, who directed the filming of "Petticoats and Pants," which is hailed as the greatest laugh maker from the Christie plant, is in charge of making this new picture.

christened. This gigantic building, the largest of its kind in the world, has a clear stage space 125x300 feet in dimension, giving a total of 37,500 square feet, with thirty feet to the eaves. Another improvement now undertaken is the extension of larger water mains, eight inch pipe being laid to all portions of the grounds. A large brick incinerator is being constructed, and will serve to destroy the waste matter of the big plant.

Robert Brunton this week decided that the big studio should have a menagerie, and when a black bear and two wolf hounds were requisitioned for pictures, he purchased them as a nucleus for the zoo.

Dustin Farnum, and Director Colin Campbell are back from the high California mountains, where snow scenes for "Big Happiness," the Robertson Cole pictures, were filmed.

Allan Dwan, of Mayflower, has gone to the National Forest reserve in Sequoia Park, where he will write the continuity for the sixth and last production for this organization.

HERE AND THERE

PANDORA Productions, Inc., who recently completed filming "The Crucifix of Destiny," from scenario by Agnes Parsons, is now preparing to film "The Shanty Boater," which is a Mississippi River story. Audrey Chapman and Wheeler Dryden are featured in "The Crucifix of Destiny."

The R. & R. Film Company, directed by George Richelavie, is now working at the Horsley studio producing "Jack Randall, U. S. S. S." Allan Russell and Betty Lindley will be principals in this film version by Capt. Harry de Windt.

Florence Vidor, last in, "The Other Half" and "The Family Honor," will be seen in King Vidor's second independent production for release through First National Exhibitors Circuit, "The Jack Knife Man," by Ellis Parker Butler, author of "Pigs is Pigs."

Marie Walcamp Back from Orient Trip

After a six months' tour in the Orient, taking scenes for a new Universal serial, "The Dragon's Net," Marie Walcamp and her company have reached San Francisco safely. She was met in person by Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, who steamed out the harbor as guest of the Collector of the Port, and boarded the Japanese steamship Tenyo Maru, bearing the Walcamp party, long before it docked.

"The Star's the Thing"—Kane

By ARTHUR S. KANE

PICTURES of prominent persons who have won fame and fortune in any position in life appearing in cinematography, or the press are viewed with a certain interest. The counterfeit presentments of Charles M. Schwab, John D. Rockefeller, Jane Addams, Thomas A. Edison, Henry Ford, Victor Herbert, Charles Dana Gibson, and other giants of commerce, art, music and social life command attention whenever they appear. Patriotism and admiration evoke applause when the rulers of the earth, warriors and statesmen pass in review before the camera.

But the deeds of all these, which make them famous, are performed out of view of the public. Great business deals which make a Schwab, mighty inventions putting an Edison among the immortals, a lifetime in the service of humanity winning renown for an Addams, the world becomes cognizant of through results—not from seeing these great feats in the doing, not from taking part in the accomplishing. The printed page, the spoken word are the means which make these personalities famous and then the published portraits, the short news glimpses in the cinema, the painter's brush endeavor to vivify their personalities. We discover they are folks just like ourselves. They are not "camera wise," and cannot fire the imagination.

How faint are these impressions of individuality compared with those created through cinematography How inadequate is printer's ink and fleeting glimpses now and then in photography to implant the magnetism, the character, the individuality when weighed against constant appearance by trained artists in today's great Forum of Personality—the motion picture!

A created work in this art form is restricted to itself. There cannot be any relation between the two. They are not inter-dependent. Each is complete. Neither supplements the other. One cannot help the other. The only connecting link is individual, a person, a live, animate being.

Now, suppose this connecting link to be an author. He cannot compete with the player in the personal element. How remote is his chance to impress his individuality compared with that of the interpreter of his works. The author is a name. He does not appear. Memory does not hold him as a constant factor, but the recurrences, the iterations, the repeated stirring of the imagination by the actual sight of the favorite player implants him in the mind of the cinemagoer.

A drama by one of the best loved and most respected of American playwrights, the author of many successes, in fact, the dean of his profession, opened recently at one of the New York theatres. Did the public support it because of its liking for the many worthy works of this man, or its adoration for him? It did not. Will the public flock to see a photoplay by the author of a previous cinema success, or even several of them? It will not. First, it does not remember the author because of the reason cited above; second, each created work must stand on its own feet. An original story prepared for the screen by the author of a great book or play success has no more advance pull with the public than the work of an unknown. The chances of getting a fine photoplay, of course, are much greater, but the anticipation and curiosity of the public are not aroused more by one than the other. Therefore, each created work lacking a star depends upon itself, and not on any continuous personal factor.

By stars are meant those created by the public. They are the only kind that draw persons, irrespective of the plays in which they appear, to the theatre showing their pictures. There can be no other kind. To my mind Charles Ray is the greatest example of the screen-made star. He has been more than seven years in the films getting to his present position. His training has been slow and arduous, full, rich and complete. Insistence by the public to see him has made him a star.

It is natural for humans to be more interested in persons they themselves have raised from children than in other beings. That is exactly the relation of the public to the star. The star is the public's own creation. He or she will continue to be vital in photoplay for all time to come, for he is the only continuous factor or connecting link between separate works that the public knows or remembers.

Fairbanks Launches a "Desert Yacht."

ONE of the strangest sights that ever cast a shadow over the Arizona desert was that introduced to that country some time ago when Douglas Fairbanks and his company of 75 people arrived near Polacco to film scenes in his next picture "The Mollycoddle," which will soon be released by United Artists Corporation. It was the spectacle of a sea-going yacht, all rigged out and ready to breast the billowy waves, so to speak. The yacht had been built in exact replica to a palatial and luxurious seacraft.

A huge truck frame was utilized and the yacht was built solidly thereon. When it wended its way across the desert it presented the appearance of some great, white bird, skimming along near the ground, and when the shadows fell across the desert, the mesas in the distance looked like ocean waves, the illusion was almost complete, for the blending of colors with the yacht in the foreground, lent a vivid impression of the moaning ocean transferred to the dryest spot in America.

This strange craft plays an important part in the plot of "The Mollycoddle."

The new Capitol theatre being erected at Davenport, Iowa

Capitol, of Davenport, Will Set New Mark for 60,000 City

Rapp & Rapp are the Architects for this Latest Enterprise of the Blanchard Amusement Company

IT is doubtful if another city of 60,000 population in the United States can boast of such an achievement in the line of theatre building as that which is about to be completed at Davenport, Iowa, through the co operation of H. C. Kahl, Davenport capitalist, and The Blanchard Amusement Co., Inc.

The new Capitol theatre, now being erected and which is to be completed by October 1, is to be positively the last word in theatre construction and will stand out as an enduring monument to civic pride, home loyalty and farsightedness.

Located in the heart of the business district at the corner of Third and Ripley streets, having a frontage of 175 feet on Third street and a depth of 150 feet on Ripley, it constitutes a notable contribution to Davenport's business growth.

The theatre is a part of a ten story office building, the total cost of which will be $1,800,000. The net cost of the theatre, it is estimated, will be $980,000, figured on a basis of $200,000 for the ground and $480,000 for the building. The cost of the office building is estimated at $1,120,000.

Work on the new building is now well under way. Ground was broken in September, 1919. Today all the steel is in place, the brick work in the rear is finished and the white terra cotta, which is to cover the entire building, is being put on. The exterior of the building is ornate and most pleasing to the eye.

It is expected that it will be completed about October 1.

The architects are C. W. and George L. Rapp, Chicago, and they have apparently left nothing out of their plans that might in any way contribute to the utility or beauty of the theatre or the luxury of the appointments.

The theatre is entered through an outer lobby of great height, splendidly illuminated with crystal fixtures. The side walls are paneled to a height of ten feet with beautiful imported marble, above which is a pilaster and column treatment in French Caen stone extremely effective in its proportion and color.

Passing into the inner lobby, stairs on either side rise to the balcony foyer, and one is here impressed by the height and spaciousness increased by the colonnade above, opening to the mezzanine foyer. Caen stone walls are contrasted with the dull green border of the art marble floor, the warm grey of the marble stairs and the dull gold in which the pilasters and cornices above are brought out. Through arched openings on both sides, one descends to the women's and men's retiring rooms, the former in late French Renaissance and the latter with a heavy beamed ceiling, red tile floor, English style. Here one also finds the nursery equipped as a play room, with a maid in attendance, the convenience of which is obvious.

J. H. Blanchard, Managing Director Capitol theatre, Davenport, Iowa

The inner lobby opens into the beautiful lower foyer serving the lower floor. Since the axis of the auditorium is at right angles to that of the lobbies, this broad foyer sweeps away into a grand curve, and its damask panels, mirrored pilasters and harmonious lamps lend a pleasing and elegant effect This is enhanced by the French windows through which one catches glimpses of the lower floor auditorium.

From the inner lobby one ascends to the mezzanine foyer or the grand promenade, the architecture of which is adapted from two of the most famous playhouses in Europe, erected in the seventeenth century and still regarded as architectural gems for their beauty and proportion. The effect of a luxurious drawing room is here achieved with its marble fireplace, its brocaded divans and chairs, its south wall alternated with French beveled morrors and silk damask panels and its north wall made up of arched openings looking out upon the house. Through these openings an excellent view of the splendid dome in the under side of the balcony is obtained. The dome is illuminated by concealed reflectors and colored lamps at its base, so that, seated in the grand promenade, one can watch the play of colors on the ornamented surfaces of the dome, colors ranging from deep purple to delicate rose soft amber. This dome gives a sense of spaciousness and height to the portion of the main floor beneath the balcony that is often lacking and a sense of width and openness to the promenade.

The walls of the auditorium under the

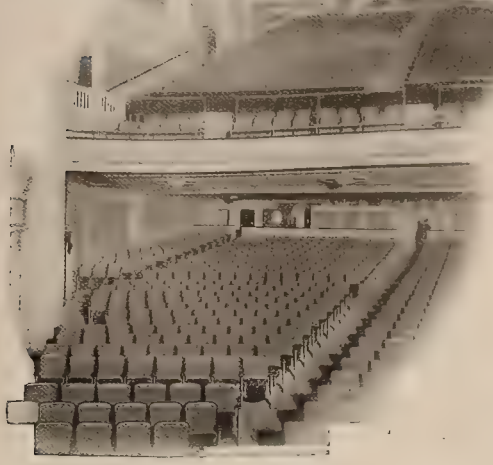
Music Will Be Strong Feature At New Capitol

MUSIC is to be one of the many big features at the new Capitol Theatre, Davenport, Iowa, the formal opening of which is to take place about October 3. As a matter of fact it is the desire of the owners that everything possible be done to make the programs there perfected works of art.

In keeping with this policy a contract has been awarded for the finest make of pipe organ which will be installed at a cost of $60,000. Messrs. Kahl and Blanchard made a long and careful investigation and sought the counsel of the best organ experts in the country before placing their order. As a result, they made a contract for one of the largest organs in the United States and it is said that there are none anywhere that are more complete or that have a better quality of tone.

It will take five freight cars to transport the organ from the factory to Davenport. There are 5,693 speaking tubes, 209 stops, four manuals, great, swell, orchestral and solo organs and the pipes range in size from that of a lead pencil to the lowest bass of 39 feet. The largest pipe has a diameter of ten inches.

The contract calls for four weeks' time in which to make the installation. It will require two weeks for tuning. During this time no one, not even workmen not engaged in tuning, will be permitted in the building.



A corps of experts will accompany the organ from the factory in Hagerstown, Md. M. P. Moller, head of the concern that makes these organs and one of the world's foremost manufacturers of pipe organs, will have personal charge of the installation After the organ is installed one of the finest artists in the country will be engaged to play it.

Speaking of the musical features of the Capitol theatre a member of the Blanchard Amusement Company said:

"We are planning other big things in a musical way for the Capitol, and will shortly make an announcement which will bring great pleasure to all music lovers."

DU PONT FABRIKOID

In the finest moving picture theatres — Fabrikoid Upholstery

IT is ideal from the viewpoint of both owner and audience.

Fabrikoid is made in styles and colors to conform to almost any decorative motif. Its Delft blue or its soft gray, for instance, are in great favor with interior decorators. Then there are browns, greens, maroons.

And Fabrikoid always retains its original charm of grain and color, for it does not fade or stain and can be washed as you would clean woodwork.

Beside being perfectly germ-proof, it is thoroughly comfortable; it never gets soggy or sticky.

Insist on Fabrikoid in your new theatre, or if you plan to re-upholster your present house.

Samples showing different styles and colors will be sent upon request.

Architects of Capitol Make Excellent Use of Terra Cotta Trims

Buffalo Boasts Attractive House In 1200 Seat "Capitol"

South Park Amusement Company Sets Fast Pace for Neighborhood Houses

ONE of the most attractive neighborhood houses in Buffalo is the new Capitol theatre, recently opened by the South Park Amusement company on Triangle street, near South Park avenue. The delightfully attractive and cozy house represents an outlay of $125,000. The house has a seating capacity of 1,200, all on one floor. George Hall, George Hanny and William H. Fitzpatrick, Jr., are the principals in the operating company. Messrs. Hall and Hanny also own and operate the Maxine theatre in Seneca street, which they have redecorated and enlarged 400 seats.

Henry L. Spann, 606 Mutual Life building, was the architect of the structure and he has turned out a model neighborhood theatre for the exclusive presentation of motion pictures. Joseph Varga, decorator, has given of his best to the Capitol and the result is most striking. The Linwood Construction Company built the structure.

The outside dimensions of the Capitol are 60 by 150 feet and the inside about 58 by 140 feet. The theatre is built of red tapestry brick with white terra cotta trimmings. The front is one of the most attractive in the city. At each side of the entrance are two large, white terra cotta-trimmed frames for the showing of the sheets on the current and coming attractions and smaller frames are placed in the pillars between the doors where stills may be shown.

A large porte cochere hangs out from the theatre and over the entrance with alternating large and small marine drop lights around the edge. Scroll work runs around the top of the marque and the words, "Capitol Theatre" are built into the front and electrically lighted. An attractive hanging arc is placed on each side of the front and street lights adorn the edge of the sidewalk in front of the Capitol. Directly over the porte cochere is a large copper beaded glass window, trimmed with a large terra cotta border with "Capitol Theatre" worked in colors. Four doors lead into the lobby.

Not much space is used for lobby purposes, the architect undoubtedly wishing to get all the room possible into the the atre proper. The lobby is about 20 by 40 feet and is decorated with attractive tap estries and old gold trimmings. The walls of the lobby are made of marble with dark marble borders. The ticket office is to the left of the lobby going in and is constructed of glass and marble and includes an automatic ticket selling machine.

The interior of the house presents a most inviting appearance. All of the 1,200 leather upholstered seats are on one floor. Usco rubber flooring is used and both direct and indirect lighting is available. Massive old gold electric clusters hang from the ceiling and quaint brass side lights of French design are placed at intervals along the side walls. The walls are of bronze color topped with old gold borders and terra cotta cornices. The stage is fairly large, the size of the picture being 128 and 186 inches. The distance of throw is 108 feet and the angle of projection practically straight. A Fred Burnham screen is used. At each side of the stage are two large marble trimmed openings in which beautiful oil paintings changed frequently, are placed and strikingly lighted by indirect illumination.

The projection room is located in the mezzanine directly over the entrance to the theatre. It is 10 by 25 feet and has two Simplex machines and a spotlight in its very complete equipment. The room is well ventilated and there is lots of breathing space.

Direct and indirect heating systems are used and the forced ventilating system brings in 25,000 cubic feet of fresh air a minute. Ladies and gentlemen's rest rooms are located on each side of the front of the house and distilled water fountains are built into the walls at the front of the threatre.

On the right corner of the Capitol is a large colored electric sign with the name of the theatre in flowing incandescent bulbs. This sign is 35 feet in length and can be seen for many miles up and down Triangle street.

A ten piece orchestra, under the direction of Eric Hurdler, furnishes the musical accompaniment for the picture entertainments presented at the Capitol and soloists are presented from time to time.

The Capitol is in the center of one of the fastly growing sections of the city, a district so far removed from the Buffalo downtown that a neighborhood motion picture theatre solves the amusement problem for most of the residents in the vicinity. The theatre brings to them, shortly after first run, all the big productions shown uptown and which can only be seen by taking a long trolley ride and which even by auto consumes quite a period. Under this situation the Capitol should enjoy unusual prosperity. The house is in excellent hands, both Messrs. Hall and Hanny being veterans in the film exhibiting game, having established the Maxine theatre in Seneca street when the industry was in its prime. They are familiar with every phase of the business and this experience will be of decided advantage in meeting the problems which may come up at the Capitol from time to time. The Maxine has been made into one of the successful houses of the city and the Capitol undoubtedly will also enjoy great popularity in the coming months.

Wilmington, Del., Theatre Notes

Princess Theatre, 512 Market St.

Now under the course of construction, will seat 2,000 when completed. The latest innovations and details of construction from metropolitan theatres will be followed out.

There will be a 15-ft. lobby entrance on Market street, the theatre proper on King street.

A large pipe organ of special design will be built for the theatre, and in connection with this, are planning to employ the largest orchestra in the city. This will be the finest theatre between Philadelphia and Washington, D. C. Expect to complete and commodious bank building. Mr. building and be ready to open by early fall.

Strand Theatre, 2420 Market St.

Nearing completion and will open about May 1st. This theatre is situated in the residence section of the city, and will have a seating capacity of 1,200.

This is the first theatre over the bridge in the Brandywine section. Will install Power's 6B motor driven machines, Hallberg motor generator set, and show first and second run pictures on a silver screen.

Jules Rothchild will be the manager.

The Victoria Theatre at 9th & Market.

A memory of the past. This theatre was taken over by the bank and dismantled in order to make room for a large Schwartz, the proprietor, held a term lease on the ground and was doing a very satisfactory business and was reluctant to sell, but the bank needed the ground in connection with what they owned in order to erect the building they had in view, and their offer to Mr. Schwartz was too tempting for him to pass by. A large force of workmen started to dismantle the building the first of the week, and, as stated above, it is now a memory of the past.

The Pickwick Theatre, 504 Market St.

This theatre has a seating capacity of 400, use a piano, run Vitagraph, Capitol and Universal Film, have two Powers machines and show pictures on a Rembusch Mirror Screen.

WM. C. FRANCKE at desk in adjoining office dashing off stories of Simplex achievements—sleeves rolled up—arms spattered with ink up to elbows—smile of pleasure shining through ink-smeared features—also banked on right and left by stogie butts defunct and smoldering.

Great commotion in outer offices causes everyone to run toward passenger elevator shaft from which loud creaks are sounding—straining of cables are heard—crowd breathlessly awaits the coming up of tortured elevator.

Door of elevator opens and H. H. Cudmore, assisted by elevator man in rear, squeezes through opening. Elevator released of abnormal weight shoots two feet upward.

Crowd falls back and Cudmore advances toward executive offices preceded by office boy two feet in advance with red flag. Stenographers and office attendants make frantic efforts to rescue typewriters, adding machines and office fixtures that are shaken from their fastenings as Cudmore marches by.

Cudmore enters office of E. M. Porter, who hurriedly pushes oak table out for him to sit on. W. C. Francke is now shown attempting to pacify irate building superintendent who protests damage done to the elevator and insists that all heavy shipments be brought up on freight elevator—Francke tenders Pittsburgh stogie to superintendent, who places same in nearby cuspidor. Damage to elevator is estimated and it is deemed advisable to install a new one.

Francke casually walks into executive office in time to hear Cudmore challenge Porter to championship Kelly Pool game. Francke, as Porter's trainer and manager, draws up Articles of Agreement on cover of stogie box.

balcony are treated with silk panels, on which are painted the figures of dancing girls. These are effectively illuminated by concealed lights in back of exquisitely colored draperies festooned at the sides and above. Above the balcony the side walls become three arched penetrations with medallions and lunettes adorned with mural paintings.

The main ceiling and that under the balcony are all illuminated with concealed coves and the sounding board, arches over proscenium box recesses and curves of the proscenium arch are perforated and have concealed colored lights behind them.

Perhaps the most striking feature of the house is the arrangement of orchestra and stage. The building is so designed as to permit its being converted into a legitimate theatre with a full stage at any time in the future, and advantage of this fact has been taken in the recessing of most of the orchestra behind the proscenium arch line, and the development of a curved colonnade with surmounting dome on the stage.

Between the columns one looks out upon Italian scenes softly lighted from above the dome, the screen in the center being covered with warm silk hangings appliqued with silver. These curtains pull slowly apart and the picture projected comes out in full brilliancy on the screen. Orchestra and soloist may be illuminated with changing colors, may be in cold moonlight or warm red or soft rose, thrown from above the dome. The lighting effects will have a wide range of brilliancy and color and may be varied to suit the feeling of the production.

The ventilation is thoroughly modern and provides for a cooling system which will, in the heat of summer, always give a temperature of 70 degrees.

The theatre will have a seating capacity of 2,500. A symphony orchestra of thirty pieces will be one of the many features. (The pipe organ is described in another article.)

The Capitol theatre, as already stated, is in the heart of the business section of Davenport and is located directly across the street from the Columbia and Orpheum Circuit theatre. The Capitol will be operated by the Blanchard Amusement Company and J. H. Blanchard is managing director. The theatre will be devoted to motion pictures exclusively. It will be equipped with three concert stages —two of which are to be used for soloists —if the demand warrants it.

This theatre is but another evidence of the progressiveness of J. H. Blanchard who does little talking but who accomplishes big things in the amusement business.

H. C. Kahl, a Davenport capitalist, is the builder and owner of the property. He has had but one thought in the matter. It is this. Everything entering the building must be the finest and best that money and brains can produce.

"The Challenge"

him that bowling alley is in next room.—Porter removes hat, coat and vest, while Francke advises him to remove everything except collar and tie. Porter compromises by taking off shoes and putting hat on.

Porter receives final instructions from Manager Francke—it is secretly arranged by Porter and Francke that if indications show Cudmore winning, Francke is to sneak up behind him and strike him violently on head three times with cuspidor, thereby giving Porter the game on a "strike-out." Colored attendant racks balls and quickly steps back and away from table after seeing look of determination in Cudmore's eyes. Francke makes final and careful examination of contestant's hands for hidden horseshoes or brass knuckles. Cudmore nonchalantly suggests that game be straight pool instead of "Kelly"—Porter and Francke go into executive session behind radiator and agree that straight pool would be acceptable if Cudmore agrees to play straight. Porter wins toss-up for the "break."

Cudmore tears off three difficult shots in succession. Porter loses courage—is cheered by Francke, who frames up with elevator man to make Cudmore walk downstairs if he wins.

Porter prepares to shoot. Cudmore bets Francke two bits that Porter cannot run up seven balls in succession—Francke, with seven cents in his pocket, accepts bet—Porter wins—Francke calls for three cheers for Porter—Colored man misunderstands and brings Porter three beers. Cudmore drinks all three—Francke wipes off his lips and remarks how good the beer tasted. Cudmore shoots and misses. Porter runs up five more—Francke-Porter faction elated—Cudmore disgusted,—claims nail in his shoe bothers his shooting. Alibi noted—Francke suggests removing foot to avoid further contact with nail.

Porter still winning—Cudmore mops brow with table cloth from Park Ave. Hotel, which he pulls out of pistol pocket—complains of extreme heat—says he does better in outdoor shooting—Alibi noted. Porter still winning. Cudmore claims pain under vest covering large area of his front upholstery—Alibi noted.

Porter misses easy shot—Francke faints with pool rack around neck. Cudmore now agitated so that he shoots with bridge says he will "clean up." Colored attendant tells him where brooms and mops are kept—Francke revives and pushes nine of Cudmore's points back on wire—Porter's shooting cleans up table—Cudmore offers to let Francke shoot for him, at which Porter gets disgusted and the game is declared won by Porter, 47-3.

Finish shows "close-up" of Porter and Francke counting Porter's winning (85c) to which is added Francke's bank-roll (32c) and taxi is engaged.

Theater Notes of Philadelphia

B. Barnett, who formerly held the Paramount franchise for Minneapolis, has just purchased the Burlington Opera House, Burlington, N. J., from A. C. Lewis, of Seaside Park, N. J., and took possession April 5th.

W. A. Welliver, of Montrose, Pa., a small town 40 miles north of Scranton, is erecting a 350-seat theatre which will be ready to open at no distant date.

L. Pysor and his associates, H. Coane and B. Dintlinfass, with offices at 307 Lafayette Bldg., have just broken ground at the corner of Kensington ave. and Russel st. for a 1,400-seat theatre which they expect to complete by the first of September. Their order has been given for a $10,000 pipe organ, but none of the equipment has been purchased as yet. As soon as this theatre is completed they expect to commence work on another and will complete three during the year. Mr. Pysor has the Rex and Ridge on Ridge ave. in this city, the Whitman in Camden, and the Elite, Palace and Strand in Gloucester, N. J.

Harry Davis, the successful exhibitor of Milton, Pa., proprietor of the Bijou Dream Theatre, was in Philadelphia on the 29th and 30th of March looking after the booking for his house, and visiting Charles Calehuff, Phila., manager of the United Theatre Equipment Corporation.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

Development of the Mazda Lamp for Projection Purposes

A New Series of Interest to All Projectionists

This is the first installment of an exhaustive article on the Mazda Lamp and its application to Projection. The author is H. Freeman Barnes, which is proof enough that the data is authoritative.

HISTORY OF THE ART

The coming of the Mazda lamp for projection purposes means to the motion picture field, what the new light six or eight cylinder high efficient motor meant to the automobile industry.

The Mazda lamp itself, of course, is not new; but its successful application to projection is quite recent.

The Carbon arc came into existence about 1800, and has, until recently, where electric current was available, held the field as a light source for projection.

In 1870, an experimenter by the name of Heyl, arranged a series of photographic transparencies on the outer edges of a disc, and rotated it in front of the lens of a magic lantern.

It was just as if a strip of film had been pasted around the edges of the revolving shutter that is used with the present motion picture projector. In order to prevent blur when changing from one picture to another, a two-wing shutter was used. Heyl's scheme was the forerunner of the present-day motion picture projector.

In 1887, Reverend Hannibal Goodwin filed a patent for a continuous strip of photographic film similar to that used at present. In 1889, Thomas A. Edison perfected the first modern high speed motion picture camera. Following this Edison devoted much of his time to the projector mechanism. The taking and projecting of successive photographs thus made practical the development of the art that today furnishes instruction and amusement for millions.

ADVANTAGES

Many of the same advantages that have led to the present world wide use of the Mazda lamps for home, industrial and street lighting, make the Mazda projection lamp desirable. Ease, simplicity and economy of operation as compared with other illuminants, are among its chief characteristics.

The advantages of the Mazda lamp as regards projection are becoming well known. It gives a clear soft light; makes operating conditions vastly more healthful, produces a better quality of pictures, and costs far less to run, in most cases, than the arc. A popular misconception, however, places the operation of the Mazda lamp in its simplicity next to that of filling a fountain-pen. Nevertheless, in focusing the Mazda lamp with its somewhat smaller light source, the experienced projectionist will find his knowledge to stand him in good stead.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE MAZDA LAMP

Thomas A. Edison made his first successful electric incandescent lamp on October 21, 1879. The filament was made of paper, a Carbon filament. It was not until slightly over a decade ago, however, that the tungsten filament was brought out, and not until a coiled concentrated filament operating in a gas-filled bulb was introduced, that the beginning of exhaustive experimentation to produce a Mazda lamp for projection was begun.

Lamps of wattage from 20 to 2,000 and operating at amperages ranging from 1 to 100 have been tested out.

Many types, sizes and shapes of filament have been made and tried. Several different shaped bulbs have been adopted from time to time. The earlier bulbs were a combination of a round and a tubular bulb. The round or bulging part being necessary in order to keep the intense heat from softening the glass. Later, a hard or lime glass was used, which enabled the filament to be put into a tubular bulb with only a little over an inch separation between it and the side of the bulb.

The research and development work in the laboratories has been supplemented by many actual commercial installations. The lamp performance and screen results have been closely watched, so that the new Edison Mazda lamp embodies the results of both theoretical and practical investigations.

THE MAZDA LAMP FOR MOTION PICTURE PROJECTION

The filament of this lamp is enclosed in a tubular bulb of hard glass 9½" long from base to tip, and 2½" in diameter. The long tubular bulb is used for two reasons,—first, to enable the filament to be brought close to the condenser, and thus utilize more light; second, to reduce light absorption from blackening. When a filament is heated, and especially so at very high temperatures, it continually gives off

Power's Projectors Always Reliable

Mr. S. Snowden Cassard, Sales Manager,
Nicholas Power Company,
#90 Gold St.,
New York City, N.Y.

Dear Sir:-

In reply to your inquiry as to the results we are receiving from your Powers Projecting Machines, will say that it is with pleasure we are able to report that same have been giving us perfect satisfaction.

We are using two of your machines for projecting our release prints and on each of these machines we are projecting in the neighborhood of thirty thousand feet of film per day. This amount of footage is in considerable excess to that which a machine would be subject to under ordinary conditions and, taking into consideration the rate of speed which we are obliged to run these machines in order to put through the required number of release prints per day, and also the perfect condition in which these machines are now in - after being in service for two years - demonstrates to us the perfection in the manufacture of these machines.

We must have perfect projection for our releases and have found, by experience, that the Nicholas Power Machines fulfill our needs to the fullest extent.

95% of the machines used by the studios and laboratories in Los Angeles and vicinity are Power's

Yours very truly,

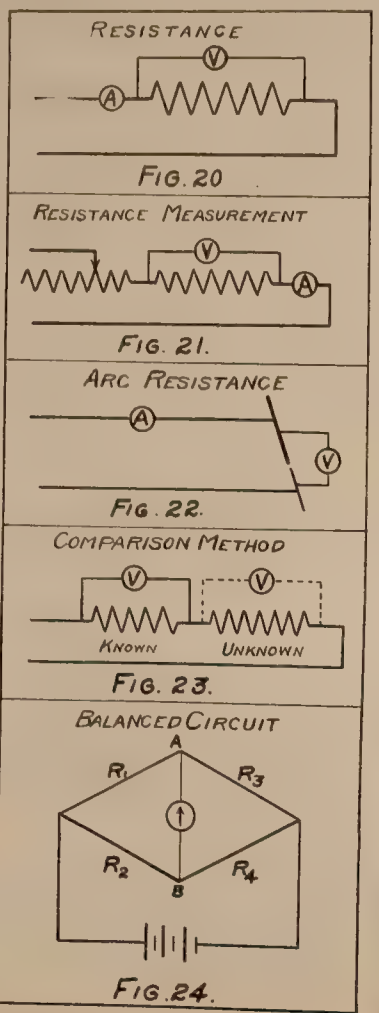
Determination of Resistance

IN order to determine roughly the resistance of a piece of apparatus, such as a rheostat used in an arc circuit, readings may be taken with an ammeter and voltmeter and the value of the resistance obtained from Ohm's law. A diagram of connections in which an ammeter is connected in the circuit and the drop of potential around the resistance is measured by a voltmeter is shown in Fig. 20. Then from Ohm's law $R = E/I$, the value of the resistance may be determined. The above measurements may be made on any rheostat already connected in a circuit. In order to get more accurate results, however, a separate circuit may be made up as shown by Fig. 21. This diagram makes use of a variable resistance added to the circuit so that the amount of current may be varied. By taking simultaneous readings a series of values may be obtained and from these an average taken for the correct value of resistance.

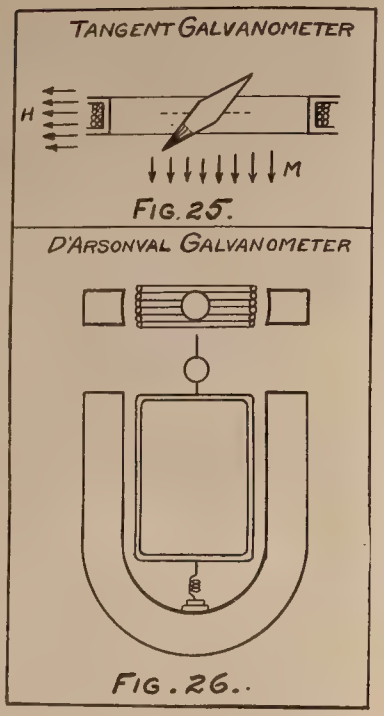
In order to determine the resistance of an arc meters may be connected as shown by Fig. 22, the simultaneous readings taken when the arc is burning properly. The resistance of the arc is determined by dividing the drop in potential across the arc by the current flowing through the circuit.

Another way of finding the resistance of an unknown piece of apparatus is by the comparison method, in which the drop in potential around the unknown resistance as indicated by a voltmeter is compared to the drop around a known resistance. No ammeter is required by this method, as the two resistances are connected in series across a constant current supply. The voltage drop around the two resistances is then proportional to their ohmic resistance as the same current is flowing through each. The diagram of connections is shown by Fig. 23. Then the value of the known resistance is to the unknown resistance as the drop around the known resistance is to the drop around the unknown resistance.

In order to measure accurately large values of resistance use is generally made of the Wheatstone Bridge which consists of a combination of resistances used in conjunction with a galvanometer. A simple drawing showing the method of connection and principle of the Wheatstone Bridge is given by Fig. 24. The unknown resistance is inserted in section R_4. The current flow in the two parallel branches of the circuit is then varied by means of changing the value of R_3 so that the circuit is balanced, that is, such that there is no potential drop between the point A and B as shown by the galvanometer.



In the circuit of Fig. 24 the value of R_1 is to R_2 as the value of the adjustable resistance R_3 is to the unknown resistance R_4. If the values of R_1 and R_2 are equal then the amount of R_3 which shows no deviation of the galvanometer needle is the desired value of the unknown resistance.



Description of the Galvanometer

A galvanometer is an instrument used for measuring small current flow or the existence of a very low drop in potential between two points. Because of its sensitiveness, it is very useful in determining when the circuit of a Wheatstone Bridge has been balanced. There are two principal types of galvanometers, known as the Tangent type and the moving coil or D'Arsonval type.

The tangent galvanometer is made up of a series of turns of wire which is mounted with its plane vertical and placed parallel to the earth's magnetic meridian. A magnetic needle is pivoted at the center of the coil. When a current passes through the coils the needle takes a position which is a resultant of the magnetic field of the earth and field set up by the passage of current. The magnetic field set up by the passage of the current is proportional to the amount of current flowing. Thus the amount of deviation out of the plane of the coils of wire is an indication of the current strength. This action is illustrated by Fig. 25 in which H is the magnetic field of the earth and M the magnetic field produced by the passage of current. The position of the needle is then proportional to the current flow through the galvanometer coils.

The D'Arsonal Galvanometer is made up of a fixed magnet and a suspended movable coil which is caused to turn when current is passed through the coil. The movable coil is suspended by a fine wire which furnishes one lead to the movable coil, the other lead being formed by a wire dipping into the mercury cup at the bottom. The principle of this instrument is shown by Fig 26. The figure also shows a mirror on the suspension wire used to indicate very slight deflections by reflecting a ray of light on a calibrated scale.

Problems to be Solved

25. If the ammeter of Fig. 20 reads 8 amperes and the voltmeter indicates 92 volts what is the value of the resistance.
26. The following readings were taken for the circuit as shown by Fig. 21: 5 amperes, 13.5 volts; 12 amperes, 33 volts; 18 amperes, 49 volts.
    Find the average value of resistance.
27. Two voltmeters A of 10,000 ohms resistance and B of 5,000 ohms resistance are connected in series across 150 volts. What will be the reading of each?
28. For a certain current flow the drop around the known resistance of 10 ohms, Fig. 23, is 25 volts and that around the unknown resistance is 60 volts. Find the value of the unknown resistance. What current is flowing in the circuit?

History of Mazda Lamp Development

vapor, which, coming in contact with the relatively cooler surface of the glass, may form a black deposit. The farther away from the filament we can allow this cooling and deposit to take place, the less is the likelihood of the light to be absorbed due to blackening. Further, the long bulb helps to get rid of or dissipate the heat.

The filament, instead of a straight piece of tungsten wire as in an ordinary vacuum lamp, is wound in a spiral or helical form. Many people call the filament "four little springs."

In the making of the filament the wire is actually wound as closely as possible on a long thin rod, or as it is termed in the factory, a "mandrel," much in the same manner as a person winds a piece of string around his finger. The mandrel is then taken out, and the wire bent into position.

While the spiral or spring of wire itself is only 1¾" long and occupies when bent into four parallel coils, a space of 4/10" square, the wire itself when stretched out is almost 12" in length. Thus, by coiling a long piece of wire, we are able to concentrate the light within a small area.

As will be shown later this 4/10" square is the "useful area"- and practically, only light from this area can be used in projecting the picture. Thus, it is desirable to crowd the maximum amount of light into these dimensions.

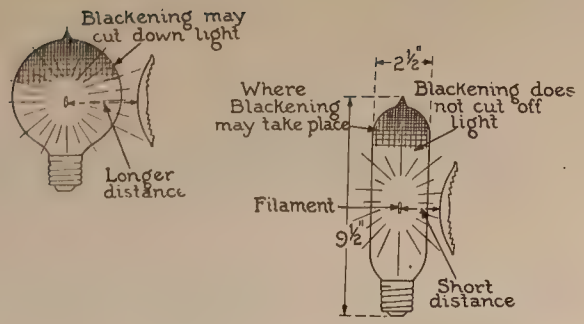

Fig. 2—The tubular versus round bulb, showing how much closer the tubular bulb can be put to the condenser than the round one, also illustrating the relative effect of blackening on the two bulbs

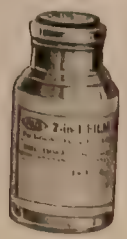

This, of course, means making the filament as brilliant as possible, and putting individual loops or coils as close together as practicable.

The brilliancy of the filament depends upon how hot it is run. The temperature at which a filament can be run depends to a certain degree upon its diameter. It is obvious that a piece of wire the size of your finger can be run much hotter without danger of burning out than one the size of a hair. A thick hot wire means a high amperage.

Putting the filament close together necessitates low voltage. Two wires carrying 100 volts, for instance, could come much closer together without danger of the current jumping than two such wires carrying 1000 volts.

Hot Weather Means More Typhoon Sales

Exhibitors throughout the country are realizing more and more as the summer approaches that it is absolutely necessary to have a cool and well-ventilated theatre. This is so not only among owners of large houses, but smaller houses as well. There was a time, a few years back, when the question of ventilation did not seem to bother the theatre owner. However, times have changed, and the keen competition of the present day makes it necessary that every theatre owner put his house in proper shape for the approaching summer weather.

Fire Valves and Soldering Kinks

G. Waldo Bennewitz, Strand Theatre, Sioux Falls, So. Da.:

Just a few lines to let you know that I am still at the same place and have not forgotten the News.

While at work today I had a Projectionist from out of town call on me. We were talking about different equipment and he said, "We have just installed a new motor generator and I do not know the first thing about one of them." He then asked where he could get a set of electrical books that would not cost him a lot of money. I recommended Hawkin's Electrical Guides and also the News Practical Electricity

I can see no reason why any Projectionist should be without a set of Hawkin's Electrical Guides. They cover the field and can be bought for ten dollars a set of ten books. You can also buy them on the installment plan. One dollar down and a dollar a month. This is twenty-five cents a week or three and a half cents a day. They are for sale by Theo. Audel & Co., 72 Fifth Ave., N. Y. City.

In March 27th issue, George Burkard was telling about the fire valve on his Powers machine cutting. This trouble is caused by bent reels or magazine out of line with the upper sprocket. But you will find that most of it is caused by bent reels. I went to work at a small house in 1912 and found that the upper valve was completely cut through. I took it out and cleaned both of the cut edges with a piece of emery cloth, also the outside of the valve on both sides of the cut. Clamp one side in a vise and line up the other half so that it leaves a crack of about 1 32 of an inch between the two pieces. At one end fuse the two pieces together with solder. Then take it out of the vise and square the two pieces up. Take a piece of blotter, card-board, or some twine and put it in the valve as you would a piece of film in threading. Push this up tight against the crack so that it will form a bottom for the crack, you are now ready to finish the soldering. Clamp in the vise and start at the other end and work to the end that you soldered first. Remember that you must reinforce it a little on the outside. After you have this soldered take out the packing and with a piece of fine emery cloth folded (so that the crease enters first), slide this into the valve and work back and forth until you have the inside smooth. If done right this will make a neat job and will outlast the brass valve. I soldered up two valves and I know that the first one was as good as ever a year later. The second one was still in use five months after I soldered it and as good as the day I put it in.

Some Projectionists do not realize what can be done with a soldering iron. In 1916 I soldered the yoke that holds the intermittent idler bracket on the powers. This was broken off and as the party who sent the head to me to repair could not afford to put much money into it, I soldered it up for him and saved him $19.50, the price of a new framing carriage. This machine is still in use with the same carriage.

Remember that pair of tension shoes that you discarded because they were out of true, or the aperture plate with the worn tracks? Next time you have a pair like that do not discard them. Go to the hardware store and buy a two-surface oilstone (fine and coarse). Turn the coarse side up and rub the shoes back and forth until you have them almost trued up. Then turn the stone over and finish on the fine side. Always finish with plenty of oil and a lengthwise stroke. There are a great many things that the Projectionist can do if he will take the time and use his head to think with instead of just a place to put his hat.

I will call this enough for this time and will try to write again in the near future.

Reply: Hawkin's Guides are but one of the tools for the projectionist. The ten books contain a mint of information and if a man can absorb all the facts contained in the 3000 or more pages, he will be able to qualify for a position considerably better than that of a projectionist.

Your contribution on the subject of "worn-out fire valves" is received with thanks. We are sure that others having similar trouble will welcome your suggestions.

We sincerely hope that our readers, after hearing your story of the soldering experience, will not become convinced that soldering is so easy. You seem to have had excellent success with your iron, but others are not apt to be so fortunate. Soldering in itself is an art, particularly if the parts to be joined are at all delicate or if the finished product must conform to certain measurements. Nevertheless, as you say, a soldering iron is a handy appliance to have about a shop and can be used in many cases to save broken parts that otherwise would have to be thrown away.

Trouble due to bent and untrue reels can easily be done away with by having reels of your own for projection purposes. Let the producer send his films out on any reels that he has in stock but discard them when projecting. It requires time and trouble to rewind onto a second reel, but the results in every way are worth it. There are a number of excellent reels on the market that are far ahead of any exchange reel in trueness, durability and workmanship.

It will pay any exhibitor to expend $3 on a couple of decent reels.

Fulco Starts Intensive Sales Campaign

Leading off with a well arranged folder featuring the leading products of the E. E. Fulton Co., Carl H. Fulton, Sales Manager of the firm, recently launched a sales campaign that will no doubt bring in actual results. The Fulco line of theatre equipment has been increased by the addition of several new products, one of them being the copper terminal for use in projection rooms. This terminal is ruggedly made and grips the conductor securely and effectively. It is easy to apply and gives a neat appearance after assembly.

Carl Fulton has made a number of trips to different parts of the country installing Fulco distributors and from all accounts the United States is well covered with dealers featuring Fulco goods.

White Light for Motion Picture Photography

By Wm. Roy Mott, Research Laboratory, National Carbon Company

The Chicago stage lamp, Fig. 9, is unusual in having the flame carbons at right angles.

The Joyce flame arc lamp has been used somewhat in industrial moving picture work.

The Klieglight, Fig. 11, is a high amperage (30 to 40 amperes) lamp, with horizontal carbons. The lamp is mounted on a pedestal with casters and is used in side lighting. The lamp is very powerful and so is usually diffused by a large glass screen. A low weight lamp with vertical flame carbons is also made. The portable Kleiglight is shown in Fig. 10.

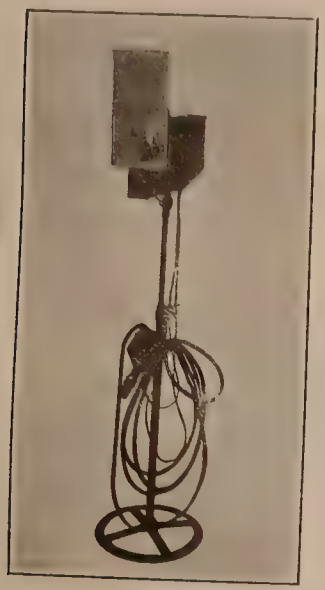

Fig. 9—Chicago Stage Lamp

The Macbeth Company is well known in photo-engraving field and have recently produced a tilting lamp, which is apparently of considerably greater efficiency than their usual photo-engraving lamp. The lamp is designed so that the light can be directed to any part of the stage, both vertically and horizontally. The tilting lamp is designed to burn on A. C. and D. C. and, in case of 220 volts, two in series.

Fig. 11 Klieglight Stand, 25-35 ampere with Horizontal Flame Carbons

The Scott lamp, Fig. 12, is a revival of the inclined gravity feed lamp at 15 to 20 amperes, and have two arcs in series in each lamp.

Fig. 12—Scott Hanging Lamp, 15-20 amperes inclined trim twin arcs

This lamp is especially used for overhead lighting, and in a stand form for side lighting. These lamps give a greater effect by 40% than some of the flame arcs having only one arc on 110 volts.

The Simplex lamp is a twin flame lamp which is very portable and can be carried around in a suitcase. This lamp is designed for 15 to 25 amperes.

The Universal or Majestic lamp has two flame arcs in series and these are placed next to the economizer. The lamp can easily be directed to throw its light to any part of the stage.

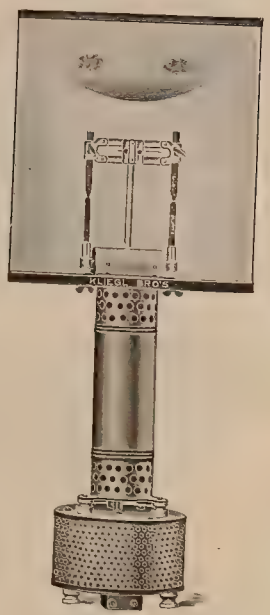

Fig. 10—Klieglight Portable

The Wohl Duplex hanging lamp is shown in Figs. 7 and 13. This lamp has two flame arcs in series and our laboratory tests show a mean spherical candlepower of 6,700 with no reflector with the lamp taking 30 amperes on 115 volts (direct current). With the reflector, the horizontal beam candlepower is 22,000 according to tests made by Mr. Perris of our laboratory. In motion picture studios these lamps are provided with suitable woven glass diffusing screens or large tracing cloth diffusing screens. The Wohl Broadside, Fig. 14 is a stand lamp taking 30 amperes with four arcs in series arcs. A very portable low weight lamp is also made. A complete description of all the American lamps would fill a book so we will pass on to foreign lamps and spot lamps.

Sun-Light Arc Shows Worth at Directors' Ball

At the Ball given by the Motion Picture Directors' Association at the Hotel Biltmore on April 10th a novelty was introduced by the use of several Sun-Light Arcs as sources of illumination by which motion pictures of the festivities were taken. Private projection of the films taken on that night give sufficient proof of the aptitude of the arcs for such purposes.

Not satisfied with the taking of "sets," President Harmer arranged for views taken by spot flood and back lighting. In all the demonstrations the illumination measured up to the full standard desired.

Representatives of the Technical Department of MOTION PICTURE NEWS viewed these films and without exception

The arc that did the trick at the Directors' Ball were impressed by the results obtained. One interesting feature was emphasized when the camera was focused directly in the center of the arc without causing undue halation. Only a fiery ball appeared on the negative and the details outside of this spot were unaffected.

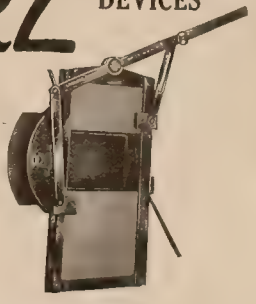
These demonstrations are but a few of those that have been promised by the Sun-Light Arc Corporation. Mr. C. G. Nesbit, Eastern Sales Manager, predicts some of the greatest advances in the motion picture industry to occur within the next few months.

"Pollyanna" Opens New Texas Theatre



To Mary Pickford's "Pollyanna" goes the honor of opening the new Lamb theatre in Ranger, Texas. This theatre is the best building erected to screen drama that has been built in the oil fields of Texas. It was handsomely decorated throughout with carnations. It was formally dedicated by the Mayor and other prominent officials of the city.

The Hulsey Lynch interests entertained the orphans from the different Homes in Dallas at the Old Mill to see Mary Pickford in "Pollyanna." Several of the large automobile concerns took upon themselves the job of conveying the kiddies at different times throughout the day to the theatre.

J. S. Zamecnik, the Musical Wizard

With the exception of Sol P. Levy we don't know of any other composer but J. S. Zamecnik who has been able to write successfully and produce every conceivable class of music, excluding grand opera. The above gentlemen have written popular song hits, concert music, film music and have proved that they are just as efficient in writing music suitable for hotel and dance purposes, as well as for the motion picture theatre.

It is hard to say which of Mr. Zamecnik's compositions is the best emanating from his pen. He has written such an abundant amount of music suitable for all purposes that we can not review his works individually, but in sections. His concert orchestra editions published by Sam Fox Pub. Co., of Cleveland, Ohio, as well as a great many numbers written for the Sam Fox famous Library Edition, are but a few of the numbers we may justly say are indispensable to the motion picture theatre, also for any other enterprise where music is needed. Among the popular hits written by Mr. Zamecnik are such numbers as, "My Cairo Love," "Amorita," and many others.

For the motion picture field, he has recently written a folio, called "The Sam Fox Loose-Leaf Photoplay Edition," an excellent book consisting of dramatic and incidental music revealing musical quality practically unprecedented.

Mr. Zamecnik was born in Cleveland, Ohio, and studied with various theatres in this country and abroad. He was a member of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra with Victor Herbert, and was musical director of the Cleveland Hippodrome where he collaborated in the production of spectacular shows and comic operas. Mr. Zamecnik can boast of the distinction of having won a $2,000 prize in a California song contest.

At the request of many of the leading Photo Play directors who have used his Concert Numbers (Sam Fox Concert Edition) so exclusively, he is writing another set. Likewise, the Photo Play Edition will be augmented by new dramatics, however, of a different nature. The motion picture profession, therefore, can look forward to much meritorious music from the pen of this versatile composer.

Mr. Zamecnik is a hard worker and besides his own name he writes under several nom de plumes. His enthusiasm is best expressed in his own words: "I have my very heart and soul in all that I write. My melodies are the voice of my emotions and I am extremely happy over the fact that my musical expressions find such a welcome response in the hearts of my fellow musicians and thousands of music lovers."

Mr. Zamecnik has written exclusively for the Sam Fox Pub. Co. of Cleveland, Ohio.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for last twenty weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to December 20, 1919.

The Complete Plan Book

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

"Just a Wife"

(National Picture Theatres)

"JUST a Wife" is the initial National offering and is an adaption of the stage play by Eugene Walters. Roy Steward, Kathlyn Williams, and Leatrice Joy are the featured players.

As a photoplay it offers another example of cruelly maltreated stage success. Or at least, it is a picturization of a story that has not the necessary screen qualities. The basis of the story is the theme of a man loving the woman who can bring him domestic happiness rather than her who brings business success. The psychological effect and character transformation were probably worked out on the stage largely by dialogue, and they are only half worked out in the screen version, in a sickly, anemic fashion, by a few subtitles. The gradual birth of love in the hearts of the man and his wife, is poorly picturized. Action is palpably and lamentably lacking. John Emerson marries to further his career; Mary Lee, to escape poverty. Neither loves the other. Eleanor Lathrop, however, a business partner of Emerson's, is deeply in love with him. This is the triangle, such as it is—two women, and a man who loves neither of them. Eleanor is not a vampire, and Emerson is not susceptible to such charms as she possesses. Is there any wonder that the interest lags—lags despite the "big business" element that is introduced and the dizzy tale of the hero's rise as a financial power?

The picture has been given a careful production and the usual good photography and interior sets. Roy Steward fits his new type of character very well, but is given few opportunities to impress. Leatrice Joy has been well cast, and Kathlyn Williams, in an uncongenial part, naturally cannot be congenial. A very much unheard of and convenient husband, by the way, is brought from Alaska for this third peg of the Triangle in the end. The stage play might please sophisticated theatregoers on account of the smartness and cleverness of the playwright, but shorn of these qualities on the screen, it will only equal the average.

"Edgar's Hamlet"

(Produced by Goldwyn from the Booth Tarkington Stories—Two Reels)

GOOD as was the first Booth Tarkington "Edgar" story as presented in picture form with Johnny Jones as Edgar, the second one under the title of "Edgar's Hamlet" has it beaten in every way.

As may be imagined from the title, "Edgar's Hamlet" principally concerns the presenting of Shakespeare's immortal tragedy by "Edgar" and his chums, albeit that there is a short sequence prior to the show which introduces you to Mr. Tarkington's characters in a school room with "Edgar" "speaking a piece" with not any too great success, pictorially we mean. This is where the idea for the show originates. How it is developed, even to the use of a couple of mother's best hats and dinner gowns for costumes with dire results for both wearing apparel and boys later, is part of the stuff of which the picture is made.

The performance itself is a wonder. Staged in "Edgar's Pa's" barn with an audience of children who are as clever actors as Johnny and his show troupe there is a laugh in every scene. The show over then comes some more great stuff when the parents we have mentioned from whom the hats and gowns were borrowed without the formality of asking, find out what has happened. If this picture doesn't please your audience, young and old, men and women, they are unappreciative.

J. S. Dickerson.

"Three Gobs"

(Prizma Colored Scenic and Educational—One Reel)

"THREE Gobs" derives its title from the fact that it purports to be a partial chronicle of what three young men who joined the Navy saw and did on a U. S. battleship.

The offering is quite a novelty for the reason that it combines very nicely the virtues of the colored scenic, the educational subject and a current events strip.

The colorings given the various strips fit in rather harmoniously, there is much that is really interesting which is shown concerning the big cruiser and the topical part is contained in the fact that it is one of Uncle Sam's best ships for which the "three gobs" have been selected on which to be given their naval training.

The reel is worthy of being featured to a considerable extent and will pass with any audience which enjoys this type of stuff, as more than a filler.

J. S. Dickerson.

"The Gift Supreme"

(Republic—Inter-Ocean)

WHEN they named this picture they probably didn't know at the time that its title might have another meaning to those who book it.

Now, we're not going to say that this feature is out of the ordinary if we compare it with some others we have seen, but for down-right amusement, the kind that will interest, stimulate and thrill, this film should be a "gift supreme" to the exhibitor.

Why? Because the story, which was written by George Allan England, and which, although not new, is treated in a way to arouse the emotions; because it was directed in an artistic manner, even in its finer details; because it has a good star in Bernard During, whose personal magnetism, coupled with his ability to act and weigh up the light and heavy moments in the story, and in doing this he reminds us of the old baseball saying, "take your time," are an added attraction, and because it has a cast which, when mentioned, little more need be said. Among those playing the prominent roles are Seena Owen, Melbourne McDowell, Tully Marshall, Eugene Besserer, Lon Chaney, Jack Curtis and Dick Morris.

The characters are drawn from the two extremes of life, the rich and the poor. Length 6 reels. Frank Leonard

"A Fool and His Money"

(Selznick)

PUT a young American, a very rich and decidedly two-fisted American, in the most archaical old-world, atmosphere of Central Europe; surround him with strangely clothed attendants, and prove that no gawdy uniformed soldiery can daunt such a happy go lucky hero, and you have a "best seller" of not so many years past. George Barr McCutcheon did all this, and the novel has come to us in photoplay form with Eugene O'Brien as the star. And if the novel proved popular, there is no reason, apparently, why the picture should not duplicate, for it is just as picturesque and just as romantic.

A successful American novelist buys an Austrian castle where he may work undisturbed. The interior scenes of this castle are remarkable for their size, furnishing and faithfulness of detail. The exteriors, of course, have not the splendor or grandeur of the Austrian Tyrol, but are evidently the best that could be obtained. A mysterious lady is hiding in an unused wing of the castle. Our novelist discovers her and learns her history. She is the abused American wife of a foreign Count, and has fled with her kidnapped child to the castle, protected by the servants who once knew her as their mistress. The Count himself arrives as a guest at the house party, and accidently discovers his divorced wife's whereabouts. He summons the police, and after a single combat with the American, in which he is beaten, there is a chase over the snows for the frontier. A few soldiers fail to stop the runaways and they reach the Italian border, where there is safety and, of course happiness for the ex-Countess and the novelist.

The star fulfills all the requirements made upon him, which however, are not unusually dramatic or emotional. The retainers in the castle are especially well cast. All Eugene O'Brien admirers will be well pleased, and all others will find average entertainment in this picture, although this type of story is not as popular as it was a decade ago.

"DON'T EVER MARRY"
(Neilan-First National)

Matrimonial Comedy Carries Many Bright Moments

IT is quite a leap from such a dramatic subject as "The River's End" to the light and brittle comedy, "Don't Ever Marry," but Marshall Neilan has negotiated it fairly well so that he may be called a director whose versatility is not of the single-track order. This being his first effort, it must go without saying that what might be done with rhyme and reason by a director of light stuff, is liable to be burlesqued by him. Mr. Neilan has been fortified with a complicated idea concerning a matrimonial mix-up and allowing for some unadulterated foolishness which he has unduly burlesqued or exaggerated, the piece is a creditable offering.

Of course the idea is quite preposterous and accepting it from that premise his method is entirely praiseworthy. When a good incident presented itself he used it for all it was worth, but the nature of the story demanded a deal of repetitious detail with the result that the bright moments are offset by many that are exceedingly tiresome. The idea is nothing but an exposition of the "chase" with the rough and ready slapstick happily eliminated. A newly wedded couple is fleeing from the wrath of father and before the bride and groom can present the final clinch, safe from intruders, there is offered a lot of highfalutin comedy. One must be quick-witted to appreciate all the complicated details, for there is scarcely a moment when the action isn't proceeding at top speed.

The bridal chamber at a hotel—to say nothing of the lobby, the elevator, and the hall compose most of the backgrounds. And moving against these settings are a peppery bell-hop, a trick house detective, a runaway girl, about to be married, a few irate papas, a two-gun personage from the West, and a divorcee. The plot becomes involved with a counterplot or three, and it is a mad chase from the moment that the newlyweds elope to the time that they receive the parental blessing. Mr. Neilan might have dispensed with certain wordy subtitles for the sake of dramatic unity. Still the picture is easily followed by those who see the introductory flash. A cast of conspicuous ability deserves much of the credit for getting the comedy over. Matt Moore, Marjorie Daw, Wesley Barry, Tom Guise and Russell Simpson, are the players who emphasize the highlights. You may classify it as a fast moving, mirth provoking comedy.—Length, 5 reels. Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Don't Ever Marry" is the title of the matrimonial satire which Edgar Franklin wrote and which Marshall Neilan has produced for the screen with a cast that includes Matt Moore, Marjorie Daw, Tom Guise, Adele Farrington, Thomas Jefferson, Herbert Standing, Betty Bouton and others. This is quite a department for Mr. Neilan, but it shows his versatility in the fact that he is as easily at home in comedy as in stories of a more serious nature. "Don't Ever Marry" is the tale of the happenings which take place within twenty-four hours after a secret marriage, when for reasons best known to themselves, two other women claim the young groom as their lawfully wedded husband.

This is an uproarious comedy from the opening scene to the closing episode. The humorous points come from situations in which everyday people find themselves and they are not dependent upon the grotesqueness of any character. Mr. Neilan has transferred all of the high lights of the story and has kept the picture spontaneous with humor throughout. The cast may be called genuine all-star since it carries names which are familiar to every picturegoer. And these players take advantage of the highly amusing complications in a manner which stamps them as artists of the first order.

PROGRAM READER

"Don't Ever Marry," the latest production offered by Marshall Neilan, is an uproarious comedy and it comes to this theatre next ———— with an all-star cast headed by Matt Moore. This is a film translation of Edgar Franklin's sparkling story of the same name and the production is a surprise coming directly after the dramatic offering from the same director, "The River's End." It is safe to say that Mr. Neilan will lose none of his admirers, but will gain more for it depicts a whole series of as laughable scenes as has ever been filmed. The complications are so fast and furious that any attempt to describe them is impossible, but rest assured that the picture is exceedingly fascinating.

SUGGESTIONS

You can exploit this feature as Marshall Neilan's latest. Then you can go into detail concerning the fact that this director is equally at home in comedy as in pictures of a more serious nature. Tell that his versatility is proven here. Play up the title in all your copy and use teasers written around it. Treat your copy in a humorous way and inject plenty of "pep" into your descriptions. Use catch lines. Mention the players' names. Most of them are well known to your fans.

"BULLET PROOF"
(Universal)

Two-fisted Action in Harry Carey's Latest

IT isn't to be expected that Harry Carey can be furnished with as fine a Western as "Overland Red" every time he faces the camera, but when one comes along with one which is so acceptable as "Bullet Proof" there need be no complaint. The outstanding point of this feature is the action which is not only of the fast moving variety but which presents considerable of a punch. Of course the plot needs explanation in several instances since there are times when it violates logic, but the incident is so colorful and the suspense so acute that the average spectator isn't going to worry about any holes in the pattern.

The star takes up the life of a bandit in order to avenge his father's death—an idea that has been worked before in his photoplays, though the execution of it is treated differently. Conclusions are jumped at rather rapidly to make it always ring with reality, particularly when the romantic thread is introduced. The hero and heroine meet and a proposal of marriage is offered in the space of a single flash. Again it is remarkable that bandits can roam at large and indulge in wholesale killings without any interference from the law. Carey goes about his task in his customary cool and nerveless manner, and joins the bandits to get another bandit who for some unexplainable reason prefers his own company.

The Carey group does not stage any old fashioned "stick-up" with innocent parties as the victims. They could almost be called innocent themselves because of the unbounded villainy of the lone rider. The moment comes when he has dispensed with all his enemies except Carey, but the latter is so quick on the draw that he lives to ride away with the girl of his heart. There is no denying the fact that the picture measures out a healthy lot of Western action—action which is perfectly blended with the backgrounds of primeval nature which Lynn Reynolds has collected. The title has its meaning in the charmed life of the hero who credits his safety to a religious emblem tied around his throat. Robert McKim is as devilish as ever as the villain. Length, 5 reels. Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

Harry Carey, the popular interpreter of Western pictures, will come to the ———— theatre on —— —— of —— week in his latest photoplay entitled "Bullet Proof." This story is by John Frederick, the scenario and direction having been attended to by Lynn Reynolds, and it presents the star in an ideal role for the expression of his virile personality. This time he appears as Pierre Winton, who takes up the cause of avenging his father's death, and to execute his plan he turns bandit and joins the outlaw band headed by Jim Boone. McGurk, a lone bandit, is the object of his search and war is declared between the lone rider and the Boone group.

Pierre goes to a masquerade ball one night and when he returns to the camp he discovers that his friends have all been killed with the exception of Boone's daughter, Jackie. So Pierre hops into the saddle to run his enemy to earth. And when he finds him vengeance is executed. The picture is well punctuated with red-blooded action—action which generates a considerable number of thrills. Mr. Reynold's direction is praiseworthy in every particular and his ability to incorporate marvelous scenery is discernable again. Mr. Carey gives a colorful performance in the role of Pierre and he is ably assisted by Robert McKim and Kathleen O'Connor.

PROGRAM READER

The next picture to be presented at the ———— ———— theatre is "Bullet Proof," the Universal feature starring Harry Carey, which comes ———— ———— the —— —. This popular actor has an ideal vehicle here for the expression of his virile personality, and he gives an uncommonly good performance in the role of the young miner who turns outlaw in order to avenge his father's death. How he executes his plan, how romance comes to him, how he is saved time and again through the strange emblem, which he carries on his chest are incidents which make a truly exciting story and one which told on the screen provides an hour of interesting entertainment. The picture is rich in action and suspense and contains some marvelous photography.

SUGGESTIONS

Feature this picture as a splendid type of Western—one that travels from introduction to conclusion with plenty of red-blooded action and suspense. Mention that Harry Carey always gives a finished performance and tell of his past pictures, particularly the last previous release, "Overland Red." Decorate your lobby in Western atmosphere. Use catch lines such as "He was an outlaw, but what was it that made him bullet proof?" Feature the other players, especially Robert McKim. Your steady patrons are familiar with his work and will testify to the fact that he is the best villain on the screen. Use stills of the marvelous photography. Feature the director and bring out that he is an expert in collecting marvelous scenes. Bring out that the picture is a Western melodrama that carries heart interest, humor and punch.

"THE TOLL GATE"

(Paramount-Artcraft)

Quite Entertaining Picture with Hart as Good-Bad Man Again

WILLIAM S. HART is quoted as saying that his first independent production, "The Toll Gate," is the best picture he ever made, which makes us wonder if he has forgotten that graphic offering of the past, "The Cold Deck," or two later releases, "Hell's Hinges," and "The Poppy Girl's Husband." True it is a rugged type of story and presents an abundance of vital action and virile characterization, but where it falters is in presenting a line of incident which follows the beaten track. Hart, who collaborated with his director, Hillyer, in fashioning the tale, has unearthed nothing new in the shape of idea or treatment.

He has written himself a nice, fat part which gives him plenty of opportunity to reveal his dynamic personality. And in taking advantage of it he has allowed the action to drag at times in order that every shade and mood may be expressed to the minutest detail. There is a quantity of suspense in "The Toll Gate" which isn't found in the stereotyped narrative, but in the compelling performance of the star himself. Which is another way of saying that the picture is Hart "hook, line and sinker." With a less magnetic and talented actor it would only pass as an average Western. The star picks up the mantle of the good-bad man again a mantle he placed upon the shelf several months ago—and it fits h'm as well as ever.

It is perfectly obvious from the start that he will be reformed and regenerated through the influence of a worthy woman—a woman who does not make her appearance until the meat of the drama has been fully digested by the spectator. He indulges in some heroics to bring out the loneliness of his life, though they are the kind which are easily assimilated. He has tacked on a new twist for the conclusion. Instead of riding away into the dying sunset with her he goes his lonely way alone so that she may not grow to admire such an unworthy outcast. Thus the pathos of his life is consistent throughout. The action which depicts his bandit life is highly colorful and calls for plenty of hard riding and two-gun shooting. And here is where "The Toll Gate" is strong, because Hart is supreme in that line of work. The acting of his assistants is commendable, especially in the case of Anna Q. Nilsson and Jack Richardson. The technical effects are also praiseworthy.—Length, 5 reels. Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Black Deering	William S. Hart
Mary Brown	Anna Q. Nilsson
The Sheriff	Jack Richardson
Jordan	Jack Singleton
"The Little Feller"	Master Richard Hendrick

By William S. Hart and Lambert Hillyer.
Directed by Lambert Hillyer.
Photographed by Joe August.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

William S. Hart, the best known delineator of Western characters on the screen, will appear at the ———— theatre next ———— in "The Toll Gate," which is the first of his own productions under his new Famous Players contract. Mr. Hart wrote this photoplay in collaboration with Lambert Hillyer and considers it the greatest picture in which he has ever appeared—an opinion which is shared by many. In "The Toll Gate" the star is seen as the leader of a bandit band whose better nature asserts itself at the last. As Black Deering he is hotly pursued by a sheriff's posse. He escapes them at one point by making a leap of over sixty feet from a cliff into the raging river below. But again they pick up the trail but he eludes them by riding his Pinto pony into the bed of the river and following the stream into a subterranean passage.

After a series of thrilling episodes he gives himself up to the law. A generous sheriff allows him to depart over the Mexican border to freedom. "The Toll Gate" is an impressive drama of self-sacrifice and red-blooded manhood as well as a glowing picture of the West that has passed away. Mr. Hart gives his customary vigorous performance and his support consists of Anna Q. Nilsson and Jack Richardson. Mr. Hillyer directed the picture.

PROGRAM READER

William S. Hart, who comes to this theatre next ———— in "The Toll Gate," is said to have the most powerful dramatic role of his career as Black Deering, the bandit chieftain in the story which was written by Lambert Hillyer and himself. Mr. Hart considers the picture his finest contribution to the screen and his opinion is upheld by observing critics who have seen it. It is a typical tale of the west or southwest in the days when bandits roamed at large. The star appears in a role which fits him better, perhaps, than any other—that of a typical bad man who has a square streak nevertheless and who refuses to depart from his code of honor. The picture is punctuated with startling thrills and red-blooded action and the interest is sustained throughout. Mr. Hart is supported by Anna Q. Nilsson and Jack Richardson.

SUGGESTIONS

You can bill this feature as Bill Hart's greatest and not go wrong. Mention that the star considers it his best offering to date. Mention that it is the first of his own productions under his new Famous Players contract. Tell that he appears in the most colorful role of his career—the western bad man. Bring out that the picture carries thrill after thrill. Tell that the star is supported by Anna Q. Nilsson and Jack Richardson, two players who are stars in their own names. The picture can be exploited in a lobby display with typical western atmosphere, and you can also stage a prologue. Tell that Mr. Hart wrote the story in collaboration with his director, Lambert Hillyer. Feature it as a stirring Western which carries a full quota of red-blooded action.

"DOLLAR FOR DOLLAR"

(Keenan-Pathe)

Keenan Puts Over Another Good Picture

HERE'S a Keenan picture which should give satisfaction wherever it is shown. The star's experience for years has taught him the value of human interest stories and their drawing power as a box office attraction. He must have had this idea in view when he selected this story for it contains most of the essentials that are necessary to give it the proper attractive qualities.

Of course the picture has its weaknesses but what feature hasn't. However, it has enough heart interest, dramatic moments, thrills and suspense to make any audience sit up and take notice. To relieve the tense moments, there is also introduced enough light comedy scenes to give the mind the necessary relaxation.

And let us tell you a word about Frank Keenan' acting and direction. As an actor in a role of this kind where repose alternates with strong action, he couldn't be beaten. And his direction which required the taking of many close ups and the drawing out of many beautiful sets shows a carefulness in detail that would be hard to excel.

Marcus Gard is a power in the financial world where he has the reputation of being soulless. The widow of a man he has ruined in business blackmails him. He feels this keenly until she points out that she considers it as much her right to do this as he considered it his to cheat her husband. However, he becomes fascinated with the charms of this unusual woman, falls in love with her and reforms. Length 5 reels. Frank Leonard.

Story by Ethel Watts Mumford
Directed by Frank Keenan
Cameraman Robert Newhart

PRESS NOTICE STORY

Frank Keenan's next production for Pathe release, "Dollar for Dollar," will appear at this theatre on ———— of next ————

It is one of those peculiarly interesting pictures which have the combination of good story and reputable star to make it one of the most interesting features yet produced under the Pathe banner. And we must not forget to mention that Mr. Keenan is also the director of this film. In selecting the story Mr. Keenan has picked a vehicle to suit his own personality and one which in every way gives him the opportunity to bring out his talents as a character actor and at the same time uphold his reputation as one of the greatest actors of the present day.

In "Dollar for Dollar" he is pictured as being a soulless financier who is blackmailed by a beautiful widow, whose fortune was lost through the shady transactions of Keenan and his business rival. He tells the widow that he believes she is "a woman without a soul" but she answers "am I using any different methods in getting this money than you have in obtaining yours"

However, he becomes fascinated with the charms of this unusual woman, falls in love with her and reforms. But he does not forget his business rival or the methods he employed in striking at a defenceless woman and he does not forget to repay him. Interwoven in the story is the life of another woman who is thrown into an insane asylum by her heartless husband but who escapes and kills the man who ruined her life. These incidents are only a few of the many smashing climaxes in this interesting and powerful story.

PROGRAM READER

Manager ———— announces that "Dollar for Dollar," the Pathe release starring Frank Keenan will be the attraction at this theatre on ———— of next ————

This feature is considered Mr. Keenan's best to date and for real down right amusement coupled with many dramatic moments, this feature could not be beaten. In other words, this picture is another heart interest story with a tremendously strong appeal.

The star is pictured as a soulless financier who is blackmailed by a beautiful widow whose fortune was lost through the shady transactions of Keenan and his business rival. When Keenan tells her that he believes she is a woman without a soul, she answers that it is as much her right as he considered it his to cheat her husband. However, he falls in love with the beautiful woman and reforms. But he does not fail to even matters with his rival who has struck at a defenseless woman in the dark. And there is another story interwoven into this one which tells of the life of a woman who is thrown into an asylum of the insane by her husband. She escapes, however, makes her way to his home and kills him, thus involving our hero and his beloved one, who appear upon the scene after the tragedy. But she is found hiding in the house, confesses to the crime and brings the story to a satisfactory conclusion.

SUGGESTIONS

When you book this feature your best bet would be to feature Keenan and impress upon them that he is one of the greatest character actors of modern times. If you have not done so before mention his latest successes, "Brothers Divided" and "Smoldering Embers," and tell them that the picture has a story with an appeal which will interest them. And it should, for it contains most of the essentials necessary to give it that drawing power.

It has a strong dramatic story with heart interest and thrills and is just one of the kind which Keenan would pick for his own personality and acting abilities.

You might also mention that this picture was produced by Mr. Keenan who has had a world of experience upon the stage and screen which he uses in this picture.

The cast might also come in for its usual amount of exploitation. Among its principal members are Kathleen Kirkman, Kate Van Buren, Harry Van Meter, Jay Belasco, Gertrude Claire and Larry Steers.

"THE COST"
(Paramount-Artcraft)

Picture Is Disappointing Through Lack of Moving Moments

THIS picture will doubtless prove disappointing to those patrons who recognize David Graham Phillips as one of the few vivid story-tellers of modern fiction. It strikes us that the screen version attempts to tell too much and by presenting such a wealth of detail, the moving moments are few and far between. The adaptation follows the story too closely—a story which covers a period of several years and considerable territory. Not having the advantage of dialogue, the action has a tendency to become confusing because the assortment of situations are loosely strung together.

Yet the moral value of "The Cost" is well emphasized which in a way compensates for the lack of dramatic punch. The story is nothing but a lesson to those contemplating matrimony. The marriage contract is always a gamble even with worldly men and women, but when the parties to it are vicious and ignorant it comes near being a tragedy. This is the lesson that the picture teaches and from this angle it is interesting and valuable. One looks with doubt upon a young girl who marries a young rounder, against her father's wishes, with his promise that their marriage will aid him to reform. Her trials and tribulations with her worthless husband form the basis of the plot. Proof is given that she pays a heavy cost.

The picture drags considerably and in his haste to quicken up the finale the director lacked inspiration. It isn't a bit convincing to see the death of the husband and his wife re-united to a former admirer presented with a subtitle and two scenes. Violet Heming plays the wife in a quiet but effective manner, though she might have been more consistent with her characterization. Seven years should have made quite a difference in her appearance. Ralph Kellard as the husband is more in character. The picture is handsomely mounted and presents a few spectacular scenes. Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The story of a girl who marries a young philanderer against her father's wishes, with his promise that their marriage will aid him to reform is the theme of the Paramount Artcraft picture, "The Cost," which will appear at the ———— theatre beginning ———— David Graham Phillips is the author of this vital story, which was a favorite with him. He quite surpassed his contemporaries in painting life in the upper strata of society and his subjects can be called genuine slices of that life. It is his heroine's trial and tribulations with her worthless husband which form the basis of this moving drama.

The theme establishes the moral that the girl who bestows her love unworthily must pay the cost. The little touches of humanity found in the original story are incorporated here and they provide moments of suspensive interest. Clara S. Beranger, who scenarioized the tale, has been faithful to Mr. Phillips, since she has taken the vital points and emphasized them with an experienced hand. Harley Knoles' direction is praiseworthy in the manner he has established the moral and kept the action moving. The cast features Violet Heming in the leading role and she plays with considerable charm and authority. Assisting her are Ralph Kellard, Edwin Mordant and others.

PROGRAM READER

A David Graham Phillips story is always interesting. This late lamented author knew how to paint life as he saw it, consequently when a subject of his reaches the screen it is bound to make good entertainment because of its wealth of moving action, its fine characterization and its excellent moral. "The Cost," regarded by many as his greatest story, will be shown at the ———— theatre next ———— with a cast that includes Violet Heming, Ralph Kellard, Edwin Mordant and other players of recognized ability. While we can't go into details concerning the plot let it be said that it features a girl who marries against her father's wishes. The cost of her folly is brought home to her and the spectators in a dramatic manner.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is an author whose name means much in popular fiction, so it would be well to exploit him to every advantage. You can link up with your bookdealer in bringing out his stories, particularly "The Cost." Feature it as a society drama which carries a fine moral value. Tell that it features Violet Heming, who will be remembered for her portrayal in "Everywoman," and Ralph Kellard, who is a favroite with picturegoers. Play up the title. This can be worked up in exploitation through the stores. Such catch lines as "If you think the cost of these ————is high, go down to the ———— and see what a girl's marriage cost!" Another, "The cost of this ———— is $————. See "The Cost" at the ———— and be satisfied with both."

CATCH LINES

She disobeyed her fathers' wishes and married him. And she reaped "the cost" of her folly. See 'The Cost," a picture of vital interest to everyone.

"WOULD YOU FORGIVE"
(Fox)

Small Appeal in Conventional Society Drama

THE story of "Would You Forgive?" runs in a circle. It starts with domestic happiness, digs up enough of the husband's past to obtain material for five reels ended by a little padding and ends as it begins. Everything about the production is conventional, even to the little child who helps to waste footage with her cute poses.

You may guess the story from the title. Mr. Cleaveland has a past, a dark and dire past. He carelessly shows his wife some photos of past sweethearts and hands her some letters to be destroyed. But his wife reads one and learns the truth. A few dramatic scenes and speeches at this point emphasize the general double standard of morality. He is forgiven, but when an ex-convict and likewise ex-fiancee of his wife turns up, he accuses her. The two are discovered alone with a child that Mrs. Cleaveland has adopted. But the little girl is found to be none other than Cleaveland's own daughter, left at an asylum by its mother. He is forgiven again by his wife, but this time in such a half-hearted way so that we do not lose patience with his charitable woman. The ex-convict is a blackmailer one moment and an altruistic knight of chivalry in another. Mr. Cleaveland's past is also discovered in a crude manner. Having a "closed chapter" in his life, he naturally would have taken more care of the incriminating evidence. And his former mistress's sister is brought on the scene on a very slim pretense.

Your audience may feel as if they had intruded on a family squabble that doesn't concern them. The "double standard" angle, dwelt so briefly upon, is the only appeal. The star, Vivian Rich, is good, as is the small cast. Detail and direction are both well done. Length, 5 reels. Mathew A. Taylor.

THE CAST

Mrs. John Cleaveland	Vivian Rich
John Cleaveland	Tom Chatterton
Paul Horton	Ben Deely
Miss Duval	Lillie Leslie

Story by Julius G. Furthman.
Directed by Scott Dunlap.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

Vivian Rich, the new Fox star, will be seen in a modern society drama, "Would You Forgive?" at the ———— theatre of ———— Miss Rich is not new to the screen, having played leading roles for some time, but is a newcomer to stardom.

In the picture she plays the part of Mrs. John Cleaveland, who after three years of married life is childless. To greatly her mother love she adopts a child, keeping the fact a secret from her husband, who does not approve of the plan. Reading some of her husband's old letters which he has given her to destroy, she learns of a closed chapter of his life, which has been kept a secret from her. He pleads forgiveness, and his wife is willing to forget the past.

Mrs. Cleaveland had once been engaged to Paul Horton, now an ex-convict. He returns and asks her for money to leave town and begin life anew, and Mrs. Cleaveland, fearing that he will reveal the existence of her adopted daughter, gives him her rings. Mr. Cleaveland, tracing the "lost" jewelry, discovers the two in a compromising situation, and accuses Horton of being the father of the child. A letter, however, proves the little girl to be none other than the daughter of Cleaveland himself, left at an institution by his mother. The repentant husband once more begs his wife's forgiveness.

The picture is gripping throughout and is full of dramatic situations which do not permit one dull moment.

PROGRAM READER

A stirring drama of modern American life will be the attraction at this theatre on ———— The title is "Would You Forgive?" and the star is pretty Vivian Rich, who reaches the height of stardom after many successful roles as leading lady. If you have never seen any of her past work, take this opportunity to see the new star, for she is due to be one of the bright lights of filmdom. And if you have already seen the charming star, you will need no urging to be here on ————, to witness her first starring vehicle.

SUGGESTIONS

Play up the new star of this picture. She has been on the screen for some time, and she will be recognized and appreciated. Insist that she has a story which gives her an opportunity to display all of her histrionic talents in this picture. Tell the theme upon which the picture is built—the husband with a past. Try to arouse interest in your catch lines on the question of forgiving the past. Emphasize the fact that it is an American drama, and a modern drama. The title gives a personal appeal and try to get the most out of this.

CATCH LINES

A gripping society drama of today, with the charming actress, Vivian Rich, in the stellar role.

A picture that brings home a much-discussed question in a dramatic story.

A new star in a new picture that gives her every opportunity to arouse your sympathy.

Interesting Moments in Homespun Story Despite Hokum

ONE need not look for any variations in the character of the bashful, awkward youth that is enacted by Charles Ray. This time the star presents the type with all his customary charm and embellishes it with a rare stroke of reality—a stroke which even an arbitrary plot cannot destroy. The story is written around a farmer boy who has returned from the war and Paris, and up to the time he discovers that his old sweetheart doesn't love him, the picture reveals as delicious comedy and appealing pathos as one would want to see. Then in order to supply a dramatic note, to add the punch as it were, those in charge have introduced a plot which, while it may fulfill the demands of the story, fails in being genuine because it is arbitrarily developed and full of hokum.

The French sweetheart comes over and the subsequent scenes show some highfalutin action in which she is rescued from kidnappers. It strikes us that her appearance could have been employed in a dozen different ways to better advantage. Still there are sufficient headlights in this action which somewhat counteract the illogical plot and keep it from becoming unduly conspicuous. No better pathos has ever been represented on the screen than in the scene which shows the khaki-clad youth being reunited to his mother. And Ray plays this bit with wonderfully effective appeal.

Again he shows his ability as a light comedian in the barn dance scene and in those moments when he attempts to make love with the aid of his English-French dictionary. These are the human touches which tone up the picture and make it interesting despite the melodramatic hokum. The youth—the two girls—the rural folks—these are all genuine and the same may be said about the atmosphere of the old homestead. If the development of the plot had been worked out differently the picture might have been a knockout. The acting is splendid, especially that of Bert Woodruff as the youth's father.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

Directed by Jerome Storm.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Charles Ray's latest photoplay to appear at the _____ theatre next _____ is "Paris Green," which is written by Julien Josephson, the author of most of the star's offerings, and which is directed by Jerome Storm. In this story Mr. Ray appears in khaki in the earlier reels as Corporal Luther Green, who spends an eventful hour in Paris before he returns to "civvies" at Quigley Corners, N. J. He learns that his old sweetheart has become engaged to another during his absence. Although the discovery has made him decidedly glum, his gloom evaporates when his Parisian friend comes to America in search of a missing uncle.

She has hardly set foot in New York before two crooks kidnap her. But Ninon escapes and boards the train for Quigley Corners—the only refuge she knows. At the station she meets Luther, citybound, and he takes her back to the farm. The crooks get possession of the girl again but the ex-corporal rescues her and in the presence of her uncle who has been found, Luther and Ninon declare their love for each other. The picture is a typical Ray offering and is crammed full of the customary human touches and homespun simplicity. Mr. Ray succeeds again in making his character live and the farmer boy-hero is one of his finest cameos. In his support are Ann May in the opposite role, Gordon Mullen, Otto Hoffman and Gertrude Claire.

PROGRAM READER

Charlie Ray, the most human, natural actor on the screen, will come to the _____theatre beginning _____ in his latest photoplay entitled "Paris Green." This offering is similar to the previous Ray pictures in that it exploits him as a bashful, awkward youth of the small village. Luther Green is the lad's name and he gets his nickname, "Paris," because of a certain hour he spent in Paris while serving with the A. E. F. He returns to "civvies" but finds that his old sweetheart has become engaged to another. Then into his life comes Ninon, a girl of the Paris boulevards. How he discovers that she is the girl of his ideals, how he rescues her from kidnappers—how he makes love in his simple, boyish fashion are events which compose a highly entertaining picture and one which will captivate everyone.

SUGGESTIONS

A Charles Ray picture is usually sure of crowding them in because the patrons know what to expect. You can tell them in this instance that the star appears in his familiar role of a farmer boy, the only variation being the fact that he wears khaki in the earlier reels, having just returned from France. Use catch lines such as "He left Quigley Corners as Luther Green, but when he came back they called him 'Paris' Green. Why?" Tell enough of the highlights of the story to excite curiosity. Play up the picture as an effervescent rural comedy—a comedy generously sprinkled with humor and human touches. Play up his feminine lead, Ann May. The title is suggestive of good exploitation. You can use it in catch lines and teasers.

CATCH LINES

See Charles Ray in his wonderfully human photoplay, "Paris Green." Five reels of as delicious comedy as has ever been shown on the screen.

Will Rogers Makes Another Entertaining Picture

IF your patrons like Will Rogers and his work in pictures you needn't be afraid to book this one for it contains about all the ingredients that go to make up a good program picture. It has heart interest, suspense and dramatic moments, together with little touches of comedy which should interest and amuse.

The story is a very fair one as stories go now-a-days. But it is Will Rogers' personality upon the screen and his droll, quiet way of picturing the character he plays in this feature that account for its success. And where did he get all this. Surely not in the two-a-day houses, throwing a lariat and telling jokes. It probably "jes came natural to him."

In this film Rogers is seen as the kind, simple hearted Arizona rancher who goes to the big city and is buncoed by a gang of swindlers. But he does not seek revenge on them for he says, "if I get them, they'll probably have it spent by that time." Here the story takes a turn and concentrates its action upon a young gambler whose sweetheart jilts him for the "good things," she obtains from a powerful ward heeler. The young gambler is arrested together with Rogers in a "raid" and both are seen in jail where the young "sport" vows vengeance on his enemy.

It is here that Rogers arouses sympathy for the way he tries to persuade his new found acquaintance to forget the injury done him. He fails, however, for the gambler subsequently kills his foe and Rogers is accused of the murder. But things are righted in the end and we see him in a close-up with the woman who loves and tried to save him. Length, 5 reels.—Frank Leonard.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Will Rogers in his latest Goldwyn production, "The Strange Boarder," will appear at the _____ theatre on _____ of next _____.

This is another picture of the Rogers type which is full of heart interest and dramatic appeal. It should amuse and interest where it appears.

Sam Gardiner, an honest Arizona rancher goes to the big city with his little motherless son and is swindled out of ten thousand dollars by a band of crooks. He does not pursue them for he believes that should they be caught the money would be spent. Sam strikes up an acquaintance with "Kittie" Hinch, a young gambler, who has become wildly jealous of the attentions paid to his wife by a prominent ward heeler. In a raid Sam and the young man are arrested and thrown in jail, where our hero tries to disuade him from his purpose of killing his enemy. He fails, however, for the gambler subsequently kills his foe and Rogers is accused of the murder. But we have forgotten to mention that while stopping at a boarding house Sam meets a young lady who falls in love with him and now tries to save him from the police by perjuring herself. She does not succeed for her story is untrue. Things begin to look badly for Rogers when "Kittie's" girl appears upon the scene and informs the police that "Kittie" told her to come and tell them that he was guilty of the crime. And we next see the young gambler crossing the Mexican border and making his escape, previous to which he sends a telegram verifying the young girl's statement. The mystery is now explained and the final close-up shows Rogers and his sweetheart in a loving embrace.

PROGRAM READER

Will Rogers will appear at this theatre in his latest Goldwyn production, "The Strange Boarder" next _____.

Heart interest, thrills, dramatic moments and pretty touches of comedy are the ingredients which compose this feature and which when summed up as a whole will surely entertain and amuse those who witness this production. Mr. Rogers again displays his talents as a character actor putting much appeal into the role and also adding many touches of comedy to vary the action.

He was an honest Arizona rancher who came to the big city, only to get swindled out of ten thousand dollars by a band of crooks. His forgiving nature will not allow him to pursue the "trixters" for he believes that should they be caught the money would be spent. By accident he meets a young gambler who has become wildly jealous over the attentions paid to his girl by a prominent ward heeler. In a raid upon a gambling house Rogers and his new found acquaintance are arrested and thrown in jail, where the gambler makes known his intention of killing his enemy when his term is up. Our hero tries to dissuade him from his purpose. He fails, however, for the gambler subsequently kills his foe and Rogers is accused of the murder. But things are righted in the end by the gambler who sends his "girl" to tell the police that he is the murderer after he has made his escape into Mexico. And then we see Rogers in a final close-up with the girl he loves, a young lady he has met in a boarding house, while in the big city.

SUGGESTIONS

This is a very fair Rogers picture in which the star gets a great deal out of a story that is not of the best. Still by clever acting, and attention to detail, the star has managed to make an entertaining picture which should make its appeal to those who see it.

As usual you should concentrate your exploitation on Rogers.

Let your patrons know that the star has another picture with enough heart interest, dramatic moments and thrills to interest them. But do not go too strong on the story, for it seems to be composed of a number of incidents written around the star and to satisfy his personality.

Simplex

WE'VE NEVER HEARD OF A "PLAYED-OUT" SIMPLEX!!!

Nine years ago the first Simplex was put into commercial use.

Since then thousands of them have been installed.

Seems as though some of them should be showing signs of old age.

But every day we receive letters from users of our earlier models asking that their mechanism be equipped with up-to-date appliances: think of a nine year old picture machine ready for another period of faithful service!

And, do you know, it's quite a problem to pick up a second-hand SIMPLEX?

When next you visit your supply man's repair shop, see if you can find a "sick" Simplex—and then count the number of other machines that are on the shelf for "treatment."

THESE FACTS SHOULD PROVE TO YOU THAT SIMPLEX IS A SPLENDID INVESTMENT

When Are You Going to Invest?

The "Keyed" Ad

¶ One of the facts to be regretted about picture advertising is the difficulty of "keying" copy and checking a paper's "pull" by direct results.

¶ In this field only the "accessory" advertiser has the opportunity to definitely trace every cent of his advertising appropriation.

¶ One reason why Motion Picture News carries the bulk of the "accessory" business and many exclusive accounts.

¶ Ask such men as Dan Barton—of the Barton organ and Bartola instrument—what Motion Picture News advertising has done for them. Barton knows keyed inquiries and directly traceable sales furnish the evidence back of his continued big space advertising.

¶ Ask Barton how many exhibitors called on him in Chicago last week with the introduction "I saw your ad in the News." Hear him tell you that—

JESSE L. LASKY PRESENTS

CECIL B. DeMILLE'S

PRODUCTION

"Old Wives for New"

BY DAVID GRAHAM PHILLIPS

Scenario by JEANIE MACPHERSON

A Paramount Artcraft Picture

YOU HAVE shown Cecil B. De Mille's latest production "Why Change Your Wife?" to large enthusiastic audiences.

De Mille's penetrating study of married happiness has found a reception never before accorded to a motion picture. It has broken records everywhere.

A few years ago De Mille created an epoch-making production, a picture just as penetrating, just as beautifully produced, just as universal in its appeal, as "Why Change Your Wife?"

This was "Old Wives for New." It was the first of his series on the marriage problem. But there were fewer theatres and fewer theatre-goers then.

Now you can show it both to those who saw it then and to those who didn't see it but wish they had.

They have seen "Why Change Your Wife?" They all want to see this study of marriage from a different angle. They will throng to see it.

New prints and a complete new line of accessories ready.

OUT of New York's Ghetto —out of the squalor and misery, rose a song that flooded the world with melody.

A song of mother love. A song that needed no words, because it was played on the strings of the human heart.

Humoresque! A photoplay? Yes, but more than a photoplay —the melody of life itself!

Humoresque! That laugh on life with the tear beneath! The soul of a people, in a picture that untwists the chains that tie the hidden heart of harmony

Humoresque! A photoplay that you will never forget.

"THE COURAGE OF MARGE O'DOONE"
BY
JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD
Hard to Forget
—the bloody fight between two grizzly bears.
—the haunted hut of Tavish
—the search for Marge in the wilderness — their meeting.
—the gruelling battle between two men in a bear-pit
—the wolf-dog outlaw, Baree.
—Marge and David's fight when caught in the Nest.
—the strange meeting far from civilization.
—the grandeur, beauty, thrill and adventure of it all.

"With a choking gurgle the giant went down!"

ALBERT E. SMITH presents

"THE COURAGE OF MARGE O'DOONE"

BY

JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD

Fight! Fight! Fight!

In a bear-pit in the Arctic, David Raine faced the hulking, brutish giant of a mountaineer. Like cave men of the Stone Age, they began their battle for the possession of a woman. One saw her soul—the other her body.

Pitted against this mountain of flesh and bone, David's chances were slim. Blow after blow he landed on the brutish hulk . . . twice they circled the blood-spattered arena. David's face was warm with the gore of his enemy. But battered and swollen, the giant came on and on. David was not battling for victory—but for his life. He was literally beating himself to pieces, like a ship hammering on a reef.

Like a maddened monster the giant kept coming on, always trying for that fatal clinch. And David knew it. There was still one last chance—one hope. It was the horrible trick of the bush country—the so-called "knee break," that he had seen used before with terrible effect.

Suddenly he shot himself out—a hundred and sixty pounds of bone and sinew -straight as an arrow against the brute's knees, and the gory giant went down like a stricken steer——

That's one of the score or more big thrills and suspense moments in this big special Vitagraph production.

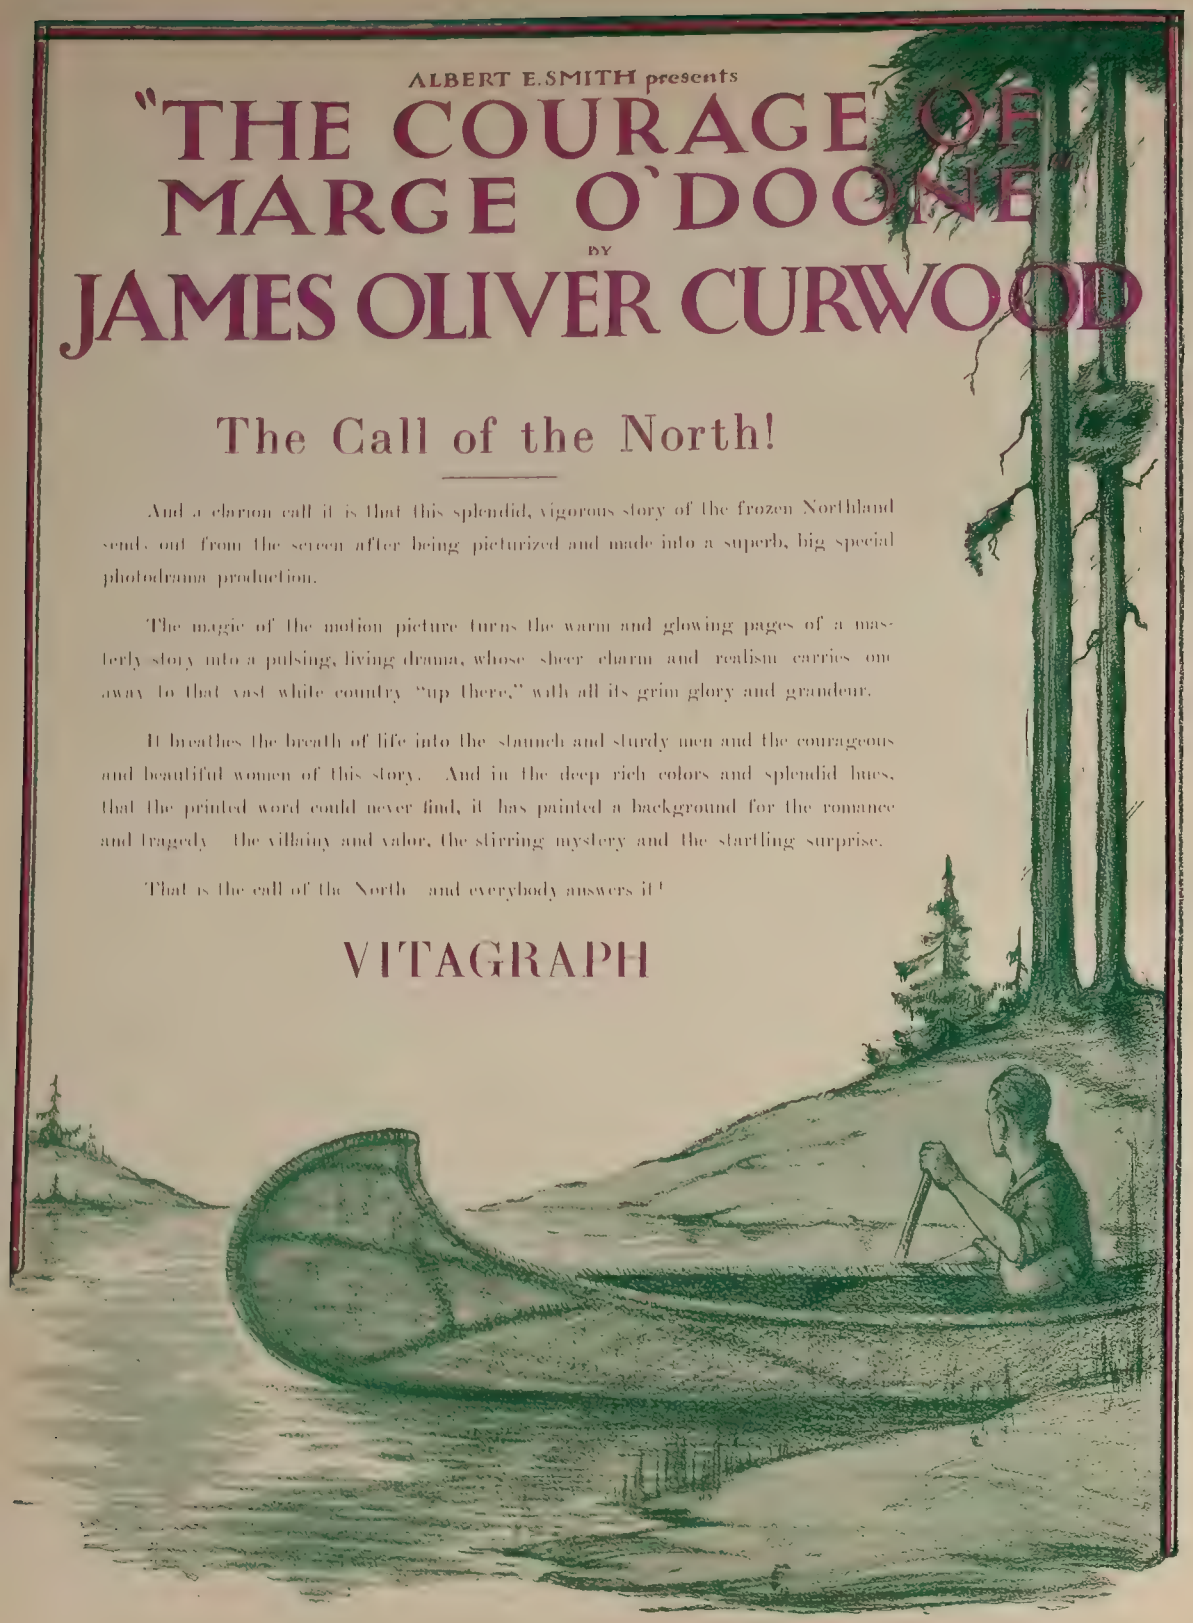
The Call of the North!



And a clarion call it is that this splendid, vigorous story of the frozen Northland sends out from the screen after being picturized and made into a superb, big special photodrama production.

The magic of the motion picture turns the warm and glowing pages of a masterly story into a pulsing, living drama, whose sheer charm and realism carries one away to that vast white country "up there," with all its grim glory and grandeur.

It breathes the breath of life into the staunch and sturdy men and the courageous and beautiful women of this story. And in the deep rich colors and splendid hues, that the printed word could never find, it has painted a background for the romance and tragedy—the villainy and valor, the stirring mystery and the startling surprise.

That is the call of the North—and everybody answers it!

The Story As Others See It—

The New York Tribune—

"'The Courage of Marge O'Doone' is a northwest classic. Mr. Curwood has given us a great treat and a great book in this latest volume of his. . . . This is a triumph in fiction of the Canadian Northwest."

The Philadelphia Press—

"'The Courage of Marge O'Doone' is a story that never flags, that abounds in unexpected incidents, that is rich in the deep colors of the glorious country in which its scenes are laid. If you want to read a story that travels straight on like a bird on the wing, with a swift series of unforeseen and thrilling episodes and all of it painted against the splendid hues of the wide, generous westland, read 'The Courage of Marge O'Doone.'"

Philadelphia Evening Telegraph—

"Those who like a story brimful of red-blooded adventure, who revel in the life of camp and trail, will enjoy 'The Courage of Marge O'Doone.'"

New York Times—

"There is plenty of incident, plenty of fighting, and some love making in the book, with a heroine of that extraordinarily beautiful, courageous, innocent and trusting type."

Los Angeles Tribune—

"Curwood has many stories of the north woods to his credit, but if he had never written anything except this latest of his novels, 'The Courage of Marge O'Doone,' his reputation would be assured."

Boston Herald and Journal—

"When James Oliver Curwood flies fancifully northward a live story results. 'The Courage of Marge O'Doone' is one of his characteristic narratives, rapid in action and of vigorous pulse."

Minneapolis Herald—

"Mr. Curwood has caught the very spirit of the vigorous life of the north woods, and never has he made that fact clearer than in this romance. . . . It is on the whole a 'rattling good story.'"

Cincinnati Enquirer—

"'The Courage of Marge O'Doone' is a stirring novel of the far Northwest. . . . It is a tale of mystery and of love, with a heroine unusual in fiction—young, brave, and very naive, as she has lived all her life away from civilization."

New York World—

"The romance is written with great spirit. Mr. Curwood obviously knows the forest, and his descriptions of it are very vivid. He is a dauntless fighter, too, and never fails to give some stirring scraps. . . . It is Mr. Curwood's best story . . . and hard to beat."

The Times-Picayune (New Orleans)—

"'The Courage of Marge O'Doone' is a man's story, full of fierce excitement and thrilling adventure."

Indianapolis Star—

"In 'The Courage of Marge O'Doone,' the author, James Oliver Curwood, presents to his readers a tale of romance and adventure depicting life on the Canadian frontier."

Oakland (Cal.) Tribune—

"A fighting tale. If you like strong, vigorous, red-blooded fighting stories, where blows and blood, hatred and murder show themselves, together with the great wild wastes of the frozen north, grizzly bears, fierce malemutes, primitive men, and tender and beautiful women, you will like 'The Courage of Marge O'Doone.' . . . It is a graphic tale, stirring, thrilling and unusual."

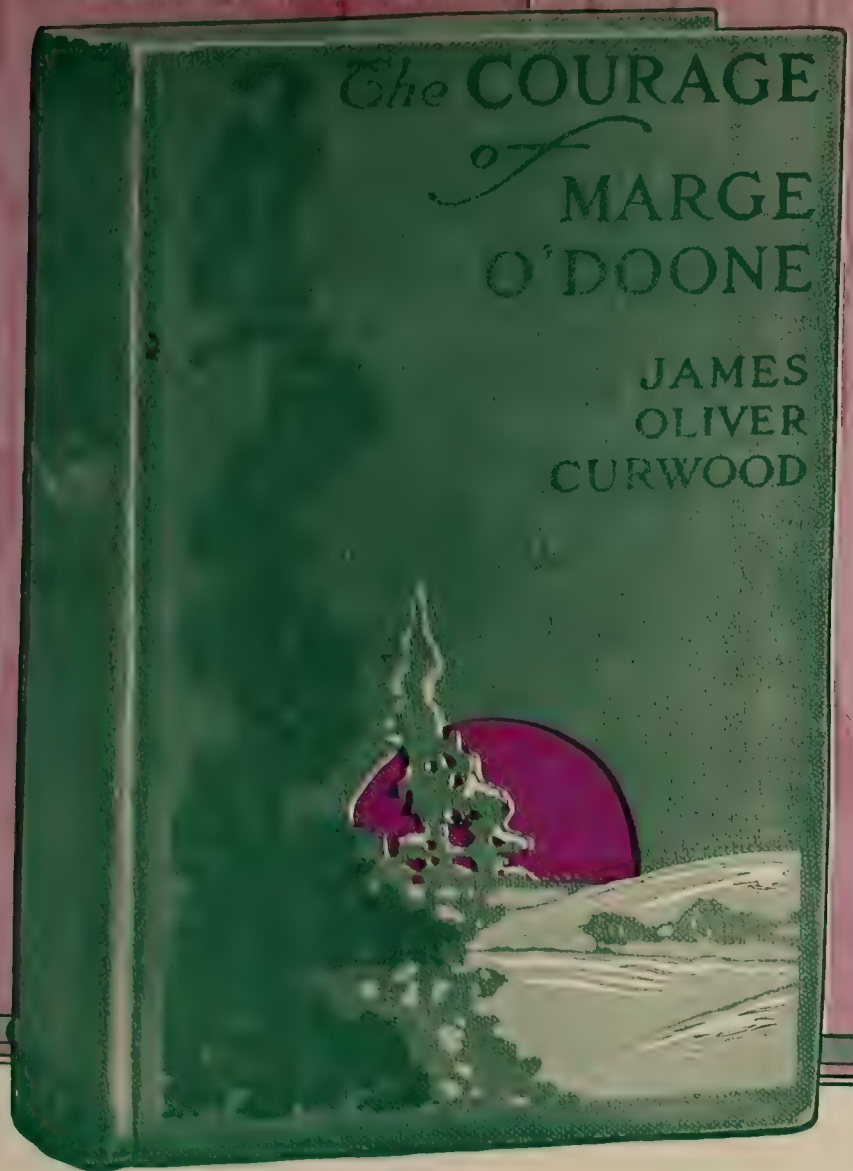
A Photodrama of Mystery and Red-Blooded Adventure!



Directed by

DAVID SMITH

A Vitagraph Special Production

ALBERT E. SMITH presents

"The Courage of Marge O'Doone" is a vigorous, fighting story of primitive men and stout-hearted, beautiful women, fierce huskies and malemutes, red-blooded adventure and rare romance, surprise and suspense, mystery and thrills, staged in the vast white arena of the frozen North. It has all the zip and the zest, the drama and color in its score of highlights that makes it just what it is—a prize special photoplay production. It is a classic of the North—a masterpiece of dramatic writing made into a masterpiece of a photoplay.

It is a gem of the genius of JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD. A born thriller, it travels swiftly and breathlessly along, studded with smashing incident that keeps the suspense and anticipation on edge—makes you guess and guess wrong until the toppling and unexpected climax smites you. It never lags for an instant. One literary critic has proclaimed it a story ready made for the motion picture screen, another has called it hard to beat—declared it the best story that JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD has ever written.

Associated Sub-Franchises

SOME of the biggest exhibitors in the country have devoted nearly a year to the development of our franchise plan. They have given their wisdom and experience, guided by sound business principles, to its completion.

We have proceeded with deliberation and caution, because we wanted to be right—wanted to be sure that we might offer the exhibitor who seeks both good pictures and protection of his interests a fair and equitable plan, a plan whereby he might write an insurance policy on the safety of his investment.

Our plan is the direct result of the causes that have forced the observing exhibitors of the country to bestir themselves into action against interests that seek to destroy the stability of our prosperity.

Offers Direct Ownership

Our plan offers direct ownership in an organization owned solely by leading exhibitors who are one hundred per cent independent.

You are invited to share both benefits and profits by acquiring your own franchise.

Every feature and every principle of the Associated franchise arrangement has undergone critical consideration and reconsideration. It is virtually a finished product, ready for the inspection of the men who have it within their power to make Associated Exhibitors, Inc., the most powerful influence for good in the industry.

Associated Exhibitors, Inc., stands for any plan or organization that is designed to protect exhibitors' interests.

Ready in Thirty Days

Within thirty days we will be ready to submit to you the details of our sub franchises. Under our sub-franchise plan every holder is a part owner in a truly co-operative proposition—his rights are equitable and proportionately the same whether he is the owner of a big theatre in a big city or the owner of a small theatre in a small town.

Until we are prepared to demonstrate the worth of our plans for you, we desire to go on record as endorsing the splendid and worthy ambitions of those prominent in the Independent Exhibitors of America convention activities at Chicago.

NEW YORK CRITICS UNANIMOUS IN DECLARING

THE BOTTOM OF THE WORLD

The Greatest Spectacle ever Seen on Broadway

A graphic depiction of Sir Ernest Shackleton's thrilling attempt to cross the South Pole. It packed the Rivoli, one of America's leading picture theatres at every showing

"At Rivoli the most pulsating feature of the dramatic picture. The ... is 'The Bottom of the ... which is a film log of Sir Ernest ... sailed on the South Pole. ... are graphic and shivery ... one keep one's overcoat ..."

—New York Sun

—The Evening Sun.

"'The Bottom of the World,' at the Rivoli this week, proves again that a travel scenic can be far more dramatic and thrilling than most picture plays with a plot. After a picture like this one, you forget about the cheapness, the vulgarity, the absurdity of most scenes now shown upon the screen."

—New York Globe.

"Sir Ernest Shackleton's search for the South Pole is a fascinating picture."

—New York Evening Telegram

"'The Bottom of the World,' a record of the voyage of Sir Ernest Shackleton in the Antarctic ocean, was shown yesterday at the Rivoli. The pictures of seals and penguins at play, the slow motion film of the ice crushing the 'Endurance,' and the hardships of the dog sledge trip home were remarkably effective."

—New York Post.

"Is it too much to hope that some manager will vary the regular run of so-called, but often miscalled, dramatic pictures by devoting the better part of his program to such a work as 'The Bottom of the World,' whenever he can get it?"

Dear Mr Christie:

WE DO NOT hesitate for a minute to say that "Save Mr Sadie" is the very best laugh producer we have ever shown in this theatre except possibly those comedies for which we pay fifteen hundred per cent more than yours cost.

Christie Comedy means something to our patrons because the goodness of your product is consistent. They are clean, really humorous, full of fast action, and have definite, clear cut stories of merit. You very evidently take more pains in selecting stories, casting characters, selecting types and directing every one concerned than does any other comedy producing company.

Dear Mr Christie:

THE enclosed copies of the Sunday Sentinel and Milwaukee Journal show without a doubt that the popularity of Christie Comedies is without a parallel. The manager of the Merrill Theatre after screening "Petticoats and Pants" voluntarily raised his rental prices and stated that it was the best two-reel comedy the Merrill had ever run. This covers a large amount of ground not much as the Merrill has run many two-reel pictures featuring the best known stars of comedy.

A COMMON LEVEL

The sets are truly lavish—the atmosphere is faithfully and vividly obtained—photography is excellent! Would probably go big! Motion Picture News

An uncommon screen story. Spectacular ensembles in which, not hundreds, but thousands take part. Great mass effects are handled with masterly skill. Settings are on a grand scale. Edmund Breese gives dignity and sincerity to the entire production. It has an idea and should win with spectators because it will hold close attention wherever it is shown.

Moving Picture World.

Exceptional scenes, careful attention to details, interiors all that could be desired. Direction is adequate throughout. Edmund Breese is strong and convincing. Claire Whitney does well.

"An interesting mystery picture, which is decorated with a quantity of fights, bewildering situations, masked men and trap doors. The picture moves with unusual swiftness and has been carefully and intelligently directed. The sets chosen strengthen the mystery idea. The players work with enthusiasm and the film should score heavily with fans who enjoy mystery dramas. Some of the rain scenes in which quite a bit of action takes place are so well done that patrons are likely to look around for their umbrellas."

The Reason Why

WHY does the RITCHEY LITHO. CORP. advertise when it is the busiest poster producing concern in the world, and when we are now working night and day to keep even with our orders? We feel that we owe it both to the buyer of posters and ourselves to advertise. Ours is an educational advertising campaign undertaken as a mutual protection against the mediocre poster. We wish to implant into the poster buyer's mind the highest possible standard, wherewith he will judge all posters. Then we will have achieved that purpose.

Few people stop to consider that advertising is one of the great arts and that poster advertising is its highest and most complex development. Indeed it is so highly complex that it is not possible for the average business man to have an expert knowledge of the qualities of posters, although he realizes perfectly well the great importance of having good ones. It is that fact which enables a lot of lithographers, advertising agents and publicity men to put over a lot of stuff that is quite valueless. This is pure waste, and these advertisements are written in an effort to overcome that waste!

The ultimate result of this campaign will be to convince the buyer that there are just two ways of getting great posters. One way is by making a life long study of the subject—the other way is to insist upon having RITCHEY posters!

Editorial and Otherwise

Why the Guarantee?

IN two cities, Baltimore and Spokane, exhibitor action that is almost of a concerted nature has blocked the course of percentage booking. Other sections, while not reporting definite action, give signs of a growing storm of opposition to percentage.

We can't say, after looking at many forms of contract on percentage, that we can blame exhibitors.

Percentage, in theory, means a gamble—a gamble in which both parties share. Percentage, in the show game, called for both parties to take a showman's gamble.

But there is little of the showman about most of the contracts we see—with their large guarantee, usually equal to or in excess of the amount an exhibitor would consider a fair rental for the production.

Percentage will not be hastened on such a basis.

Percentage must mean equity—else there will be no percentage.

The Right Idea

J. D. WILLIAMS saw deep into the seat of much of the exhibitors' troubles when he declared at Chicago, "Let your majority rule. Be good soldiers. Bury your personal whims and stand by your leaders as long as the majority votes them your leaders. If you don't like them, throw them out—if the majority feels the way you do."

Minority cantankerousness has been the rock on which national exhibitor organization has always foundered.

But there are two kinds of majorities in exhibitor bodies. There is the supposed majority created by credentials committees, steam rollers, convenient proxies, etc. There is the real, all-wool majority of theater-owning exhibitors, each having his say, and no one else having a word.

Mr. Williams points the way; let someone else bar the way to politics; and then—may the majority rule.

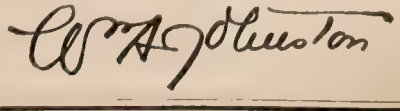
The Direct Route

EVERYTHING in the picture business is tending towards direct action. Now it is the Associated Producers who have decided, after months of propositions from various other organizations, to establish their own distributing system.

We can state the opinion of many others along with our own when we declare that they have made the first step right in selecting Oscar Price and Fred Warren to guide their distribution.

To a certain extent any group of distributors are controlling their own destinies when they establish their own exchanges. But only to an extent measured by the character and ability of the men they place at the helm.

The Big Six—there are hints that the figure may be increased—have taken the first hurdle in fine form.



Chicago's High-light

THE outstanding point of the Chicago convention of independent exhibitors was the evident and impressive earnestness of those present, the sincere desire for a real national organization.

Politics may have attempted to enter the scene, but the stay was short. And as the convention found its footing and gathered coherent shape, personalities and politics beat a hasty retreat.

No self seeker could stand long against the exhibitors of the South, presenting facts and figures from their own experience to show the need of protective, national organization. No politician could stand unabashed before the sincere self-effacing attitude of such men as Sig Samuels and Willard Patterson, who called the convention, or of Frank Rembusch, who shouldered the burden of chairmanship.

If the Cleveland convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners Association profits by the addition of the energetic men who gathered in Chicago, if, out of the three days session in June, there emerges a solidified national organization—exhibitors will be grateful for the calibre of their representatives in Chicago.

The "Battle Line" of the Independent Exhibitors of America

The I. M. P. E. of A. Brought Into Being at the Chicago Convention, as Outlined to Cincinnati Exhibitors May 4

By Frank Rembusch

THE convention formed itself into a permanent organization, known as the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors of America; elected a president and secretary and appointed a committee of twenty directors, from exhibitors who are to go to New York within three weeks and demand a "show down" from the producer-exhibitor.

We are to ask all the producers to get out of the theatre business. We are all at once to buy our pictures from producers who agree to stay out of the theatre business and discontinue buying from producer-exhibitor film companies.

This committee will then report to the Cleveland convention during June and may again report to another convention in Chicago later.

It may take two or three big meetings to conclude our work, and we will succeed in our purpose by the support of independent exhibitors and our allies, the independent producers.

The call for the Convention was sent out by Mr. Sig. Samuels and Mr. W. C. Patterson of the Criterion theatre, Atlanta, Ga. About a thousand exhibitors from all over America came together. Few of us knew or understood the motive of the call, and no one can fully realize its importance without having been present.

The "oldtimers" could see at once that the largest and most representative gathering in our history of conventions faced Mr. Samuels as he called us to order.

Mr. Patterson immediately read a carefully prepared and most impressive statement of conditions in the Southern Atlantic States, which, when boiled down, summed up the following facts.

The exhibitors in the South woke up one morning and found that a large film company had acquired a chain of theatres, and by this invasion the Southern exhibitors were face to face with the menace of Producer-Exhibition. Competition.

The next move of the invader was an attack by them on all independent exhibitors. Their methods were most insidious and despicable. With their plans they forced one city after another to give up to them, just like an invading army.

By bluff and cuff the courage of the Independent Exhibitor is underminded, and he is faced by the alternative of selling his theatre to this Wall Street Monopoly or have Wall Street for his competitor. Perhaps he sells out, or he may be red-blooded and decide to fight. If he decides to fight, he fights big odds and unfair competition of the worst kind.

The Monopoly puts in big attractions, adds special music, and, to cap the climax, they lower the admission prices in that city until the independent exhibitor cannot stand up under the strain.

Mr. Patterson stated that no exhibitor could battle against this Film Trust alone, and that their only purpose in calling the convention was to ask every exhibitor in America to join the South and help whip the invader and force them to get out of the theatre business.

The convention then acted accordingly, and by unaminous vote decided to stand together on the following lines:

1st. Producers must take one side of the road, and exhibitors the other. No one can be both exhibitor and producer.

2nd. Our only means of defense in this case is to apply force, therefore every exhibitor agreed to immediately cancel out all film service with producers who own or operate theatres, and to forever, and for all times hereafter contract only for him service with independent producers, who are not in the theatre business.

In a general way, the means of defense are as follows: No matter what your relations, whether pleasant or otherwise, you are to cancel this monopoly service at once. Small town exhibitors have a particular advantage, and can insist wonderfully. "Stop your service, and Wall Street money will stop flowing against us."

You may be asked to share service with your local independent exhibitor who has been using producer-exhibitor service.

You may play a few pictures from your independent producer with which you are not familiar. Put on a little extra music with these pictures, present them better, and you will find results very gratifying. If you cannot get enough features put on a short subject or serial program. Shelve any grievance you have with any independent producer and take their pictures exclusively.

Our pledge to our Southern exhibitors is: To stand by and help them to the last ditch.

Every independent producer faces this fact: "If the monopoly secures control of a large number of theatres, the indepenedntt producer is ruined, because then there will be no market for his product."

It is, perhaps, this glaring future that caused Universal Film Company, First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Louis J. Selznick, Select, Pathe, Vitagraph, Robertson-Cole, Celebrated Players, and many smaller producers to come on the floor of the convention and offer aid, co-operation, and assistance to the independent exhibitors. These men pledged us to stay out of the theatre business, and therefore it is only fair that every other producer be forced to stand in the same light, or we cannot do business with them.

Never in the history of the industry has anything so important happened.

The result of this movement will be a greater and better motion picture. You must have noted that it seems the pictures of the producer-exhibitor are of a poorer quality each release, and that the pictures of independent producers are growing better and better. This is natural, because as was said in the convention: "Art is individual; Art is independent; Art must not be chained, or it will die."

Committee Favors Censoring Legislation

Bay State's Ways and Means Committee Reports Favorably on Modified Bill

THE committee on ways and means of the Massachusetts House of Representatives reported favorably on the bill for the regulation of motion pictures in Bay State, known as the "Censorship Bill," recommending three changes in the bill.

The changes are to strike out the provision that films of educational, charitable or religious performances shall be censored without charge; an increase from $1 to $2 in the fee charged for licensing films up to 1,000 feet in length, and an increase from $2 to $4 for films in excess of 1,000 feet.

The decision of the members of the committee on ways and means of the State Senate, which was headed by Representative Lyman, of Easthampton, comes after a long hard-fought battle on the part of members of the motion picture industry throughout the State of Massachusetts and hundreds of proponents of the bill, characterized by one Boston newspaper as one form of "cranks."

Bitter controversy resulted at the hearing given the bill, after it was reported favorably by the committee on mercantile affairs of the House late in February of this year. Arguments, denouncing the bill, were presented by opponents.

The cost of the project and the expense upon the State was clearly defined by Representative John I. Fitzgerald, who declared that it would cost $100,000 a year.

Sydney Cohen Issues Statement on Cleveland Convention

All Grievances to be Discussed and Acted On; Unity the Prime Factor

THE following statement in connection with the plans and purposes of the Cleveland Convention of Exhibitors has been issued by Sydney S. Cohen, temporary chairman of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners' organization:

"On the eve of the national convention to be held June 8th, 9th, 10th and 11th in the city of Cleveland, to which every exhibitor in the United States has been invited, a brief survey of our objects not only seems quite appropriate in point of time, but may justly be regarded as a matter of duty to the entire industry. We view the motion picture industry as one of the most important institutions of modern society. We regard it, or would like to regard it, as a great unit divided into three separate and distinct branches, but inspired by a spirit of harmony and cooperation.

"This industry needs a thorough readjustment along the lines of sanity and justice. Too long have the producers been playing upon our foolish jealousies and rivalries. Too long have they been counting on our indifference, on our lack of leadership, until we are today near the verge of ruin and serfdom. These foolish jealousies and rivalries on the part of exhibitors have given away to a clear understanding of our community of interest and of our powers to assert and defend ourselves whenever we unite and act as one body.

"We feel that within the last few years the producer and distributor, almost invariably representing the same financial interest, has slowly and steadily encroached on the domain of the exhibitor and by a series of coercive measures has sought to deprive him of the just control of his property, his motion picture theatre. It is not difficult to trace the steps which have finally led up to this organized attempt at undermining the exhibitor's property. Excessive film rentals, the arbitrary exaction of deposits or so-called advance payments, the refusal to aid the small exhibitor in building up his business by denying such necessary adjuncts as mounted posters, photos and slides, the artificial curtailment of production, the bold and persistent drive for percentage booking—all these measures aim at weakening the exhibitor's hold on his investment.

Constantly increasing film rentals are placing many exhibitors today before the alternative of either selling out or raising their prices of admission. In most cases the exhibitor might better sell out than make a substantial advance in his price of admission. The existence of the motion picture theatre, its progress and prosperity, all depend on the popular price. It was the popular price which accounts for the conquest of the world by the motion picture. The fact is so well understood that it does not need repetition.

"The advance payment now used by producers for the odious word deposit takes large sums from the exhibitor and uses them not as a security for film rentals, but for the expansion of their business and not infrequently for the building or purchasing of competitive theatres. The pretense that the deposit is used as security for the payment of film rentals has been abandoned even by the producer. Film rentals, as we know, are payable in advance. It is always an extremely difficult matter to get your deposit back from any producer. In all disputes arising between the producer and exhibitor as to payment of bills, delivery of reels, contracts, etc., the man who holds the deposit holds the whip hand, possession being nine points of the law. Cases have been numerous throughout the country where exhibitors had to invoke civil and criminal authorities to get their money back from producers.

"In regards to the percentage system, I know of no subject on which the exhibitors of the country have ever been more united. From my correspondence, from many personal visits and from other sources, I know that the exhibitors are determined to resist to the utmost the attempt to force percentage-booking upon them. They feel that they should not be content merely with offering passive resistance to this system. Some definite and affirmative action must be taken as quickly as possible after the convention opens to make percentage booking impossible. The time to kill the forced percentage-booking methods is now. It was through our own indifference and lack of resistance that the deposit system was foisted upon us. We are now in great straits to find a remedy. Let us not repeat this mistake with the fight against percentage-booking. If we make an end of the forces that seem to be behind this drive, we won't be compelled later on to lose a lot of time and money in finding a remedy. As a rule, remedies are late anyway.

"The convention, I think, will also go on record in opposing the large profits and the influence now enjoyed by promoters. These promoters have no thought for the good of the industry. They take all they can out of the sound values of the industry, merely to fill their pockets and caring nothing as to how it may affect the theatre. Exhibitors have suffered no less than the public from these promoters, who thrive on chaotic and unsound business conditions. If any of these promoters have ever created any honest and lasting values for either producer or exhibitor, it must have escaped general attention.

"We have made no attempts to invade either the producing or distributing field. We have bought no studios, bargained for no stars, acquired no exchanges. We have sought no money in Wall Street to promote new producing concerns to compete with any of those now existing. We have been entirely satisfied to devote ourselves to the building up of our theatres, to improvement in our showmanship and to the development of our patronage. We were not permitted to pursue our legitimate calling in peace and contentment. On all sides we encountered attempts to dictate to us in the conducting of our business and the management of our property. Arbitrary and exorbitant film rentals were demanded and our refusal or even hesitancy to pay them were met with threats of competition or the actual building of new competitive theatres. All the huge load of expensive salaries for stars and the rewards given to promoters, all the penalties of overcapitalization, all the sins of extravagance, incompetence or wastefulness, were thrown

First National Survey to Appear in News

MOTION PICTURE NEWS has arranged with First National Exhibitors' Circuit for the exclusive publication of the results of an investigation First National has made, in every territory, of theater construction and remodeling to be done this summer. The first instalment will be published next week.

The report includes information about new theatres, now being started, or for which plans have been let, and of improvements, enlargements and generally important changes to be made in present theater properties.

The resume will be published as a series of articles, each one relating to a separate section of the country, and each one will contain invaluable data for producers, distributors and manufacturers of accessories, in addition to providing all exhibitors with a comprehensive indication of the trend toward a new era of theater construction.

First National made the survey as an important part of the information necessary to the inauguration of its subfranchising plan, and as evidence to the independent stars and producers with whom it has contracts of the increased theater market that will be equipped, early in the fall, to absorb, on a greater scale than ever before, the new standards of production values now being established as guides to summer activity in the studios.

Sub-Franchising Plan Gets Under Way

First National Convention Results in Launching of New Distributing System

CONCLUSION of the joint conventions of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., and First National Exhibitors' Circuit at the Hotel Congress, Chicago, last Friday, marked the formal launching of the sub-franchising plan wherein approximately 6,500 independently owned and independently operated theatres will share in the mutualization of the protective and guaranteed production source benefits upon which the plan is based.

Sub-franchise applications from about 200 of the independent exhibitors who had responded to the call by Willard Patterson of Atlanta for a national mass meeting were filed with the various First National exchange managers and members before the Circuit's sessions were finally adjourned on Friday evening.

Radical and extensive changes in the present system of film distribution are expected by exhibitor members of First National as the result of the sub-franchising plan. Speeches by Circuit officials treated at length on the obvious and certain reforms that would necessarily follow in the wake of the efforts seeking to unite approximately 6,500 theatres in one co-operative organization which seeks direct contact with independent producers as its source of film supply.

Members of the Executive Committee for Associated First National Pictures pointed out to the independent exhibitors who sought information during the convention, that the sub-franchising plan is not a new and different system than any which has before been in vogue. Instead, according to members of the committee, the sub-franchise is an extension to other independent exhibitors of the co-operative protective and economic phases of the organization structure on which First National Exhibitors' Circuit was started three years ago and on which it has steadily continued to bridge and narrow the gap between independent exhibitors and independent producers.

"For three years," explained the committee, "First National members have provided their respective independent screens with quality entertainment by co-operative buying from independent stars and producers. They took a tremendous financial risk in getting away from old methods and driving straight at the producer monopoly with its arbitrary booking methods and attendant impositions on all exhibitors. They succeeded because they pooled their purchasing interests and their theatre facilities to gain the strength and resources and exhibition facilities necessary to upset program booking. Now they are extending the same plan which won against the program, so that independent exhibitors in every territory may guarantee to themselves a definite and sufficient source of releases to meet any organized theatre competition from other than independent producers and with an arrangement whereby they pay a fixed percentage of the total cost of every release. In other words, the rental values are established at the studio rather than in the exchange.

"Through the stock equity which each enfranchised exhibitor will have in the exchange for his territory, he is guaranteed against the film costs in excess of the fair valuation by the dividends which the stockholding will bring from the disbursement of any profits earned by the exchange over and above its normal operating expense. This is mutualization born of almost a year of intensive study by exhibitors, each of whom realized that his entire future as a theatre operator would be determined in every detail by the caution, the fairness and absolute justice of the terms which they dictated and to which they, as dictators, are now subscribing as franchise owners in direct partnership with 6,500 other theatres."

Territorial awards of sub-franchises started this week upon the return of the First National exchange managers to their respective offices. It is predicted by Circuit officials that at least three months will be needed to complete the allotment. By fall it was said First National attractions will be pledged by sub-franchises to at least 6,000 theatres.

The Executive Committee for Associated First National Pictures, composed of N. H. Gordon of Boston, Moe Mark of New York and H. O. Schwalbe of Philadelphia, will devote practically all of its time during the summer to the consideration and granting of applications for sub-franchises. Schedules of percentage ratings of every theatre in each territory were given to the exchange managers at the concluding session of the First National Sales Club. In fixing the individual theatre percentages, the statistical division of the Exhibitors' Defense Committee for First National eliminated in many instances the matter of population as a determining factor and considered the more conclusive conditions of industrial advantages, prevailing average film costs for individual houses booking on a flat rental basis in the past, competition and the strategical location of the theatres.

Japanese Company Sends Representative

Agent of New $5,000,000 Company Will Remain in New York to Buy Films

A. SUZUKI, American representative of the International Motion Picture Co., Ltd., of Japan, has arrived in New York, and is at present making his headquarters at the Longacre Hotel. He will probably remain in New York for a period of two years, during which time he will act as exclusive buyer of films and other necessities for his home concern. He has been authorized to expend a considerable sum in making purchases for the Japanese company.

The International Motion Picture Co., Ltd., was organized a short time ago and capitalized at ten million yen, which is equivalent to five million dollars in United States money. This company, which is reported to be easily the largest on the island, will take steps immediately to provide better and more modern pictures for the Japanese public.

Ten years ago, when a motion picture organization was incorporated in Japan with a capital of 350,000 yen, many people were amazed at this amount of money being ventured to finance such an untried scheme. The number of movie fans on the island were constantly increasing, however, as in other countries, and were becoming dissatisfied with the pictures as they were at that time being presented in Japan. The motion picture industry was then, and has been until recently, at a stand still. The people are now seeking better service in the theatres, and above all they are eager to enjoy better pictures projected under more satisfactory conditions than have previously obtained.

The taste of the Japanese fan has changed so much in the past decade that he no longer is satisfied with the picture crammed merely with exaggerated action. Japan is now wide-awake, careful and discriminating in criticising her pictures.

The progress of the industry in Japan is due in great part to Kisabura Kobayashi, said to be the most enterprising showman now exhibiting pictures on the island.

The International Motion Picture Co., Ltd., which was so rapidly and successfully organized with its enormous capital, has completely absorbed the Natural Color Cinema, Ltd., of Tokio, known as Tenkatsu Kaisha. This means that the new organization has under their control nearly one-half of the picture theatres now in existence in the Empire.

Realart's First Conference to Start May 17 in New York

Managers Will Gather in Get-Together and Jubilee Meeting

THE first annual conference and get together of the various managers and special representatives of Realart Pictures Corporation is announced to be held at the Hotel Astor on Monday, May 17th, and to last through the week. It will be made a jubilee meeting in keeping with the success of the infant concern in its first year of business.

The twenty one branch managers of the company will arrive in New York City primed with exhibitor sentiment on all the live problems of the day. They will start to New York fresh from the field, where they have been actively engaged in Realart's end-of-season sales campaign to close the first year's business with four Mayflower specials and four stars' productions.

Subjects that will be discussed by the managers include general policies, exploitation of productions, marketing methods, contracts and the problems arising from increased production costs. Exhibitors visited by Realart salesmen have been queried on these and other important subjects and the data collected will be scrutinized collectively.

The managers will arrive in New York on Sunday, May 16th, and register at the Hotel Astor. The convention will be officially opened Monday morning when Morris Kohn, president of Realart, will welcome the managers. The succeeding sessions will be presided over by J. S. Woody, general manager. The morning sessions will begin at 9:30 and last until 12:30 o'clock. The afternoon sessions will last from 2 o'clock until 5 30.

The following statement was issued by President Kohn in calling the conference

"It is with considerable pride that Realart has issued a call to its managers to gather in New York City for the first annual convention. Succeeding years may bring increased prosperity and wider recognition to the company, but the first year, with its struggle to establish and perfect a working organization, will always retain a most vital place in its history

"Realart has accomplished in the past year, I believe, more than ever has been done before in the history of the industry The company was organized and twenty one branch offices established in a few months This alone is something of a record. It engaged three well known stars and began to make its own productions, and to market them, in an incredibly short time.

"The success which has accompanied these efforts within six months of actual business is well known in the trade To have attained the pinnacle in producing quality pictures at the very outset constitutes an achievement of no little consequence. In the way of physical acquisitions, the company has been extremely fortunate Last fall we obtained the fourth floor of the Winfield Building at 469 Fifth Avenue for our home offices The location in this new and modern building has been found ideal During the year we acquired the old Morosco Studios in Hollywood and renamed them the Realart Studios. These studios represent the last word in picture production They will accommodate from three to five companies at one time and have unexcelled physical equipment. Possession of these is a guarantee of the maintenance of the Realart standard of picture production. We have also fortified ourselves strongly during the year by adding the name of Wanda Hawley to our list of stars

"As to our organization we have much of which to be proud In a remarkably short space of time we have brought together a body of men, seasoned and experienced in the motion picture industry. This alone has been a herculean task. The roster of names at the home office and throughout the list of branch managers and the sales force gives eloquent testimony to the success we have attained

"Naturally we regard this first convention as the biggest and most important step in our development to date. It is the first opportunity we have had to get together and talk things over. I am sure it is bound to prove an event of no little importance to the trade as a whole.

The Realart field men who will attend the convention are as follows: Melville F. Maxwell, special representative; Joseph L. Marcntette, Atlanta; Walter E. Scates, Boston; Henry F. Wilkinson, Buffalo; Harry W Willard, Chicago; Mark Goldman, Cincinnati, James B. Reilly, Cleveland; Diaz Callahan, Dallas; Bert R. Latz, Denver; Ralph B. Quive, Detroit; John N McMeekin, Kansas City; Oren F. Woody, Los Angeles; Henry L. Hollander, Minneapolis, Lester Adler, New York, Truly B. Wildman, New Orleans; Cornelius G. Kinsley, Omaha; J. E. Hennessy, Philadelphia; Harry F. Lotz, Pittsburgh, Ben F Simpson, San Francisco; Albert W Eden, Seattle; Floyd H. Lewis, St Louis, and William H. Rippard, Washington

Educational to Operate Own Exchanges

Offices in Twenty-two Centers; Contracts Signed for All But Three Territories

ITS own exchanges in the twenty-two principal motion-picture centers of the United States will be announced next week by Educational Films Corporation. Contracts have been signed in all but three territories, and these will be closed within the next few days. These statements were authorized this week by E. W. Hammons, vice-president and general manager.

Details of the exchange system were practically completed during Mr. Hammons visit to Chicago, since he took advantage of the various meetings there to discuss the details with a number of exhibitors. He found there an unexpectedly strong demand for participation in the Educational plan of distribution with the result that there were many bidders for each of the territories remaining open. The three remaining territories could have been easily closed at that time, but Mr. Hammons preferred to wait upon certain developments in the East, it is stated.

Each one of the exchanges will be directly controlled by Educational, it is explained, and they will handle nothing but short subjects, made and distributed by the parent company. The main organization will be maintained in New York, where Mr. Hammons has been gathering together the men whose association he has desired. Announcement of the home-office organization will probably follow shortly after the list of exchanges, their managers and locations are given.

In this announcement Mr. Hammons called special attention to the high class of men that are associated with the company in the exchange organization.

"We have taken our time," said Mr. Hammons, "in selecting the men who are to be interested in our exchanges, because we wanted to have associated with us people who will be recognized by every exhibitor as representing the best in motion pictures. The selection of mere territorial representatives would have been an easy matter, but our plans have called for far more than merely salaried employees in each of the centers. We have sought to obtain not only men of unquestioned standing in the motion picture world, but we have invited their financial participation in the ownership of the individual exchanges because we believe that such interest would insure their greater interest in sales policies and assure greater cooperation to the exhibitor.

"Educational will control the majority of stock in every one of the exchanges, but we have permitted financial participation up to as much as 49 per cent. Each exchange will be under the direct control of the home office, and every policy must meet the approval of the general management. It can be seen that such a plan invites the cooperation of men who would not be interested in a mere salary arrangement.

"An important part of the plan to us is that these exchange interests will represent a great number of the first-run theatres in the principal cities of the country. In every case the men who are interested in our exchanges have been led to become associated with us because they realize the quality of the material that we will supply.

"All that remains for the completion of our exchange system is the matter of physical arrangements in some of the cities and the signatures of contracts in three territories. These will be closed before the end of the week and we will then be able to tell the exhibitors of the country where they can find the one exchange in their territory dealing in short subjects and of the men with whom they will be doing business."

National Ass'n Promotes Fire Prevention

Report to Fire Protection Convention Held in Chicago Shows Wide Activities

DETAILED information as to what has been accomplished by the motion picture industry in the way of fire prevention was presented to the National Fire Protection Association at its twenty-fourth annual meeting held in Chicago May 4, 5 and 6. This information was contained in a report of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, an associated member of the National Fire Protection Association, which reaffirmed its pledge made at the Ottawa convention a year ago to co-operate in every way to bring about the strict enforcement of fire preventive regulations.

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry was represented at the convention by J. E. Brulatour, chairman of the Committee on Fire Prevention Regulations; Albert de Roode, a member of the committee, and Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary. The report was submitted by Mr. Elliott, and according to advices received from Chicago, was one of the most interesting and comprehensive documents presented. It was favorably commented on by delegates, representing all branches of trade and industry, and many public officials and others identified with fire prevention work.

The report dealt with three phases of activity of the National Association. The first referred to the educational campaign carried on for several years by the Fire Prevention Regulations Committee, which has issued bulletins on the proper handling of films with the purpose of reducing the fire hazard.

The second phase dealt with inspection. The third feature of the report dealt with the constructive activity of the National Association, which included not alone the improvement of the existing buildings housing exchanges, but the erection of new and adequate buildings complying fully with the fire preventive requirements, recommended by the National Fire Protection Association and adopted by the National Board of Fire Underwriters.

Accompanying this part of the report was concrete evidence of the National Association's activity in the way of a photograph of the new film Exchange Building in Kansas City, the first building erected in this country for the exclusive housing of film exchanges. Similar buildings are in course of construction in Cleveland, Buffalo, Atlanta and New Haven. Contracts have been let for the construction of a new exchange building in Chicago, and the work will start June 1.

F. P. - Lasky to Produce in India for Far East Distribution

Indian Empire Branch with a Capital of $3,000,000 to Work in Bombay

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will shortly begin producing motion-pictures in Bombay for distribution throughout India and other countries of the Far East. This was the message conveyed in a recent statement issued by Adolph Zukor, president of the corporation. This work is to be inaugurated in conjunction with a syndicate of British and Indian bankers. It marks another step in the establishment of foreign producing centers by this powerful American manufacturing organization. The name of the newest subsidiary of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is the Indian Empire Famous Players-Lasky Film Company, Ltd., and it has a paid-in capital of $3,000,000.

Arrangements are being made for the erection of a mammoth studio and laboratory in Bombay, the principal city of the Indian Empire, where the most-approved American methods of picture production will be introduced by American production experts. Mr. Zukor declared that no limit had been placed on the magnitude of the production activities in India, intimating that there is reason to believe that in the near future the Indian studios under the general supervision of Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players, will be turning out Paramount-Artcraft pictures on the same scale that prevails in the Lasky studios in Hollywood and the new Eastern studio in Long Island City.

Not only will Paramount pictures be produced in a Paramount studio in India, but they also will be distributed through a system of Paramount exchanges, modeled after the efficient exchange system in this country. This Indian distribution system will embrace all of the vast Indian Empire, as well as Persia, the Straits Settlement and other countries in the Far East.

"When one realizes that in the Indian Empire alone," said Mr. Zukor, "there are 400,000,000 people, one can get an idea of the vast possibilities which lie in the production of pictures in India. Paramount pictures, of course, are already being distributed throughout India, as they are in other countries of the world; but we wish to produce pictures which are closer to the thought and lives of the vast Indian people. Producing pictures in this country that will mirror the lives of the people of India is practically impossible. The director and actors have to be on the spot; they must have an insight into the problems of the Indian people—in a word, they must have a better understanding of what the Indian public wants. All this we are confident we can accomplish by establishing a studio in India.

"Other advantages are obvious. Paramount pictures made in India will have settings amid scenery that practically has never been brought to the photoplay screen. All of the picturesque life and surroundings of the Indian will form the background for the pictures which we plan to make there."

The production of pictures in India, Mr. Zukor made plain, is in line with his policy to make Paramount pictures of such a nature that they will cater to the tastes of all countries. In this connection he explained that this was the guiding motive in the establishment of the big Paramount studio in London, which is already in operation under the direction of Jesse L. Lasky.

Mr. Zukor announced that the new studio in Bombay will be started by Frank Meyer, assistant secretary of the Famous Players Lasky Corporation, who has been in charge of the construction and real estate division of the company, and Tarkington Baker, who recently formed his own producing organization and who formerly was in charge of the producing activities of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

Mr. Meyer will erect the laboratory and studio in Bombay and will equip both institutions with the most modern American film producing appurtenances, it is stated. The Studio and laboratory will be operated by a staff of American film experts, which will be organized when both plants are ready for actual work.

Mr. Baker, it is understood, will remain in India as general Indian representative of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, with complete charge of the production and distribution activities of the Indian Empire Famous Players-Lasky Film Company, Ltd.

Mr. Meyer and Mr. Baker will leave for India in two or three weeks, as soon as they can wind up their affairs in this country. They will spend some time at the new Famous Players studio in London and also will visit Paris, before going direct to Bombay. As soon as they arrive in India they will begin getting their organization together, and it is expected that the first American picture produced in India will be ready for release next Christmas.

Just as it is Mr. Zukor's intention to have Paramount pictures produced in England distributed also in this country, so the pictures made in India will not only be distributed throughout India but will also be released in this country and in Europe.

Mr. Zukor stated that further important announcements regarding the formation of the Indian Empire Famous Players-Lasky Film Company, Ltd., would be forthcoming in a few days.

Echoes of the "Windy City" Convention

By Joseph F. Lee

PROBABLY one of the most talked of events of the entire convention was staged Wednesday evening under the personal supervision and able direction of H. M. Thomas, of the Rialto theatre, Omaha. Thomas called his entertainment an "Historical Pageant and Conclave." It is safe to say that in the costuming and lighting effects Mr. Thomas certainly outdid himself. The Committee of Arrangements comprised the following: Dr. Holah, tickets; Harry Scott, music; Lieut. James Anderson, toastmaster, and Joe Lee, publicity. Representing the trade press were: Larry Boynton, Trade Review; Bob Welsh, M. P. News, and F. C. Gunning, Wid's. The affair was largely attended and a good time was enjoyed by all.

There were a number of conventions being held at the Congress Hotel at the same time that the picture folks were in session. One exhibitor sat in a convention hall for an hour, thinking he was listening to Patterson of Atlanta; but the speaker turned out to be President De Valera and the meeting in session concerned the Irish Republic.

During the intermission of Thomas's "Historical Pageant and Conclave" Lieut. Jim Anderson sang a ballad, composed by himself and entitled "One Drop of Moonshine Makes the Whole World Still."

Business fell away off the entire week at the Hotel Astor. Nick, the head waiter, was trying to figure out whether it was Yom Kippur or Holy Week.

I sent Tom North a wire, stating I had attached a privilege car to the Broadway Limited. Tom jumped to Pittsburgh and caught the train, only to find out that the staterooms were in the hands of speculators. By the shades of Lincoln Carter, Tom was mad.

Eltinge Warner was a much interested spectator at the Thomas affair. It is rumored that he offered Thomas a tidy sum for the motion picture rights of the Pageant and Conclave.

Sol Lesser stepped into one of those sea-food restaurants, sat down, and was asked by the waiter what he desired. "What have you got?" queried Sol. "Everything that swims," said the waiter. "Then, if you have everything that swims, bring me Annette Kellerman," replied Sol.

I purchased the Irish confetti concession (the brick-checking privilege) at the Irish Republic meeting, held at the Congress, and it netted me a handsome profit.

Before the Thomas affair the song pluggers were much in evidence. One young lady made a deep impression by rendering "You May Be the World to Your Mother, but You're a Horse's Neck to Me."

Penal Code Amendment May Soon Be Law

The Judiciary Committee of the United States Senate has made a favorable report on the bill introduced by Congressman Walsh, of Massachusetts, at the request of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, which amends the penal code by placing motion picture films in the same classification with books and other printed matter. This action means that the bill will soon become a law.

This bill makes it a misdemeanor to ship in interstate commerce or in the United States mail any indecent or immoral film, the same as it is a misdemeanor now to send an indecent book or any printed matter.

By approving this bill Congress supports the contention of the National Association in censorship and other matters that there should be no discrimination between the printed word on paper or parchment or a printed picture on a film and projected on a screen.

The enactment of this law will also be an answer to those persons who are asking for new laws for what they call the "protection" of the screen. Any person exhibiting any indecent or immoral film cannot only be prosecuted under the laws of the state, but if that film is sent in the mail or in interstate commerce there can also be a persecution in the federal courts.

Paramount-Empress House Incorrectly Listed

Motion Picture News regrets the insertion of an erroneous statement in the list of admission prices published in a recent issue. The list was submitted by the First National Exhibitors Circuit and was published as stated. A letter received from the Salt Lake City exchange of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation calls attention to the fact that the Paramount-Empress theatre listed as a second run theatre, in reality runs first-run Paramount-Artcraft productions and that the net admission prices are twenty, thirty and forty cents. Occasionally they scale as high as fifty and seventy-five cents.

Theft Committee Wiping Out Illicit Film Men

The Film Theft Committee of the National Association of Motion Picture Industry reports excellent progress in wiping out the illicit film dealers in New York City.

Spokane Exhibitors Rebel at Percentage System

TWO Spokane, Wash., exhibitors are up in arms on account of the percentage basis, and the Clemmer and Liberty theatres will show no more Paramount Artcraft pictures. Drs. Clemmer and Lambach, and Ray C. Grombacher, managers of these houses, have refused flatly to sign up for the pictures under the new conditions required. Clemmer advance bookings, which will carry the theater program well into July, show few Paramount pictures, and what few appear there are old bookings, secured under old contracts, before the percentage basis plan was insisted upon by the Paramount people. A Paramount man from the Seattle house has been here all week in an attempt to do business with the local theaters, but at this date, no agreement had been reached.

"They demand a guarantee which gives them a snug revenue," Dr. Clemmer said. "If we do a big business, on the percentage basis, they would be profiting by our gain and taking no chances whatsoever."

Ray C. Grombacher, manager of the Liberty, says he is absolutely opposed to percentage bookings, and has plenty of pictures booked to carry him through up to July.

"Humoresque" Screened at New York Hotel

Almost the entire Eastern "Who's Who" in motion pictures turned out on the night of May 4 at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel in New York to witness a private showing of Cosmopolitan Productions' latest offering, "Humoresque." The crowd was so great that even standing room was at a premium. A twenty-piece orchestra, under the direction of George Beynon, furnished the incidental music, and the projection was in charge of Frank Jacobs, Cosmopolitan's projectionist.

Among those present were Daniel Frohman, Mr. and Mrs. Elek J. Ludvigh, Fannie Hurst, Jacques S. Danielson, Norma Talmadge, Robert G. Vignola, William Le Baron, William Sistrom, Montagu Love, George D. Baker, Albert Capellani, Norman Kerry, Lulu Warrenton, etc.

Fox Publicity Manager Resigns Position

Louis Klopsch, who for the past nine months has been in charge of production publicity of Fox Film Corporation, has resigned and has left for an extended tour of the United States in the interests of Screenews Service, an organization which serves more than 300 newspapers with a weekly news service of the happenings of the motion picture field.

Cleveland Convention

on our backs until we are beginning to stagger under the burden. Time and time again we have offered to cooperate with producers and distributors, at least, in all matters which pertain to the entire industry, such, for instance, as the fight against hostile legislation. What has been the result? At Washington the producers fastened the 5 per cent film rental tax upon us. We cannot pass any part of this tax on to the public, and our friends knew it; but they do not care as long as they themselves remained wholly untouched by taxes.

"In the list of our grievances is the daring and persistent attempt on the part of the producer to prostitute our screens to common advertising even in highly lauded dramatic productions. So far we have, it seems, not been able to stop this abuse entirely. We have no means of knowing what the producer gets by way of contribution towards the cost of his negative from these highly favored advertisers, but we do know that he makes or tries to make us the dispensers of this profitable advertising.

"A large part of our program at Cleveland will be purely constructive. We want to encourage the independent producer and director. Directors are the creative minds of the industry and furnish the fundamental values. We want to encourage these independent producers and directors, and we will leave them in no doubt as to our support.

"I am speaking for my fellow exhibitors when I say that at the Cleveland Convention every exhibitor will be welcome. We want none but exhibitors—men who are the actual owners of motion picture theatres and who gain their livelihood by means of their theatres and showmanship."

Reformers Seek to Stop Baltimore Referendum

By filing a petition in the Superior Court for a writ of mandamus to prevent the Supervisors of Elections from making arrangements to submit Sunday movies to a vote at the general election in November, Baltimore reformers carried their fight against Sunday moving pictures into court last Thursday.

It is believed, however, the efforts of the reformers will prove futile. The moving picture men have shown lately that they are determined Sunday movies shall become an actuality and they will put up a stiff fight.

Making the Lobby Display Register Individuality

When it comes to "jazzing" up a lobby with special signs which while shouting for business still retain a spirit of refinement, few managers of the male sex are able to duplicate the work of Emma Cohen, manager of the Casino theatre of Chicago. On this page is shown the results accomplished for the Casino's engagement of "Paid In Advance"

Picture Is First Run Until Your Patrons Have Seen It

Brooklyn Neighborhood Manager Pays Little Attention to Release Dates

WHEN an exhibitor realizes that a picture is new until his patrons have seen it, he is in a way to make money, according to Leon Victor, manager of the Tuxedo theatre, Borough Park section of Brooklyn, who offers his own box office receipts as proof of the fact that a good picture is an attraction many months after its initial release.

Mr. Victor has conducted the theatre on the theory that "nothing pays like the best" and has consistently stuck to the idea of booking nothing but screen successes, no matter how long he has to wait until the rentals come down to a point that he believes he is justified in paying

"The first run bug-a-boo is an idol," says Mr. Victor, "and the trouble is that many owners of small houses, or badly located houses, regard a first or second run as a necessity for success. I felt this to be wrong, and while the Tuxedo is a comfortable little theatre its location is not ideal and competition is strong. I felt that rather than book cheap pictures while they were new on the market I would wait until the best pictures had come down to the price I could pay.

"The results speak for themselves. The Tuxedo now has a steady, consistent, high class patronage. Good shows always pay. Managers on the speaking stage know this and that is why they strive for successes of the big cities. They know that once the reputation of a show is made it will prove a good drawing card everywhere in the country until the last theatre goer in it has seen the production, whether it is one month or ten years after it has been first produced. The same thing holds true of pictures, and it is this truth that I am turning into money.

"I watch the releases through the medium of trade papers, as closely as if I were conducting a first-run house. As soon as the picture shows me by means of the reviews and various other proofs that it is a good production, I put it in my booking schedule for nine or ten months ahead. Then I forget it. I book from this diary of mine, making inquiry as to rentals when the time comes when I have figured that I could afford it, I book it, and the money I save on rentals put into exploitation. I exploit them for new pictures, which they really are; new to my patrons no matter how long they have been known to the movie world at large. I am not interested in attracting Broadway attention, my interest is in my own patronage.

"Sometimes I will make a special effort to obtain a picture on certain dates, although usually it makes no difference to me as to when I get them. The desire for special dates occurs, however, whenever it is a picture by a star who is being exploited by some of the first-run houses at the time when I am ready for an old picture. This week, I ran 'Her Kingdom of Dreams,' starring Anita Stewart, and I booked it especially for this week because the Brooklyn Strand was running her latest release, 'The Fighting Shepherdess.'

"The argument that I could do more business if I booked them earlier has no weight with me. 'Her Kingdom of Dreams' did capacity business at the Tuxedo, and therefore it couldn't have done more no matter when I had run it. The result is I have a profit due to the difference in rentals, which I could not have had earlier. My patrons have seen a good picture, and it wouldn't have pleased them any more a year ago than it did this week. Naturally I have the ambition to own a house large enough to pay for a first-run policy, but until that time comes I am content to pay on the policy of 'Nothing but good pictures, whenever I can get them.'"

Malaney Has Faith in Good Exploitation

Manager of Loew's Cleveland Theatres Displays Sound Exhibitor Philosophy

WITH an abundance of sound exhibitor philosophy on exploitation, backed up by a campaign that brought record box office receipts, the story of the latest promotion campaign on the part of M. A. Malaney, publicity representative for Loew's Cleveland theatres, holds a unique interest for showmen.

This effort that resulted in such a crowning vindication of an exhibitor's unqualified faith in exploitation, was directed in the interests of "The Greatest Question."

Mr. Malaney began his campaign a week in advance of the first showing with teaser ads asking "What is the greatest question?" and "Would you sleep in a graveyard?" The teasers at the outset were small. As the week progressed, he gradually increased the size of each ad until, on the Sunday of the initial showing, half page ads were used.

Throughout the campaign, Malaney lent a uniformity to his ads by having a large question mark in the center of every ad. About this in some fashion was always written, "D. W. Griffith's 'The Greatest Question.'"

"The first thing to be noticed about our advertising in behalf of 'The Greatest Question' was the fact that it carried a somewhat vague and tangled aspect. Of course, this was intentional. We wanted the mystery of the picture and the depth and uncertainty of the subjects it dealt with to be so depicted in our advertising. The feather-edge arrangement of our shadowy question mark and its accompanying word matter carried this effect."

In writing his ads, Malaney, for one of the few times in his career, divided his line of attack by featuring D. W. Griffith and that producer's eminence in conjunction with the appealing subject around which the picture was written.

"When you can talk about something already known to the reader, the battle's won," said Mr. Malaney. "He convinces himself as he reads. His attitude isn't one of 'I'm from Missouri—you've got to show me,' but it's rather the attitude of, 'Why, certainly that must be true. It stacks up well with everything known of the subject," said Mr. Malaney.

One of Mr. Malaney's ads read, "Plain human beings fighting the battles of life in their own way. Picturing their virtues and frailties so graphically that you will laugh and cry with them—hate and love with them—as your emotions react to Griffith's masterly interpretation of humanity—marvel at what life really is! The story is brilliantly dramatic, excellently acted and produced with the skill that only this great director knows."

Mr. Malaney took advantage of the present great interest in spiritualistic matter and did not fail to collect in full on the interest stirred up in the hereafter by the recent lecture tour of Sir Oliver Lodge and the many current books on the subject.

Another ad read, "Is there life after death? This question is now being widely discussed throughout the world. The master of the motion picture has produced a wonderful drama into which he has woven this question.

Mr. Malaney also took pains to play up the cast of the picture.

Femininity Falls for the Fashion Shows says Ayres

"All Femininity falls for the fashion shows," says Noah Ayres, picture exhibitor for the California theatre, San Francisco, and he and Mrs. Ayres, Noah and Earlington of the motion and California stand to credit for they have just stayed one.

On this page is shown the mannequins who were assembled for the event. Some eighty or more gorgeous creations in everything from gowns to "nighties" were shown to the admiring throngs who attended the California during the week of March 21st. It was a great show all around.

Full Details of "For the Soul of Rafael" Premiere

The premiere of Clara Kimball Young's latest picture "For the Soul of Rafael" was at Grauman's Rialto theatre, Los Angeles. The exploitation given the production by manager Sid Grauman has been the talk of the West Coast film metropolis. One of the features of this campaign was a window display (above) showing the style 1850 elaborate wedding gown used by Miss Young in filming the picture. A pleasing prologue of music and dancing was presented (right). On the site of a new building covering a block, a big sign board space was secured. The theatre which is famed for its electric light signs gave the star more than stellar space as will be noted by the cut at the right upper corner

These Kiddies Were Guests of Strand, New Orleans

All the "Pollyannas" and "Pollyjohnny's" of New Orleans were guests of the Strand theatre, one of the Saenger Amusement Company's string recently at a special matinee of "Pollyanna." The New Orleans Item co-operated with the Strand management in giving the children an outing. See opposite page for full details.

Clever Presentation of "Everywoman"

A clever feature in connection with the presentation of "Everywoman" at the Regent theatre, Toronto, during the week of April 12 was a prologue which consisted of the appearance in succession of characterizations of the many principals in the picture. Ten people were used for the portrayal of the picture characters and they were introduced in an interesting fashion. The stage setting for the prologue consisted of a huge book, eight feet high, from the pages of which stepped the characters. As each page was turned a character emerged from the book. Incidentally, the pages bore designs appropriate to the respective character. When "Everywoman" appears, the decorations on the page consist of forget-me-nots; when "Youth" stepped out, tiny buds were prevalent; roses were shown when "Beauty" appeared, and the page design for "Modesty" consisted of lilies.

A very interesting monologue was recited by "Nobody" during the unfolding of the characters.

John Arthur, musical director of the Regent, was responsible for the success of the prologue. Arrangements for the stunt required much careful attention, particularly in choosing the characters for the number and also in choosing the gowns to be similar to those worn in the picture. The musical accompaniment and special lighting effects also required much study.

Farnum Barton, a local dramatic authority, assisted Mr. Arthur in arranging the monologue. Murray Kay, Limited, a local department store, provided the gowns and due mention of this fact was made in the newspaper advertisements, reading notices and in the theatre program.

During the previous week a special musical number at the Regent consisted of an appropriate solo by a talented Toronto vocalist garbed in surplice and cassock, an elaborate church setting with many Easter lilies being used for the purpose.

A Short Subject Which Dominates the Program

"THE BOTTOM OF THE WORLD" installment one is the top of the list when it comes to enumerating the film achievements to be found at the Broadway houses this week.

In a way this camera man's record of the trip of Sir Ernest Shackleton in search of the South Pole is only a scenic or educational, just as the spectator is inclined to classify it, but the reel being shown at the Rivoli theatre this week, projected without music, seems to grip the attention as would the most tense drama. The camera work achieved is a revelation for this sort of film. So clear and sharp is it that one views the picture as if looking from a window. The angles from which many of the views are shot is also most unusual, especially those which show the Endurance crushing its way through the ice as the ship works slowly into the latitude of eternal winter.

Exhibitors who are looking for short subjects that are more than fillers can not go amiss on this release, providing the second part lives up to the initial release, which we understand it does.

Toronto Four Hundred a Special Show

Toronto's "Four Hundred" gathered in the ballroom of the King Edward Hotel, Toronto, for a special "cinema tea" at which was presented for the first time in Canada the special attraction, "Everywoman," under the auspices of the Famous-Lasky Film Service. The whole proceedings were carried out with eclat and the stunt was arranged in such a "high-toned" manner that it appealed to the best clientelle in the city. Special invitations were issued to well known society and club leaders and the handsome ballroom was tastefully decorated for the occasion. Special orchestration was provided by the fine orchestra of the Regent theatre under the direction of Conductor John Arthur.

The patronesses, whose names were published in connection with appropriate advance notices, included Lady Falconer, wife of the president of Toronto University, Lady Whitney, wife of the late Premier of Ontario, Lady Eaton, wife of Canada's great retail merchant, Mrs. George Nasmith, Mrs. Morgan Dean, Mrs. John Bruce and Mrs. John Garvin, the latter acting as hostess. The society editors of the various Toronto newspapers chronicled the event and the various reviewers waxed enthusiastic over the screening. The stunt was classed as a fine stroke of business and one that will insure great success for the feature when it is released locally in the regular way.

Saenger's Gives Free Show For Children

In Conjunction With Newspaper "Pollyanna" Presented as Matinee Attraction

NEW ORLEANS recently learned that she has more "Pollyannas" and "Pollyjohnnys" than she thought she had when the Saenger Amusement Company and the New Orleans Item held a special morning matinee, showing Mary Pickford's "Pollyanna" to thousands of inmates of various Children's Homes of the city, at the Strand theatre.

Don Philippini and his orchestra played harder and louder and longer for the youngsters than for a regular show. How could they help it? They had to be heard. There was no ban on the noise the "kids" could make. It was their party. Mlle. Vogel, Mons. Perisse and Becker, French Opera stars, sang. Mlle. Vogel already was on the regular program for the afternoon and night shows, but when the two men heard the morning matinee was to be solely for the youngsters and that it was free, they threatened to start "une guerre" if they were not allowed to lend their voices for the special showing of "Pollyanna." Young women from the Saenger offices took the place of ushers and did it upon their own initiative. They had seen one of the Saenger-Item orphans' shows and they knew what it meant.

Pollyanna was the big hit of the program. The leader of the orchestra, Don Philippini, got a perpetual laugh with every wave of his baton and locks, and one could see every little orphan mentally decide to find a stick and play "Don Philippini" from that day forth. The singers, especially M. Becker in his Mephisto costume with the "Serenade" from Faust brought down the house—the kiddies evidently deciding that he was a cheerful devil. But the roar that went up at Mary Pickford in "Pollyanna" showed that every orphan kiddie's heart was in Little Mary's keeping. They smiled with her smiles, and chuckled at her pranks, and even a subdued sniff echoed at the death scene of Pollyanna's father. The dogs and cats, the marble game, the fight, the stern aunt, the raid on the apple trees, brought a recurring barrage of orphan chuckles.

The New Orleans Railway and Light Company hauled the children to the theatre and back to their institutions. Jacobs, Elmers and the Grunewalds Caterers furnished candy and the kiddies were permitted to eat the candy while the show was being given.

Now, where's the exploitation? The writer doesn't know and doesn't care whether it was an exploitation. However, he knows he has an awfully kindly feeling toward the Saenger company, especially since he has been reading articles every day for a week on the front page of the Item and especially when they were written by the best writer the Item has and when every sentence almost pictured the delight those youngsters were going to experience. It made the writer want to see the picture too. When he saw several street car loads of yelling, laughing, shouting children going through the busiest part of town, stopping traffic while people gazed at them, he heard more than one pedestrian inquire:

"What's all the racket about?"

"Oh," the pedestrian was answered, "that's the Saenger and Item's 'Pollyanna' party for the orphans."

"Is that so?" the pedestrian replied with just that tone of voice that meant good, warm, inward, mental satisfaction with Saenger and the Item.

Window and Lobby Displays That Merit Great Praise

Neighborhood Theatre Exploitation Suggestions

WITH heavy overhead, is it humanly possible for the small-theatre exhibitor—the neighborhood house owner to make big profits from exploitation?

How should he go about it?

These questions have been answered by N. A. Benson, manager of the Stadium theatre in the East End of Pittsburgh, Pa., with the exploitation campaigns at great contrast to the general run, with which he has successfully put over special feature attractions recently and at the same time established a new attraction endurance record for his house.

It is Mr. Benson's belief that rules which hold good for exploitation of motion pictures in large cities' business districts, are not worth considering when applied to the neighborhood exhibitor. Special lobby displays that are a considerable expense and need many hours of serious preparation, Mr. Benson claims, do not earn the powder to blow them up when used for the neighborhood theatre. He avers that sufficient people do NOT pass the neighborhood theatre to warrant an expensive lobby display, and that the exhibitor's problem is not to get the people inside his theatre while they are passing, but to bring them to the door from their homes.

"Exploitation," argues Mr. Benson, "that reaches all sections of the city is of absolutely no use to my theatre, inasmuch as people in the four corners of the city will not cross town in order to get to my house, when they can stop off in the city and have a varied selection of theatres to choose from. They will not cross town unless I have some particular attraction that will draw them. In such a case, of course, exploitation may be aimed at the entire population of the city. But in the main I find it without reason to scatter display and advertising matter promiscuously, as it only adds to the expense and does not get the maximum amount of business. It is better I believe, to concentrate publicity on the chosen few people in the immediate vicinity."

Mr. Benson's method of "concentration" is well illustrated by his campaign inaugurated to put over "A Virtuous Vamp." Newspaper publicity was relied on only in a very meager way. Mr. Benson put forth in the advertising columns only the bare bulletin that he ran daily in several East End and local papers. The idea of putting forward a big display advertising campaign did not appeal to him, he states, inasmuch as it violates his method of "concentration."

His system used in putting over "A Virtuous Vamp" concerned an agreement between himself and the proprietors of about half a dozen small drug stores, grocery stores and the like, that were located in the immediate vicinity of his theatre, and which were patronized by the people who patronized his theatre, and made up the great majority of his patronage. Mr. Benson had printed several thousand small heralds, measuring four by three inches, on which were printed these words: "Two of these tickets and twenty-five cents will admit one to the Stadium theatre for 'A Virtuous Vamp,' with Constance Talmadge, January 3-9."

To the proprietors of each of the stores Mr. Benson presented a thousand or more of these coupons to be distributed during the week before the run of the attraction. With each purchase amounting to 50 cents, one of the coupons was given. The proprietors needed no other urge to grant this favor than to be allowed an advertising slide on the screen of the Stadium during the week in which the coupons were being distributed. On these slides was mentioned the fact that a 50 cent purchase from these stores would avail the purchaser of one coupon which would enable him to see "A Virtuous Vamp" when coupled with another one and 25 cents in money.

Lloyd's New One Again Gets Over

WHEN all is said and done, friend and foe should take off their hats to Harold Lloyd for the consistency with which he comes through with entertaining comedies. "An Eastern Westerner," Lloyd's latest contribution to the silver sheet, and the comedy attraction at two of the Broadway picture houses this week, is well up to the standard of the releases of the past year, which, if we remember correctly, makes about an even half dozen in a row without one that "flops," something which few comedians have ever accomplished.

"An Eastern Westerner," when sifted to the bottom, is really very ordinary as to plot, hasn't so much in the way of business which can be called new, but for all of this the picture is good entertainment because Lloyd possesses a faculty of adding a new twist to the stuff he pulls and because his work is a little cleaner, more sincere and better handled than we are in the habit of getting in ordinary comedies.

This is the reason that his productions are ever increasing in popularity with both the public and the exhibitor. He has established a reputation for never handing out a lemon.

Book Mark Advertises "Pollyanna"

Ernest Stellings, until May 1st manager of the Grand theatre, Washington, Ind., used a very clever advertising idea for "Pollyanna" which cost little and could not fail to have secured results.

The public library in Washington as in all smaller cities is an institution. Mr. Stellings had a quantity of handy and artistic book marks printed announcing the engagement of "Pollyanna" at the Grand and extolling its merits modestly, and these were placed in every book in the library as they went out to readers.

The printing job was done locally and considerable pains taken to have the book mark look well.

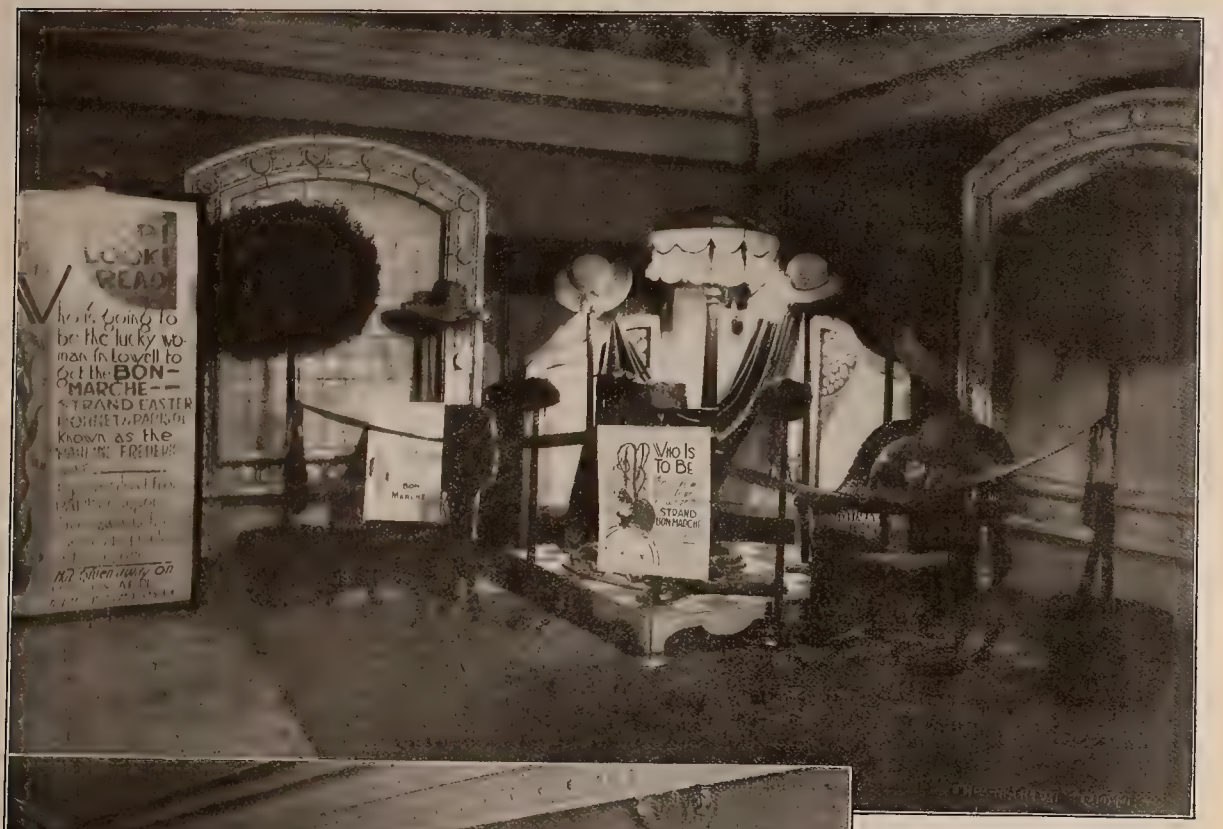
Makes Novel Use of Posters

CHARLES H. RYAN, manager of the Garfield theatre, Chicago, has originated a practical and attractive idea for use of the artistic posters now being put out by the various producing companies and has been utilizing them with good results for some time.

Mr. Ryan in giving the details of his idea said:

"At the Garfield we are equipped in such a way that we can raise our drop curtains and picture screen. A special made to order scenic drop was hung. This curtain is lowered every show during intermission and remains down during overture and takes the place of a stage setting. It is in front of the picture screen in our particular case. Footlights illuminate this special scenic drop curtain. On this curtain there is painted such a sign board as you generally see in your travels in the city along the boulevards or along the roads through the country.

"This sign board is large enough for two six sheet frames bearing lithographs of the coming attractions. The audience is bound to read the announcements during the intermission. It is better than stereopticon slides because attractively colored and composed posters make a more definite impression on the mind than a momentarily displayed slide. We also use stereopticon slides and trailers as they tell another point about the same picture you are advertising. The idea is inexpensive as only the curtain costs money in initial outlay and it will last as long as your theatre stands up. It is money well spent, an investment that will pay itself back to you in increased business due to its pulling powers. It should undoubtedly prove of special value for those exhibitors who object to the use of six sheets in the lobby.



Mr. Ryan at the Garfield theatre always advertises his two following productions. In this way each advance six-sheet is on view during two days at least.

Date signs hang under the six-sheets made of galvanized sheet tin, painted on two sides. Lettering is on both sides of these tin daters with the days of the week, as Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, etc., painted on. Permanently painted in the space for the dates on the curtain is the word "TOMORROW." This lettering "TOMORROW" is hidden from on the illustration by the date signs.

The six-sheet frames are put up from the back of the stage and fit into an opening in the curtain. We do not paste the six-sheets on the frame. We paste the six-sheet together and then tack it on the frame. The frames are made of light wood and are covered with muslin for a backing for the paper posters.

This is an original idea of Chas. H. Ryan's and he wishes to pass it along to those fellow exhibitors who can make use of it. Mr. Ryan will be glad to give further details upon request.

Soriero Wins Again With Novelty Presentation Idea

Views of the lobby of the Strand theatre, Lowell, Mass., during the "Bon Marche Strand Easter Bonnet and Parasol" display a full account of which is given on the opposite page.

Managing director Thomas D. Soriero is authority for the statement that this is one of the most successful ideas ever carried out in Lowell as an exploitation stunt for a picture house.

Millinery Display Big Event at Strand Theatre, Lowell

Thos. D. Soriero Turned Holy Week Into a Winner with Exploitation Idea

IN conjunction with the beautiful millinery display at the Strand theatre, Lowell, Mass., General Manager Thomas D. Soriero has been conducting a contest which has gained his house wide publicity, particularly among his feminine patrons, by offering as a prize an original model hat and parasol, imported from Paris. The contest has covered a period of four weeks, including Holy week, brought big results, and made that particular week a banner one.

The Paris hat, which was named "The Goldwyn-Pauline Frederick-Bon Marche-Strand Hat," was formally presented to the winner from the stage of the Strand theatre by Mayor Thompson of Lowell. He also awarded the parasol which matched the hat. The hat, modelled along the latest Paris design, won the instant approval of Mr. Soriero's women patrons, and the voting was spirited from the beginning of the contest. Although there were a large number of candidates for the prizes the contest soon narrowed down to a dozen favorites; and many of the less fortunate contestors, realizing their hopelessness, pooled their votes, awarding them to their favorites among the leaders.

Although this idea is not new as a publicity winner, it proved immeasurably effective in Lowell. Both the Bon Marche Company, which imported the hat and designed the millinery effects in the lobby display, and the theatre shared equally in the publicity attained. This co-operation, inspired by a mutual desire to further the ends of the theatre and the department store, can be and has been worked out successfully all over the country, annd is recommended to managers who desire an inexpensive means of establishing a novel and ever-changing feature for a moving picture theatre which desires to appeal to the imagination of its patrons. In this matter General Manager Soriero has successfully all over the country, and is recclothing exhibits, using in most cases mannequins for the display of the garments.

The millinery display, which ran all during the Easter period with a change of hat models each week, was a source of great interest to the women patrons of the Strand. Although the hats were not shown by live models, which is desired if they can be obtained, they were skillfully displayed on gracefully draped stands and in glass cases.

The stage set was also decorated with the latest spring hats, many of them expensive imported models, blending charmingly with the stage set. They gave an atmosphere that was instantly responded to by the patrons, particularly, of course, the women. All these hats were loaned and becomingly draped by the Bon Marche Company, and their managers report that through the publicity medium of the theatre, their sales for the season have been greatly enlarged. Especially so was this true of the higher priced models. According to the store officials they have never sold so many high priced hats as during this season; and as business at the Strand has increased correspondingly the millinery display and hat and parasol contest emphasizes the worth of co-operation as a publicity asset.

This contest has found its way into every home in Lowell, as it appealed to the women in particular. Every woman's husband, and every girl's sweetheart was asking their friends in the mills and factories to save their coupons for them. A coupon was given with every ticket purchased at the box office, entitling the holder to a vote in the contest.

Capitol Opera Improved by New Singer

THE Capitol opera this week is Wagner's "Tannhauser," with Karl Jorn, an addition to the Capitol Stock Company, singing the title role, a fact that adds not a little to the entertainment value of the composition as presented.

If there was to be criticism of the Capitol performances of the classic operas it would be that the principals were not adequate to the roles in the matter of voice accomplishment. Even the uninitiated when listening to opera insist on the singers possessing sufficient ability as vocalists to be easily recognized as artists. Without this "better than the rest" qualification opera does not impress the layman.

The moral implied in these observations is that if you are using opera as any part of your program, vocally, follow the example of the Capitol in securing the services of Mr. Jorn, and engage singers who can deliver.

Inaugurates "Secret Service" at Chicago

J. L. Friedman, president of Celebrated Players Film Corporation, has organized a secret service department. This novelty in film circles is not formed with any idea of pursuing the demon rum or four per cent, but is to assist in the exploitation of "The Lost City."

In each of the Chicago theatres where the first episode is playing Mr. Friedman has planted a "scout" whose duty it is to report exactly what the audience thought and said, and how they acted.

This is the way manager Fred M. Schaefer of the Crotonia theatre, New York, dressed his lobby and costumed his ushers for the Crotonia's engagement of "Her Elephant Man"

Philadelphia Showing of Rogers' Film Meritorious

One of the most novel exploitation campaigns of recent months is that which the Victoria theatre of Philadelphia put over for its showing of "Water, Water Everywhere." Among the stunts were cardboard "glasses of soda" as is shown in the illustration above that were placed in public places like hotels. Another was the "water bottle" display as shown by the cut to the left. Many other displays were secured all of which featured the catch title of the film and carried a picture of the star

Royal, Des Moines, Originates Fine Display for "Sex"

B. I. Van Dyke, owner and manager of the Royal Theatre, Des Moines, is the originator of this novelty lobby display advertising for "Sex." The cutout and special sign over the canopy are unusually effective. Mr. Van Dyke is a firm believer in the effectiveness of a well decorated lobby as a means of attracting extra business. His success with this display for "Sex" was no exception

Frisco Exhibitor Originates New One

In most cases an exhibitor seldom, if ever, pays very much attention to his single reel subjects (which he calls fillers), and as a consequence, passes up an opportunity that would bring him unbelievable financial returns and satisfied patronage.

Occasionally, however, an intelligent showman realizes that the single reel of today is past the filler stage, and in most instances can be exploited in such a manner as to furnish the refined and artistic touch necessary to round out a successful program.

George Mann, managing director of the Rialto theatre, San Francisco, and his presentation manager, Ed. H. Smith, have originated a presentation idea in connection with the Pathe Review which looks good to us and which according to information received is proving very successful. In every Review there is a dancing spectacle or specialty. Mr. Smith conceived the idea of cutting a frame from the film, and from this frame erected a stage set which was an exact facsimile of the one in the Review. He then secured a dancing girl and costumed her exactly as the dancer in the picture.

During the projection of the Review, when the subject interpreting the dance is flashed, up goes the screen and "lo and behold" we have this artistic specialty in reality, set, lighting and dancing girl.

It not only proved a valuable asset to the program, but gives the entire show a touch of class and refinement, which is enthusiastically received by the audience.

The greatest box office value which the Rialto finds in the idea is that a local dancer is secured, which gives the house unlimited possibilities for publicity of a local character.

Delivers Show By Aeroplane

W. R. Sample, owner of the Iris theatre, Casper, Wyoming, wrote a new chapter in motion picture history last week when he chartered an aeroplane to carry a film from Denver, Colorado, to Casper. A spring blizzard had tied up the railroads running into Casper for three days, and Manager Sample found himself in a difficult predicament when there appeared to be no probability of his receiving the print of "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come," which he had advertised extensively.

Rather than disappoint his patrons, Manager Sample found a flyer who was willing to make the journey and engaged him to get the film from the Denver exchange. The trip was made successfully over a distance of some 300 miles, and the show at the Iris was staged as promised. Local publicity resulting from Manager Sample's enterprise attracted an increased attendance at the Iris that helped to defray the expense of the costly expedition.

Gives Rule for Expending Advertising Fund

Answering the perplexing exhibitor question as to the most expedient method of distributing an advertising appropriation for an exploitation campaign comes an experience of the Strand theatre, Tampa, Fla., where a series of experiments have resulted in an almost definite solution. The answer as given from Tampa is:

"Expend one-half to two-thirds of the entire sums in a smash advertisement on the first day of the run. Divide the remainder into equal space allotments to be used on the following days."

The manager of the Strand adds that the experiment has shown that it is almost impossible to fix two or three days of a week into the minds of patrons by advertising.

"A week's run can be advertised successfully in advance," he says, "but a two or three days' showing gains nothing from advance exploitation. Go after them at the time you want them to actually come into your theatre, if you want the best returns from your money."

The six months' experimenting came to an end on April 20th.

Special Prologues Proving Success at Toronto

Handsome prologues have become a regular feature at the Regent theatre, Toronto, and it is a fact that these specialties have become more greatly developed at the Regent than in any other moving picture theatre in Canada. One of the most interesting of these prologues at the Regent was an appropriate playlet, with vocal music, for the presentation of "In Old Kentucky," starring Anita Stewart. This consisted of a stable scene with darkies shooting craps and singing—and a real live racehorse.

National Census Used For Exploitation Purposes

THE proud city fathers of Fairmont, W. Va., who had cheerfully withstood political campaigns, influenza epidemics, sewer bonds, and all the war-work drives took a new interest in motion pictures with the enterprising Dixie theatre of that city tied up an exploitation campaign for special feature attractions with the predominating thought regarding Fairmont—the 1920 census. This, in the estimation of the manager of the Dixie, was the greatest question. Which readily brings to the majority of exhibitors the title of the attraction which the Dixie was exploiting—"The Greatest Question."

A perusal of the main striking ad used by the Dixie in this connection throws very little light on what D. W. Griffith's production might include. The largest type and the most prominently displayed in the three column by ten inch ad. used by the Dixie carried this word matter:

"Population of Fairmont As Shown by the 1920 Census Just Completed Is the Greatest Question."

The Dixie explained its reason for attaching so much importance to the population of the city in which it was located by supplementing the sweeping statement with the conditional word matter in smaller type:

"Following the announcement of the Census Bureau that Charleston has a population of 39,608 against an 'estimate' in John T. Harris' West Virginia Legislature Manual of 50,000 on September 1, 1918."

If the people of Fairmont ever had any doubts as to the extreme local pride of the Dixie management such doubts were expelled by the exploitation used for "The Greatest Question."

Sheet Music as Advertising Medium

As an inexpensive and effective means of exploitation, helpful generally in regard to boosting any particular feature, and directly successful in increasing matinee attendance, Fred Ellis, manager of the Clinton Square theare, Albany, N. Y., has found the giving away of copies of sheet music to the women attending afternoon performances to be an attractive feature. He uses this method for his Thursday matinees and is well satisfied with the results.

The cover is utilized for the advertising of the feature production to be shown at the theatre the following week, and by checking results as nearly as possible he has found that the sheet music is far more effective than a herald or program announcement. He tried it out first as a means of exploiting a special run on the "Back to God's Country," which has a catchy song of the same title dedicated to it. The idea took so effectively that he continued it as a regular feature at his theatre on Thursday afternoons.

Kimena Gives "Down on the Farm" Great Send Off

Even for Los Angeles, the presentation and exploitation for "Down on the Farm" was unusually elaborate. On this page (top and bottom) is shown the prologue arranged for the attraction in which domestic animals including the Sennett donkey and dog were given a prominent role. The lady with the "bull" paraded the streets, the banner over the animal's back explaining her mission. Another stunt was to drive "Teddy" the dog about hitched to the small wagon as shown in the illustration. Many other exploitation stunts were successfully put over and the picture is reported to have broken all records of the past two years at this theatre

Neighborhood Houses Cater to A Different Clientele

Mrs. Kanges Tells of Her Experiences in Managing Residential Theatre

AN interesting and illuminating instance that proves in a reasonable way that a neighborhood theatre and a woman exhibitor make the happy combination for success at suburban showmanship, is brought to light through the pronounced success of Mrs. Anita Kanges, manager of the Playhouse theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa.

The following article has been secured exclusively for Motion Picture News in the hope that a great part of Mrs. Kanges' findings in the neighborhood exhibitor field can be applied by other exhibitors in a profit-making way.

"We neighborhood theatres," said Mrs. Kanges, "have learned to cater to a far different clientele than that of the down-town houses. We come to look upon our patrons with a sort of personal interest, after a while becoming to know many of them. I think a neighborhood exhibitor may well be compared to a merchant who delights to build up his trade by taking a personal interest in as many of his customers as possible. There is a note of genuine humanism to be found around a neighborhood motion picture theatre. The humane touch to a neighborhood theatre is what the air of dignity and reserve is to the business-section house. To conduct a "city" theatre with a view to instilling this "humane" touch would be as detrimental as to try placing the dignified air in the small house. This is only one of the reasons why running the two theatres is found to be a trying job. A neighborhood house can not exist when conducted on a starched-collar plane. The people who make up its box office receipts and fill the theatre are not looking for "high" airs when visiting a neighborhood house. They are seeking no formal functions or dress-theatre parties. They are merely looking for a comfortable and enjoyable evening. The more cozy and familiar they find it the oftener they will buy admission tickets. When the neighborhood theatre fails to hold its air of easiness and informality it looses its power of attraction for its steady customers. I have tried out the system and find that it is eminently correct. A neighborhood exhibitor who seeks to make a success of his house must first get out of his head the idea that he is going to make his house a "Metropolitan" movie house. It can't be done successfully in a neighborhood. That, I believe, is where the majority of new neighborhood exhibitors make fatal mistakes. I have always maintained and still do, that any neighborhood theatre can be made to pay, and make good money for its operator if handled in the correct way. I believe that there is just as big a neighborhood field as there is a downtown field and have never been able to understand why it has never been properly developed.

"As I have previously said, the two theatres must cater to two different classes of people—those seeking a more dignified and formal entertainment, and those seeking a comfortable, homelike, informal diversion. In the second place, a neighborhood theatre is forced to exist without half the exploitation and newspaper advertising that a down-town theatre can put forth. Whatever advertising and display exploitation that the neighborhood theatre does must be done on a highly conservative scale—or else the exhibitor will find that 'everything is going out and nothing is coming in.' The neighborhood theatre must be run on a more conservative scale because it does not play the first run attractions—it does not play its attractions for such extensive runs—and it does not play to as many people as does the down-town theatre. I take it for granted that the neighborhood theatre is of the usual size—which seats about fifty per cent of what the down-town theatre will seat. In a week a neighborhood theatre—even if it happens to be a high paying one—can never show a fourth of the box office receipts of the general run of down-town theatres. Under these circumstances—which are without a doubt absolute fact—how can an exhibitor expect a neighborhood house to be guided by the policies of the down-town theatres?

"I have said that the smaller theatre can not exist under down-town theatre policies. I have found many methods that can and should be substituted for down-town theatre policies. The first I mentioned is the human touch. This can be given the theatre in many ways. One of the most effective ways for keeping down the 'formal' atmosphere around the neighbohood house is to forsake all the 'pet exhibitor hobbies' that seek to make the house 'metropolitan. Ushers in neighborhood theatres are the first things that should be done away with or minimized. In the first place, there is no need for an abundance of them, as the theatre does not seat a great multitude of people and anyone entering while the attraction is in progress is fully capable of finding his own seat without the aid of attendants.

"There should be no long drawn out program of news reel — comedy and feature. A neighborhood exhibitor must keep in mind the fact that his patrons have attended not for the purpose of spending the night—but to see whatever feature attraction he is presenting. I have found that on a few special feautres I have been able to cut out every part of the program that was not essential—using only the feature. The star is the thing at the neighborhood house and the number of reels is of no importance.

"I have found that in practically every instance when I have shown special features, I have been able to cancel all other side attractions. I have never yet heard my patrons knock the system. I take it for 'then that it suits them.'

"The neighborhood exhibitor may further be able to bring in the informal air by appearing himself in the lobby of his theatre—often speaking or nodding to his patrons. Many successful neighborhood exhibitors that I know of go to the extent of taking tickets themselves (when they have a man hired for that purpose), just for the privilege of being able to say a word or nod pleasantly to the patron as he enters the theatre.

"This method may seem 'small time' to some down-town exhibitors, but to one who has had experince in successfully conducting a neighborhood house it will immediately be recognized as one of the very things that brought about a successfully large patronage. I maintain that nothing is 'small time' as long as it helps build up a business."

Jensen and Von Herberg Issue House Organ

RECIPROCITY is something we always did believe in and since Editor A. C. Raleigh in his first issue of "Screenland" the new house magazine published by Jensen and Von Herburg in the interests of their West Coast theatres, which include the Liberty, Columbia, Majestic and others of Portland, Ore., was complimentary enough to use a number of items from the Motion Picture News, nice enough to so state and called the News "an old friend," it is only fair that we say some nice things about "Screenland." Besides the publication deserves it. The first issue is a newsy, nicely printed magazine telling about the attractions which are coming to the Jensen and Von Herberg theatres, carries some advertising and should prove a real "fan" magazine favorite with Portland people. The front page has a very artistic cut of Norma Talmadge. Here is wishing "Screenland," Jensen and Von Herberg and Editor Raleigh lots of success.

Stage Settings Feature of Quimby's Presentations

(Above)
The atmosphere of the forest pervaded the setting used for Wally Reid's "The Valley of the Giants"

(Right)
This was the Strand's setting for the prologue number in connection with the showing of "The Egg Crate Wallop." Mr. Quimby is a firm believer in the value of the stage setting not only from the angle that it helps puts the picture over but also that it is the best of exploitation

Buys All Available Books For Free Distribution

"You won't have to buy the book—you could not if you so desired—for all the available copies have been purchased and turned over to the Carnegie library for free distribution," announced Mr. Skinner, manager of the Alhambra theatre, Ogden, Utah, prior to the playing date of "The Honey Bee" at the Alhambra.

Mr. Skinner's theory for purchasing the available copies of the Merwin novel was that the more people read the book, the more people would want to see the photoplay version. He counted especially in interesting the residents of Ogden who could be classed ordinarily as "readers," rather than motion picture fans.

The result of Mr. Skinner's experiment convinced him that his theory was good since many new faces were noted at every performance of the film during the three-days engagement.

New Idea in Inexpensive Exploitation

AN instance of the clever showmanship that distinguishes the exploitation efforts of Harry J. Troxell, Jr., manager of the Photo Play Theatre, Gettysburg, Pa., is afforded by one of his recent campaigns which with almost little or no extra expense stirred up an unprecedented amount of local comment.

At the same time Mr. Troxell's idea offers to exhibitors a new idea in inexpensive exploitation. The main idea he brought out is that it is a good idea for exhibitors to watch the cast names of the person appearing in the various screen-dramas they present.

To illustrate, in Gettysburg there lives a man named Hon. John Keith, prominent for his integrity and civic interest and well known through his prominent connection with the Adams County bar. Mr. Keith has a multitude of friends in Gettysburg.

How Miss Miles Got Some "Art" For Her Story.

No, impetuous exhibitor, this is not a new accessory—it's not an animated one-sheet! So stand back and listen!

Here's a little idea that Accessory Manager Charles Behlen of the Cincinnati Exchange, Famous Players-Lasky, used in getting some newspaper publicity for his department in connection with the removal of the exchange to the new headquarters in the Paramount Building. Pioneer and Broadway, Cincinnati. And a lot of exhibitors may pick up a little extra publicity if they want to duplicate the stunt.

Miss Myrtle Miles, photoplay editor of the Cincinnati Times-Star, wanted some "art" to illustrate her story about the new Paramount Film Exchange Building. Accessory Manager Behlen framed the "animated poster"—but warns exhibitors that he can not furnish a live and pretty girl with every aceessory order. Miss Amelia Valerie of the Paramount Artcraft office was selected to peep through the Dorothy Dalton one-sheet. DeMille might have posed the picture a little more accurately, physiologically speaking—but what of that?

Another photograph in the group used by the Times-Star was the one above with a little "story" telling how Fatty Arbuckle reaches Cincinnati film fans in the little (2-reel) film can, while demure, little Marguerite Clark arrives in the big (7-reel) can. Just a little illustration in contrast. This would make a good ballyhoo in front of your theatre when you play Fatty Arbuckle on your bill the next time.

Contest for "River's End" Gets Attention

An exploitation campaign designed to impress the title of an attraction and the whereabouts of its showing has just been completed with pronounced success by Proctor's theatre, Plainfield, N. J., and after a fashion that well merits emulation by other exhibitors.

The campaign opened with announcements in the Plainfield Courier-News stating that Proctor's theatre would award ten prizes to those contestants who could make the most words out of the letters contained in "'The River's End,' at Proctor's theatre." Arrangements were made by the Edward A. Laing Stationery Store to provide a window display of the words submitted by contestants.

The list of prizes consisted of:

First prize, season pass for two people for one year; second prize, season pass for two people for ten months; third prize, season pass for two people for nine months; fourth prize, season pass for two people for eight months; fifth prize, season pass for two people for seven months. The other prizes offered seats for two people decreasing one month for each succeeding prize.

Fatty Arbuckle as he appeared as an exponent of "art"

And by the time several thousand persons of Plainfield had racked their brains to find out how many words could be made from the information that "'The River's End' was at Proctor's theatre," they were quite anxious to know what it was all about and the showing of this attraction was unusually well impressed upon everyone.

Theatre and Newspaper Run Successful Contest

The Cleveland Plain-Dealer and the Standard theatre of Cleveland are putting over a contest in the interests of "A Modern Salome" which, while entirely separate from the National event, is modeled somewhat along the same lines.

Fifty dollars in cold cash goes to the winner of the first prize. The other prizes consist of passes for various time periods. Second prize draws a season pass. The next twenty winners get a pair of seats for twenty consecutive weeks. The next ten are free to accept the courtesy of the house for ten weeks, and the last five get passes for five weeks.

It wasn't hard to answer the questions. All you had to do was attend the show to collect the necessary data. Here is the questionnaire that Manager Tom Carroll of the Standard put up to the Cleveland fans to answer:

1. Who was Salome in biblical history, and what did she do?

2. What was the strongest dramatic situation in the plot of "A Modern Salome" and how many different gowns does Hope Hampton appear in?

3. What is the lesson taught by the story of "A Modern Salome"?

4. Write a criticism of "A Modern Salome" in not more than 200 words.

The only conditions stipulated in the contest are brevity and honesty.

Three Distinct Innovations in Artistic Decoration

(Right)

Novel and effective lobby display originated by the Utopia theatre of Painsville, Ohio, for the engagement of "Shore Acres." Note the practical lighthouse built in the corner of the lobby

(Left)

Stage setting by Shirley Shreeves for a prologue number presented by the Odeon theatre, Barlesville, Okla., for "The Fall of Babylon" The dancer in the center is Mlle. Stolba an artist of reputation. The prologue number was artistically lighted and added greatly to the presentation of the feature, besides being good exploitation

Lobby display in use for "The Lost Batallion" engagement in New York state where the film is being shown as a road attraction.

Twelve ex-soldiers of musical ability are also with the show and present a musical performance in conjunction with the film called "The Jazzophiends." On the day of the opening the band gives a street parade and on the inside are featured in a twenty-five minute concert. Each player is an expert in from five to seven different instruments. The band and the exploitation have proven unusually effective, many box office records having been broken in various parts of the state

Liberty Theatre, Seattle, Decorates for "Kentucky"

The illustrations on this page show the elaborate and tasteful lobby display arranged by manager Mike Weimkirch of the Strand theatre, Seattle, for his showing of "In Old Kentucky." At the top is an early morning picture of the lobby, with a good view of the manner in which cut-outs were utilized in front of the house. This lower cut gives a good idea of how Manager Weimkirch constructed his beaver board front which encased the usual theatre entrances

Chicago and the Mid-West

Covered By L. H. MASON

Western studios for Bray pictures now is installed in their permanent quarters at 5314 N. Ashland Avenue and work is under way. Vice President E. Dee Patmeley is in charge at the enlarged quarters, and Jack Neeley is at the head of the animated technical department. The downtown office at 208 S. La Salle Street will be continued.

Harry Weiss of Superior Screen Service, Inc., has closed a contract with the Western Production, Inc., to handle their latest production, "Neglected Wives" for Illinois and Indiana. He also has arranged to handle "Sacred Flame," featuring Emily Stevens for the same territory. First releases of productions handled by the Superior Screen Service, Inc., in the Chicago loop are as follows: "The Confession," May 9th, at the Playhouse for an indefinite run; "The Sport of Kings," opening on the same date at the Band Box theatre for one week, to be shown the following week at the Star theatre; James K. Hackett in "The Greater Sinner" will be the feature at the Band Box the week opening May 16th and will be shown at the Star on May 23rd and released at the outlying houses later.

J. B. Covil, owner of the Majestic theatre at East Moline, Illinois, has returned from a two weeks' outing at Excelsior Springs, Missouri.

A $120,000 theatre will be erected at East Moline, Illinois, by J. E. DuFoe, former owner of the Lyric theatre of that city. Mr. DuFoe already has an architect drawing up plans for the big new house.

Manager Seery of First National, Chicago Exchange, has gone to Excelsior Springs, Missouri, to rest up. He lost no time in making his get-away following the big convention last week, and intends to spend a lot of time on the links at the Springs and forget all about office worries.

May 1st was the opening date for the fishing season in Indiana, and Harry Weiss was on the job at midnight on April 30th. There was a bulge over his left hip pocket and we wish we had been there, but anyhow Harry returned with a fine mess of fish, also two contracts with Indiana exhibitors. That's combining business and pleasure.

"The Yellow Typhoon" will be the Randolph's feature for the week opening May 9th, and Jones, Linick & Schaefer are arranging some special advertising to put this widely heralded Anita Stewart feature over big.

Marshall Neilan's great picture, "The River's End," is breaking all house records this week at Barbee's New Loop theatre, according to Assistant Manager Joseph Koppel.

"School Days," which opened at the Rose, one of the Moir theatres in the loop, made such a hit on its opening day that Manager Deneen took his pen in hand and wrote Fred Aiken of the Vitagraph Exchange that the third of the Semon Comedies was the "best yet." Arrangements have been completed by Manager Aiken to boost these popular Semon laugh getters on the billboards of Milwaukee, and a contract has been signed up with Cusack to do the work.

The advertising campaign put on by the Mickey Film Company, backed up by the splendid two weeks' run of "The Woman He Chose," at the Ziegfeld, which was followed by a big week at the new Barbee Loop theatre, has made the state right buyers sit up and take notice, and H. O. Martin, who has charge of the state right sales for this big picture, reports that offers to buy and inquiries are pouring in in such volume that he anticipates that the picture will be sold for the entire U. S. and Canada within a fortnight.

First National has added Nat Wolf to its staff of city salesmen. Nat recently having resigned from the Republic Distributing Corporation's Chicago branch.

L. A. Schiff, a popular member of the Unity Photoplays sales force for the past two years, has resigned to become associated with his brother in the stock and bond business. The firm will be known as Schiff & Company, Exchange managers, as well as exhibitors may now have a chance to do business with Mr. Schiff, who has a reputation of being "some" salesman.

One of the May 1st changes which Chicago film men regret, is the closing of the Chicago office of Arthur S. Hyman Attractions, and as it necessitates the departure of Manager McCoy, who goes to the Detroit office of the company to take an important position. The pictures controlled by Arthur S. Hyman Attractions, in Illinois, will be released through New Era, and at Indianapolis Doll-Van will take care of their Indiana releases.

De Mille's great production, "Why Change Your Wife?" is closing the fourth week of its run at the Randolph Theatre, and has been the greatest success from a box-office standpoint ever shown at the big loop house, according to Jones, Linick & Schaefer.

R. C. Cropper, president of Reelcraft Pictures Corporation, has returned to New York after spending ten days at Chicago's Reelcraft exchange. An interesting announcement as to a new series of two reel feature comedies, is expected to be made shortly after Mr. Cropper's arrival in New York.

Al Normal, who was for seven years with Mutual, and is one of the most popular picture men in the Chicago district, will be in charge of a new special short feature department installed by Empire films, according to Aaron Saperstein who states that the growing demand for one and two reel comedies and two reel Westerns has caused him to create a special department to handle this character of pictures.

Saxe Brothers, who are firm believers in the value of live publicity, have employed Ann McNurdy formerly of the Minneapolis Tribune to handle the publicity for their downtown houses in Milwaukee. It is understood that ground will be broken this fall for a new 2,900-seat theatre to be erected by the Saxes on the site of the Princess, at a cost of $500,000.

Joseph J. Schwartz, owner of the Kosciuszko theatre, Milwaukee, has recently purchased the Liberty theatre, which will be under the active management of Mrs. Schwartz.

Dr. Sam Atkinson, vice-president and business manager of the Allied Amusements Association, made a flying trip to Washington, D. C., this week where he will endeavor to have some of the confusion in regard to motion picture theatre ticket taxes, straightened out.

A. S. Kirkpatrick of Robertson-Cole, tarried in Chicago for a couple of days last week on his way from the Pacific Coast to New York. While admitting that he was chuck full of important news, he kept the lid on it, but intimated that important Robertson-Cole announcement might be expected within a few days.

Al Normal, old time Chicago film man, was paying a visit to his old home town last week and was kept busy renewing old friendships. He has been making his headquarters in California.

J. H. Clanet and Joe Huber have sold the Dreamland theatre at Galena, Ill., to Messrs. Ward and Weber, who now own both houses in that city.

Illinois exhibitors visiting Chicago exchanges last week included Mrs. Sam Schloesser of the Royal, Peru; Louis Murphy, Majestic theatre, Spring Valley; D. A. Wormald, LaSalle, and C. F. Irwin, Irwin theatre, Bloomington.

F. Fellis of the Fellis theatre, Hillsboro, is back on the job again after three weeks passed in the hospital following an operation.

The second of the "Billy Whiskers" comedies, made under the personal supervision of Harry Spanuth, president of Commonwealth, has been completed and the titles are being made. Mr. Spanuth declares the new picture is an improvement over the first, which created very favorable comment when it was shown in Chicago, and gives Billy the goat some great opportunities to butt in.

H. H. Havens is the latest addition to the sales staff of the Bartola Musical Instrument Company and Manager Dan W. Barton was kept busy introducing him to exhibitors at the First National and Exhibitor's Conventions in Chicago, last week.

"Aladdin's Lamp Reelized," is the title of one of the handsomest and most interesting booklets ever issued in the interest of a picture concern. It has been put out by the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation and is crammed full of interesting facts in regard to the picture industry, as well as the new corporation, and also contains a large number of unusually artistic pictures of studio scenes, stars, etc. The publication, which is artistic and clever from the splendid cover design on the front page throughout the book reflects great credit on William M. Hight, publicity director for Reelcraft in Chicago, who is reported to have been responsible for the idea and execution.

Mrs. Sidney Drew lost no time, after arriving in Chicago, in starting work on the next of her two reel comedies, starring John Cumberland. Part of the technical crew, which aided in previous productions of the "After Thirty" series, has been brought to Chicago and installed at the Essanay studio. Mrs. Drew's company is working on a stage adjacent to that occupied by Miss. Alice Brady and her company where work again is proceeding, following the temporary suspension owing to Miss Brady's illness.

"The Virgin of Stamboul" moved from the Playhouse where it has had an extremely successful run of two weeks, to the Casino for an indefinite run, on May 1st. Manager Lesserman of Chicago's Universal office reports bookings for this super feature continue to pour in and that all indications are that it will smash all records in the Chicago territory.

Wanda Hawley lately elevated to stardom as she appears in her first production for Realart, "Miss Hobbs"

Live News From The Producers

Miss Hobbs" Showing Pleases Ritchey

"A Knockout," was the judgment of Will M. Ritchey, supervising director of the Realart studios in Hollywood, after witnessing a run of "Miss Hobbs," Wanda Hawley's first starring vehicle, in its rough, unfinished state.

"I have never seen a picture," said Mr. Ritchey, "that delighted me so much in its early stages. Barely three reels have been shot so far, and of them only one has been assembled in anything like the form it will eventuallly take. So you can judge the play must have 'something on the ball,' or I wouldn't venture such a positive statement. To my mind 'Miss Hobbs' completely satisfies the public's demand for something different."

America Cinema Holding Transferred

The quarter interest in American Cinema Corporation, formerly owned by Burrel Ruskay and associates, has been purchased by Walter Niebuhr, president of the corporation, and Lucius J Henderson.

Mr. Ruskay has retired from the board of directors, and the vacancy has been filled by Mr. Henderson, who has also been elected secretary of the corporation.

The company has two successful features recently released in "The Inner Voice" and "Women Men Forget." "Stolen Moments" is now in the course of completion, and Wilfred North is directing a new picture, "His Brothers' Keeper," recently started.

Elmer Harris to Adapt "Old Homstead"

Elmer Harris has been chosen to write the new Paramount Artcraft version of "The Old Homestead," according to announcement from the Coast. Mr. Harris has many original plays and adaptations to his credit, and being noted for a number of clever farce comedies and musical plays for the speaking stage.

Aims to Share Its Success

Robertson-Cole Declares Mutual Progress Is Its Driving Power

THE chief element which has led Robertson-Cole to make its drive for new stars and new attractions is the generous response which has been evinced to its appearance in the field, and to its presentation of new stars by exhibitors. Back of this is the close cooperation which exists between the Robertson-Cole company and the exhibitor.

This is the message conveyed in a statement recently issued from the offices of the Robertson-Cole Company. "Every energy of this distributing company is being centered on the promotion of combining and making identical so far as possible the interests of the company and the thousands of exhibitors which it serves," continues the statement. "Some months ago Robertson-Cole bought out completely the exchanges which it had been using, so that there might be an unobstructed flow of traffic between the executive sales office and the man who plays the pictures.

"This move paid such immediate and liberal dividends that the company next turned its attention to concentration upon stars. It has added more new names of stars of acknowledged box office power in the last few months than any other company, and already is reaping the fruits of its enterprise. Always it has had in mind the principle which brought first success, the element of mutuality, and in the future will stress this even more.

"As a part of the general scheme to give the exhibitor every aid, Robertson-Cole is issuing with each picture the most complete advertising and campaign matter ever sent out. One detail of a great publicity scheme is the employment in all its exchanges of a trained publicity director who works under the branch manager, and whose duties consist in giving the exhibitor every possible aid in showing and exploiting all Robertson-Cole pictures."

Early Release for Feature

"Simple Souls," Blanche Sweet Picture, to Be Available May 23

IT has been announced by Pathe Exchange, Inc., that "Simple Souls," the latest Blanche Sweet production, will be released on May 23. The production comes as a climax to the remarkable success of the star in "A Woman of Pleasure," "Fighting Cressy" and "The Deadlier Sex."

The appeal of scores of exhibitors for another Sweet production of the calibre of "The Deadlier Sex" made it necessary to advance the date of release on "Simple Souls." "The Deadlier Sex" started out with a greater number of advance bookings than any other Pathe production of the season, and in every case it met with such genuine and widespread approval that exhibitors who played it wrote in asking for the early release of another Blanche Sweet production.

Although the first announcement of the new picture was made but a week ago bookings have started to roll into the Pathe branches. The steady increase in the popularity of the star has been measured in the remarkable increase in contracts on each production, and to-day she is playing in as great a number of motion picture houses as any other woman star, according to the Pathe announcement.

In "Simple Souls" Robert Thornby has again distinguished himself, according to reports. His work in "Fighting Cressy" and "The Deadlier Sex" was exceptional and in this picture it is truly remarkable.

Sales Force Praised

Harry Burman of Universal, while in Chicago last week, called a meeting of the sales force and complimented them highly on the business being done in the territory.

Associated Exhibitors Adds to Membership

The two newest franchise holders in Associated Exhibitors, Inc., are Thomas Saxe, of Milwaukee, and R. D. Craver, of Charlotte, N. C. Mr. Saxe, a pioneer exhibitor and one of the best known showmen in the country, has acquired the franchise for the Milwaukee territory This franchise was transferred to Mr. Saxe from the Merrill Theatre Amusement Company, whose Merrill Theatre recently changed hands. Mr. Craver, with large independent theatre holdings in the South, obtained the franchise for the Charlotte territory, which includes the states of North and South Carolina. Mr. Craver was one of the first and is one of the foremost exhibitors in the country.

It is understood also that the Dallas territory has been secured by prominent Southern interests, and that announcement of this will be made very shortly by the Associated Exhibitors.

Pathe to Release First Rolin Comedy May 16

"Merely a Maid," which Pathe will release May 16th, is announced as the title of the first Rolin comedy featuring Beatrice LaPlante, the latest entry into comedy films from feature pictures. Miss Le Plante is known to film fans, having appeared in leading feminine roles in various feature productions, her latest being with Sessue Hayakawa in "The Beggar Prince."

New Home for Metro Company on Coast

As a home for the new Buster Keaton comedies which will be produced by Joseph M. Schenck for release through Metro Pictures Corporation, the studios in Hollywood, Cal., formerly occupied by the Capitol Film Company, have been taken over by Metro and are being specially fitted up for their new uses.

Finishes First "Buddy" Post Capitol Comedy

The first of the "Buddy" Post Capitol Comedies being produced by National Film Corporation, to be distributed by Goldwyn, has been completed at the Coast studios of the National Corporation. Mark Goldaine, who is directing the giant comedian, has selected "Oh Girls" as the title for the first release. This title has been accepted by the officials of the company.

Teachers Pay Campaign by "Topics" Closes

The Literary Digest announces that since its object is attained the teachers' contest closes with program 52.

Suggests How to Reduce Costs

A DEFINITE plan for the practical reduction of film costs without detriment to quality was made public in Los Angeles this week, when Andrew J. Callaghan, head of the film corporation of that name starring Bessie Love, issued a statement advocating the combination of independent units in both their studio and business branches in order to cut down the tremendous overhead costs. According to Mr. Callaghan's plan, this would interfere in no way with the business identity of separate organizations, but would apply solely to their physical effects.

"The last few years," says Mr. Callaghan in his statement, "have witnessed a considerable increase in the rental of motion picture films that is due to a corresponding increase in the costs of photoplay production. However, inflated values in every branch of this industry have been regarded as a natural development of the times, whereas in many instances they represent a lack of vision on the part of organizations who believe that present day efficiency methods cannot be introduced into the material side of production without injuring the artistic side.

"After considerable study of the general situation in the producing field I feel justified in presenting for the survey of members of the industry a plan of amalgamation of independent units which will bring about a very big reduction in the costs of making photoplays without detriment to either the quality of the films or the identity of the separate organizations. Naturally this will react in a favorable way to the exhibitors of the country, who have watched with increasing alarm the growing costs in the manufacturing of their product.

"The one practical way to bring about an immediate cut in overhead costs is the uniting of groups of independent producers for the purpose of eliminating overlapping expenses. This development has followed in the evolution of every big industry and in our own field there is just as much, if not more justification for such a saving movement.

"Although each group of independent entities would join hands under one roof, this would in no way interfere with their individual status. The organizations, save in the many cases where work need not be duplicated, would remain absolutely intact. In the same sense that they had joined under one roof for studio purposes, they would similarly have one set of business headquarters, preferably in New York City. And although their organizations were so constituted, then releasing arrangements would follow the former policies of each separate unit.

"The saving that would result from such an arrangement is difficult to determine, although in my study of the plan I have found that a modest estimate of the economy on many small items would bring the total saving to an astonishing figure. The housing of all the units of a group in one studio will do away with the overlapping disbursements as regards properties, laboratories, costumes and many other items which do not readily suggest themselves, but which are nevertheless indispensable details in the complicated machinery of production.

"Quite apart from the physical effects of the united producing units is the question which concerns each of them separately as to their artistic aims. Their combining under one roof leaves them as before with entire freedom in the purchase of stories, the hiring of casts and the other details on the artistic side. The big saving in production, then, would come on the material side, for which there would even be a central bureau for the requisitioning of supplies."

Universal Buys Good Fiction

Promise of "Bigger and Better" Stories Will Be Fulfilled

"UNIVERSAL is keeping its word to exhibitors and photoplay patrons that Universal pictures will be based on stories of the highest class," said R. H. Cochrane, vice president of Universal in a recent interview.

"Several months ago, Mr. Carl Laemmle, our president, formulated a definite policy of 'better and bigger stories.' He promised that exhibitors could rely upon Universal for a continuous supply of high class pictures, screened from none but the best fiction. Universal is keeping that promise. The records of our scenario department during the past several months, show that Universal is sparing neither pains nor expense to make that promise good.

"Perhaps the most important of our recent purchases is an original screen story called 'The Cat That Walked Alone,' by John Colton, who has turned from the magazine field to the film world. In 'The Cat That Walked Alone' we have found an ideal vehicle for Miss Priscilla Dean. It is admirably suited to display the many facets of her volatile screen temperament. Universal will become busy putting it into production.

"We also have recently purchased two admirable farcical scripts from the pen of Edgar Franklin, who is being recognized more and more as a leader among the writers of clever comedy plots. One of our two recent acquisitions from him is 'Fixed By George' in which we, to be called 'Once a Plumber.' It also will be used for a Lyons and Moran high class comedy.

"Although it is the Universal policy to encourage original screen writings, we have elected several plays for picturization plays that peculiarly fit the abilities of various Universal stars. Among them is the amusing musical comedy by Fred Jackson which enjoyed such a long run in New York last season 'La! La! Lucille!'

"We are sparing no pains to supply Harry Carey with first class stories for his human interpretations. Spurred by the success of 'Marked Men' a recent Carey picture from the pen of the popular novelist, Peter B. Kyne, and 'Overland Red,' a remarkable character study by H. H. Knibbs, we have lined up three stories of equal merit for the same star.

"The first, 'Human Stuff,' is now in production. It was an original screen story. Another, soon to go into production, is 'Fightin' Job,' a screen story by H. H. Van Loan, the author of 'The Virgin of Stamboul.' A third, 'Sundown Slim' from the novel by H. H. Knibbs, promises to duplicate the success of 'Overland Red' by the same author.

"Among other first rate stories being made into Universal pictures are 'The Red Lane' the novel by Hobart Day, now being screened with Frank Mayo in the leading role, 'False Colors,' a serial story by Edwina Levin, 'Hitchin' Posts' an original story by H. M. Shumate and 'Mirana' a story of the South Seas by Ralph Stock, in which Edith Roberts is being starred.

"John C. Brownell, the head of our Scenario Department, is under instruction to go to any extreme to search out and obtain the best possible stories for Universal production."

DeMille Coming East for Conference

For the purpose of laying out future production plans, Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of production, has wired Cecil B. DeMille, director-general, requesting Mr. DeMille to come on to New York for a conference. Mr. Lasky is sailing in the near future for England to put in operation the production plans which the Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., has for making pictures at the company's new London studio.

Allan Dwan to Produce His Own Story

Allan Dwan has returned to his first love in the world of films. He has again become an author. It was by writing a scenario several years ago that Dwan "broke" into the motion picture business. He has since gained fame as a director and producer. His next picture, the sixth production under his contract with Mayflower, which he is to start at once is from his own pen.

Will Rogers' Son As Popular as Himself

Will Rogers now has a rival in San Francisco. His "opposition" is none other than his four and one half year old son, Jimmie Rogers, who drew as much applause as his dad at a recent "kid" matinee staged by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation at the Rialto Theatre, San Francisco. The attraction was Rogers' latest production, "The Strange Boarder."

"Sex" Will Have Three Weeks Run in Detroit

"Sex," J. Parker Read, Jr.'s Louise Glaum production, now registering a big success in its third week in Los Angeles, will be given three weeks' presentation in Detroit beginning mid-May as the result of contracts signed the past week by Charles H. Miles, the big Cleveland and Detroit showman, and Tom Ealand, general manager of the Miles Detroit enterprises.

Saturday Evening Post Stories for Ray

Saturday Evening Post stories are proving to be among the most successful of present day screen vehicles as regards entertainment value and drawing power of title, according to Arthur S. Kane, president of Kane Pictures, who declares that the acquisition by Charles Ray of two Rob Wagner scenarios last week represents an astute business move on the part of the First National star.

Screen Story May Be Made Into Opera

"For the Soul of Rafael," Clara Kimball Young's latest production, may be made into an opera, according to plans and arrangements that were inaugurated with the first showing of this play at Grauman's Rialto theatre, in Los Angeles.

Vitagraph Starts Its Serials

Moreno Stars in Latest; Three Companies Now Busy on Coast

VITAGRAPH now has three serial companies working simultaneously out on the West Coast. William Duncan is on the final episodes of "The Silent Avenger"; Joe Ryan and Jean Paige are well along on "Hidden Dangers"; but that company formally announces this week that Antonio Moreno, previously starred in three successful Vitagraph serials, is working full tilt on another.

Moreno's dash and athletic prowess have made him one of the big serial favorites of the country, and in starring the flashing eyed Adonis in another episode play, Vitagraph is acceding to the requests of the exhibitors who have played and cashed in on former Moreno serials. "The Invisible Hand" is still reported to be cleaning up all over the United States and Canada.

Albert E. Smith and Cleveland Moffett, who write the Vitagraph serials, have spent the last few weeks on the Coast in finishing the scripts for the current Moreno serial, the title on which is as yet not announced. That a tense mystery elements travels throughout the story is indicated by the working title, "The Veiled Mystery."

Pauline Curley, who created such a favorable impression as leading woman in "The Invisible Hand," will again be seen as Mr. Moreno's leading woman. H. A. Barrows and Nenette De Courcy head the supporting cast. Webster Cullison is directing.

Another DeMille Coming

"Something to Think About" to Differ from Previous Pictures

SO many false reports and rumors have been circulated regarding "Something to Think About," Cecil B. DeMille's latest special production for Paramount Artcraft, that the producer has been moved to make a formal statement regarding his latest creation.

"Nothing was said or published regarding 'Something to Think About' during its production simply because I did not wish to confuse this picture with 'Why Change Your Wife?' which had not yet been generally released at that time," states Mr. DeMille. "There was no 'mystery' about 'Something to Think About'; there was nothing in its production work which could not have been made public at any time had it seemed advisable.

"The story and scenario of 'Something to Think About' are by Jeanie Macpherson. The theme differs rather radically from that of any of its immediate predecessors and it carries a very different sort of a 'punch' from that of 'Male and Female' or 'Why Change Your Wife?'

"Elliott Dexter returns to the screen in this production after an absence of almost a year. The rest of the cast includes Gloria Swanson, Theodore Roberts, Monte Blue, Claire McDowell, Theodore Rosloff, Mickey Moore and Julia Faye.

Realart Manager Visits Home Office

Walter E. Scates, manager of Realart's Boston office, visited the home offices this week for several days. He came to make arrangements for the premiere of "The Deep Purple," an R. A. Walsh Production, presented by Mayflower Photoplay, at the Park Theatre in Boston during the week of May 2. Mr. Scates reported that the Wanda Hawley campaign for the first picture, "Miss Hobbs," has resulted in a clean-up in Boston territory.

To Install New System of Poster Supply

A new system of poster supply and distribution, which, it is stated, will insure every exhibitor a complete line of new posters at all times, is projected by Universal. It will be installed by Edward Armstrong, Universal's district manager for the Western Division, and will be modeled closely upon his system now in vogue in the Universal's Denver branch.

Producers to Re-Edit Historical Drama

"My Own United States," a historical drama, produced by the Frohman Amusement Company and released through Metro, has been taken out of the market. The producers have purchased back the rights and will re-edit the picture. It will probably be ready for the states rights marked by September 1st.

Thomas Ince Purchases Four Screen Stories

"I Wonder If——," a story of Manhattan madness as applied to frail femininity, has been purchased by Thomas H. Ince for the next Ince-Paramount-Artcraft picture starring Enid Bennett, it was announced this week. Frank Dazey is the author. During the past month Mr. Ince has also bought three stories of Charles Belmont Davis, a brother of the late Richard Harding Davis.

Screen News Now in Conservative Press

It was the appearance of John Barrymore in "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" that caused the Kansas City Star and the Kansas City Journal to abandon their policy of keeping motion picture news and reviews from their columns. When the Famous Players-Lasky picture was shown in the city the Star carried a review of the production and the Journal gave considerable space to the picture.

Seymour R. Schussel is Promoted by Realart

The promotion of Seymour R. Schussel to become assistant branch manager of the New York City office of Realart Pictures Corporation was announced this week by Lester W. Adler, manager. Mr. Schussel has been sales representative in the New York office since its organization last fall.

There is some good comedy in the American Film Company's "The Honey Bee," furnished by Albert Ray and George Hernandez

Publishers Commend "The Honey Bee"

The publishers of "The Honey Bee," written by Samuel Merwin, express their approval of the American Film Company's picturization of it, in glowing terms. A letter from the Bobbs Merrill Company, written by its secretary, D. L. Chambers, says in part:

"It may gratify you to know that we feel that you have carried out the general theme through the best possible fashion to get clear-cut dramatic effects, and besides this, you have secured the full measure of humor and by-play which the story affords and indeed have heightened it."

New Corinne Griffith Picture Announced

Vitagraph announces this week that "Bab's Candidate" is the title of the new Corinne Griffith production, which will be released in June. Miss Griffith and a large company are now in the vicinity of Savannah, Ga., making the final exteriors for this picture. The company will also make a flying trip to Charleston, S. C., this week, for additional Southern locations not available in the Savannah district.

"Bab's Candidate" was written by Forrest Crissey, and was adapted to the screen by Lucien Hubbard. The story won an O. Henry memorial prize contest, and has the typical O. Henry touch.

Associated Has "Convention"

Franchise Holders in Informal Gathering During Convention

ONE of the most important and significant sidelights of the gathering of independent exhibitors at Chicago last week was the informal "convention" of about a dozen of the franchise holders in Associated Exhibitors, Inc. The sessions of the Associated group, while unofficial, proved to be the pivot around which turned many of the progressive activities of the men whose presence in Chicago resulted in the formation of the Independent Exhibitors of America.

While no official connected with the Associated Exhibitors took official part in the doings of the independent exhibitors' convention, it was made known to those in Chicago that Associated Exhibitors, Inc., pledged its support to any plan or organization that is designed to protect exhibitors' interests. This pledge dovetails with the exhibitors' endorsement of co-operative propositions such as is exemplified in Associated Exhibitors, Inc.

"The Associated Exhibitors are heart and soul in accord with any movement or plan that is designed to further the unselfish interests of independent exhibitors," stated an announcement, "and for that reason we wish to compliment the First National Exhibitors' Circuit on the great progress made in their convention, and especially to emphasize the value of franchise protection and benefit offered by First National to independent exhibitors."

The gathering of the Associated men brought to light the fact that the franchise holders in Associated were receiving extraordinary co-operation and pledges of support of the Associated plan from the independent showmen throughout their respective territories. Associated franchise holders also stated that keen interest had been expressed in the announcement that Associated sub franchises would be available very shortly. The franchise holders say that exhibitors are attracted by the soundness of Associated's business-backed promise of 100 per cent protection, 100 per cent pictures, 100 per cent profits and 100 per cent ownership in a purely independent exhibitors' organization.

According to officials of Associated Exhibitors, some of the biggest exhibitors in the country have devoted nearly a year to the development of their sub franchise plan. These showmen have given their wisdom and experience, guided by good business principles, to its completion. It is stated that the plan is the direct result of the causes that have forced the observing exhibitors of the country to bestir themselves into action against interests that seek to destroy the stability of the independent exhibitor.

Among those who took part in the informal meetings of Associated Franchise holders were I. H. Ruben and M. S. Finkelstein, of Ruben and Finkelstein, Minneapolis; Harry M. Lubliner and Joseph Trinz, of Lubliner and Trinz, Chicago; John P. Harris, Pittsburgh; I. Libson, Cincinnati; C. M. Olsen, of Olsen & Sourbier, Indianapolis; L. H. Cooper, Oklahoma City; Thomas Saxe, Milwaukee; R. D. Craver, Charlotte, N. C.; Saul Harris, Little Rock; Judge Wilkerson and F. R. Rogers, of Signal Amusement Company, Chattanooga; Joseph Morgan, Washington, D. C.; F. C. Quimby, general manager of Associated, and Phil Ryan, also of Associated.

Hampton Picture a Big Hit

"Riders of the Dawn" Fills New York Theatre

UNHERALDED and unsung save for the announcement by W. W. Hodkinson Corporation of its arrival from the coast, "Riders of the Dawn," Benjamin B. Hampton's production from Zane Grey's novel, "The Desert of Wheat," had its world premiere at the Mark Strand theatre, New York, last week with an opening day rush that found the large Broadway photoplay palace all too small for the throngs.

So taken were President Moe Mark and Managing Director Jack Eaton with this finely-made Benjamin B. Hampton production at a preview last Monday that, despite the fact that press material and accessories had not yet been completed, they decided to give "Riders of the Dawn" immediate presentation. Record-breaking crowds and the glowing tributes paid the production by the daily newspaper critics fully vindicated their excellent judgment.

Its triumphant premiere at the Strand bears out the statement of a prominent Eastern exhibitor that "Riders of the Dawn" has the combined ingredients of Benjamin B. Hampton's previous successes, "The Westerners," "Desert Gold" and "The Sagebrusher"—wonderful acting, heart interest, faithful scenic effects, action galore and a wealth of realism.

Recognition of Zane Grey's audience-pulling power was shown conclusively in the tremendous volume of business done by the Hodkinson organization on his previous Benjamin B. Hampton production, "Desert Gold," but "Riders of the Dawn," to judge by the widespread exhibitor interest, gives every promise of eclipsing the mark set by its predecessor which was generally rated as one of the four finest pictures of the year. The famous novelist manifestly expresses his own complete satisfaction with the breath-taking rapidity and power of his picture by putting his autographed signature on the opening title of the second of his novels made by Benjamin B. Hampton. Mr. Grey has at all times been in close attendance at the Hampton studios, personally assisted in the building of the scenario and continuity and titled the picture in conjunction with Mr. Hampton.

Hodkinson managers throughout the country will hold trade showings on "Riders of the Dawn" this week. Announcement of its release date will be made next week.

Following are excerpts from the New York daily newspaper reviews:

The Tribune:—"The picture is a good melodrama well acted." The Times: "The big thriller at the Strand this week might well be called 'Action Unlimited'." The Sun and Herald: "This photoplay deals with the Northwest grain region vividly and thrillingly, without overstating its case." The Morning Telegraph: "'Riders of the Dawn' is an exciting and vivid story."

Fox Chicago Exchange Has New Quarters

The Chicago exchange of the Fox Film Corporation now occupies a new office and warehouse in the Windy City, according to word received at the New York studios. The exchange is now located at 207 South Wabash avenue.

"The Master Mind" to Be First Release

Correcting a previous announcement that Whitman Bennett's first release through First National would be "The Devil's Garden," it is now definitely stated that Mr. Whitman's initial production to be released via First National exchanges will be "The Master Mind." This picture will also present Lionel Barrymore in the stellar role. "It is likely, however," says the First National announcement, "that 'The Devil's Garden' will be the second Barrymore feature through First National's distributing channels."

"House of Toys" Given Special Art Titles

A special effort has been made by the producers of "The House of Toys," to eliminate as far as possible the sudden change from black to white areas when the titles flash to illustrations and illustrations to titles. The gradual fading into one another is said to have been accomplished in such a fashion that there will not be the usual dilation and contraction of the pupils of the eye.

"The House of Toys" was produced by the American Film Company and the art work on the titles will, it is claimed, satisfy the insatiable cry for "something new."

Arbuckle Will Star in "Traveling Salesman"

An indication of the big plans which have been made for Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle under his new contract to make feature comedy productions for Paramount Artcraft was given yesterday in the announcement by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of production, that the fat comedian is to be starred in James Forbes's famous stage success, "The Traveling Salesman."

"The Traveling Salesman" will be directed by Joseph Henabery, who directed Douglas Fairbanks in several of that actor's greatest successes. Mr. Arbuckle is now in the middle of his first feature comedy for Paramount. It is a version of "The Life of the Party," story Irvin S. Cobb wrote.

Stewart Picture Is Begun

Louis B. Mayer Star Starts on Fourth First National Picture

With "In Old Kentucky" still doing big business throughout the country, "The Fighting Shepherdess" being released, and "The Yellow Typhoon" just completed, Anita Stewart reached another mile-post in her Louis B. Mayer-First National career last week by starting production on "Harriet and the Piper."

Mr. Mayer is a firm believer in the theory that a star, to be given justice on the screen, must be seen in good vehicles. That he has followed this out religiously is seen in the above list of releases and the announcement that he controls the screen rights to "Sowing the Wind," "Judith of Blue Lake Ranch" and other plays and books.

Anita Stewart in such sterling vehicles as these makes a combination that is unbeatable. In order to give the proper amount of time to each production and to avoid the little slip-ups that come from rushing a picture, she is only making four attractions a year. And four attractions, with each of them a triumph of special effort, is a worth while achievement.

Previous to shipping "The Yellow Typhoon" print east, Louis B. Mayer showed the picture to a group of the foremost exhibitors on the coast. They all predicted that it would gross more than "In Old Kentucky."

Following "Harriet and the Piper," Miss Stewart will complete her working year with "Sowing the Wind." She will then take an extended vacation and return to the Mayer studio in the fall.

Tracy Novel Near Ready

"The Silent Barrier" Now Being Titled for Early Trade Showing

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation's exploitation campaign on Rex Beach's special production, "The Silver Horde," to be shown at the Capitol Theatre, New York, the week of May 9th, is in full swing. Window displays have been installed in many stores in different parts of the city, and choice locations are being secured for the striking "Silver Horde" paper. In all there will be approximately 1,000 boards.

The ingenious lobby and window display is a mechanical arrangement that represents a horde of fish caught in a net. A play of colored lights on the silvery bodies of the fish, so arranged that they are moved by a breeze blowing through the net, gives a brilliant appearance to the animated display. It will occupy a conspicuous position in the lobby of the Capitol.

Arrangements are being made with the publishers of "The Silver Horde" in novel form, to ship books to a long list of drug and stationery stores where they will be used in a window display. The active co-operation of book dealers in pushing the sale of the book in connection with advertising of the New York run of the film, has been secured. Co-operative advertising in newspapers is being arranged with dealers whose goods make a tie-up campaign feasible.

The exploitation campaign is being planned and carried out by Howard Dietz, manager of publicity for Goldwyn, and G. L. Brightman, manager of the exploitation department.

Frank Mayo Picture to be Issued May 17th

Universal announces as a special attraction, "The Girl in Number Twenty-nine," featuring Frank Mayo, to be released May 17. "The Girl in Number Twenty-nine" is an adaptation of Elizabeth Jordon's novel, "The Girl in the Mirror," and was produced under the direction of Jack Ford. Supporting Frank Mayo are Claire Anderson, Elinor Fair, Harry Hilliard, Ray Ripley, Bull Montana and many others.

Goldwyn to Distribute "Return of Tarzan"

"The Return of Tarzan," a picturization of Edgar Rice Burroughs' famous book, produced by the Numa Pictures Corporation, will be handled as a big special by Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, according to an announcement received from the home office of Goldwyn this week. The picture is now undergoing a final editing preparatory to its release, backed by a heavy exploitation campaign.

The cast includes Gene Pollard, playing Tarzan; George Romaine, Franklin B. Coates, Armond Cortez, Estelle Taylor, Betty Turner, and Donna Pepita Ramirez.

Western Series Will be Made by Pathe

Acting on an expression of opinion from exhibitors in all parts of the country to the effect that there is a great demand on the part of the public to-day for motion pictures of the great outdoors Pathe Exchange, Inc., will release beginning July 11 a series of two-reel Western outdoor pictures featuring Young Buffalo in the stellar role. The pictures were all made in the Canadian Northwest and in the lumberlands and are in settings of great mountains, streams, and the deep great forests where giant lumberman live their primitive existence. There are five pictures in the series.

New Story is Selected for Priscilla Dean

"The Cat That Walked Alone," an original screen story in a prologue and four parts by John Colton, has been selected as the next starring vehicle for Priscilla Dean, announces Universal. It is described as a story of an English earl's daughter, a woman of fiery temperament, whose escapades are the talk of British society. Tod Browning will direct the new picture, the production of which will start without delay.

Van Loan Writes Story for Hope Hampton

For her second production, to follow "A Modern Salome," Hope Hampton has just bought a new story by H. H. Van Loan. This gifted author, who for several years has been writing for the best known of the picture stars, and whose latest screen story is "The Virgin of Stamboul," has turned out a scenario for Miss Hampton which he declares is by far the most worth-while plot he has ever put an paper.

Julia Burnham is Made Metro Writer

Julia Burnham, who in her two and a half years as a scenario writer has contributed no less than seventeen pictures to the screen, is the latest addition to the scenario staff at Metro's New York studios in West Sixty-first Street. Miss Burnham's first script for Metro is "The Marriages of Mayfair," which she adapted from the Drury Lane melodrama by Cecil Raleigh.

Big Future Predicted For Pathe "Find"

A brand new luminary is approaching the film firmament according to the calculations of George B. Seitz and others connected with the production of Pathe serials, who have given such enthusiastic accounts of the talents and beauty of Lucille Lennox, a winner in a recent beauty contest with no previous stage or screen experience, to Paul Brunet, that the vice-president and general manager of Pathe has signed her to a contract to play parts in serials.

Miss Lennox is now doing a part in the serial "Velvet Fingers," which Mr. Seitz is producing in the New York studio, and the agreement gives Pathe a call on her services for a considerable time to come. She is one of the four winners on the "Fame and Fortune contest" conducted last fall by Motion Picture Magazine.

New Novel and Drama Offered to Producers

The first literary offering of the Authors Stage and Screen Plays, Inc., to motion picture producers is "The Trap," from the pen of Maximilian Foster. This story has been running serially in McClure's Magazine and will be published in the fall by D. Appleton & Company.

Another offering of the company is "The Fallen Idol," a society drama by Guy Bolton. This playwright has been responsible for "Adam and Eva," "The Riviera Girl," "Have a Heart," "Miss Springtime," "Polly with a Past," and many others. It is believed that motion picture producers will welcome this offering from such a literary genius and playwright as Guy Bolton.

Next Kerrigan Picture to be Ready Soon

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announces for late May release the seventh in J. Warren Kerrigan's series of Robert Brunton productions, "No. 99," prints of which were received this week from the Brunton Studios, Los Angeles.

Kerrigan is supported in this production by a splendid cast of players, notably; Fritzi Brunette, Emmet King, John Steppling, Lilie Leslie and Roy Laidlaw. Jack Cunningham is responsible for the screen adaptation of the Wyndham Martyn serial.

Tom Mix performs a thriller in "The Terror," a Fox picture

Big Talent in Fox Releases

Well Known Authors Represented in Five Features

ALTHOUGH the list of releases scheduled by William Fox for release during May includes four of the regular Fox entertainments and one of the Tom Mix star series productions, these five releases represent as brilliant an array of literary and artistic talent as ever has been published by this firm on a regular schedule.

To begin with, there is "The Terror," a remarkable web of wits, horsemanship and daring of the American cowboy with Tom Mix as star. It is the second of the Mix series pictures directed by Jacques Jacard and the director is said to be responsible also for the scenario.

The exterior scenes for "The Terror" were photographed in and around Sonora, California, a section made famous during the gold rush of '49. The company which William Fox has given his star includes Francelia Billington, Lucille Younge, Lester Cuneo, Charles K. French, Joseph Bennet and Wilbur Higby.

story of the play is an adaptation of Mrs. Bell's novel "His Harvest," and is said to be quite as becoming to the tiny star as was "Her Elephant Man," in which she made her debut under the William Fox banner and which also was from a book by Mrs. Bell.

Under the direction of Howard M. Mitchell, Shirley Mason has given her best efforts to "Love's Harvest." In the cast supporting Miss Mason are Raymond McKee, Edwin Booth Tilton and Lilie Leslie. It is a small cast and a strong one; and the story, adapted by Isabel Johnston, adheres faithfully to the book

Another eminent author contributing to Fox entertainments for May is Charles Alden Seltzer, whose "Forbidden Trails" is the fourth of the releases for the month. Buck Jones, who first appeared as a screen star under the Fox trademark in Harold Titus' story "The Last Straw," is to be seen in this Seltzer story.

In addition to these feature productions, a total of five bright and snappy Fox Sunshine Comedies will go to first run houses during May. The titles of these two-reelers, like previous releases which have become so popular, are funny to start with, and the producer's representatives indicate the five films as the most humorous quintet offered this season. They are, in the order listed, "A Waiter's Wasted Life," "Dangerous Eyes," "The Diver's Last Kiss," "Should Dummies Wed?" and "Mongrels."

Co Confident

Exhibitors Want Long Runs

Mayflower Will Try to Supply Present Day Demand, Says Prager

MOTION picture producers today are concentrating their efforts to put before the public productions of such high standard as will be calculated to guarantee to the exhibitors indefinite runs with corresponding profitable returns.

"We have given much consideration to the continually growing demand for such feature productions," declares Benjamin A. Prager, president of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, "and it has been our aim to sponsor pictures that will not merely be used for restricted dates but may be kept going for a prolonged period because of popular demand.

"Under the Mayflower plan, directors of the most unquestioned reputations are allowed absolute sway, untrammeled by any restrictions whatever in the preparation of film versions of the works of authors of the highest standing. This brings out the best that is in the director who benefits from the realization that he alone is responsible for the picture from the first step in its evolution to the moment it is flashed upon the screen. With such able directors as Allan Dwan, Sidney A. Franklin and R. A. Walsh equipped with these unlimited powers, their already splendid records willl undoubtedly be materially enhanced. It can be taken for granted that all those things that might in the slightest degree militate against the success of a picture will be eliminated.

"To co-ordinate with these full-power directors, there is a highly organized machine which places at their disposal the very latest developments of the camera, lighting and other equipment, all procured by the liberal expenditure of funds intelligently invested."

Mr. Prager then went on to show that fully 70 per cent. of the amusement seeking public of America attend motion picture shows; therefore it should be evident that every possible effort must be made to satisfy such an immense clientele.

New Amalgamation Has Added to Releases

Another announcement of considerable interest in the film is to the effect that the new combine recently effected between five big motion picture producing corporations of which the Gloria Joy Productions, Inc., and the Unique Films, Inc., are a part, has added two new features to their new amalgamation These are the well known series of animated cartoons known as "Your Uncle Dudley" made famous by Jack Retlaw the celebrated cartoonist, and "Laughs in Clay," an animated clay reel, produced by Clayart Films. These short subjects will be released weekly.

Hutchison Starts Work on New Pathe Serial

Charles Hutchison started work at the Brunton Studio on his first serial for Pathe under his new contract Monday, April 19. The working title of the play he will do is, "The Double Adventure," for which the story and scenario were written by Jack Cunningham.

Josie Sedgewick, who had the lead in the Jack Dempsey picture, has been selected as Mr. Hutchison's leading lady, and the heavy role has been entrusted to Carl Stockdale, who was also prominent in "Daredevil Jack."

Inter-Ocean Agent for Black and White

Following close upon the heels of its announcement in the trade press at the opening of branch offices in Los Angeles, San Francisco and Portland for the distribution of motion picture accessories on the West Coast, comes a second announcement from the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation offices stating that it has taken over the West Coast Distributing Agency of the Black and White Raw Stock, manufactured by L. Gevaert and Company of Antwerp, Belgium.

Writers Swamp Star With Screen Tales

The publication in the trade journals several weeks ago of the news that Charles Ray was in the market for scenarios and screen material has brought such an overwhelming response from writers and agents in all parts of the country that the star has issued a request from his Los Angeles studios for a temporary halt due to the fact that his immediate needs are completely satisfied.

Cosmopolitan Acquires Magazine Stories

Cosmopolitan Productions announces the acquisition of several new stories for motion picture purposes. Contracts have been signed with E. Phillips Oppenheim and Cynthia Stockley, whereby several stories of these authors which have been published or will be published in Hearst's Cosmopolitan, Harper's Bazaar, or Good Housekeeping magazines, will revert to Cosmopolitan Productions. Announcements of the titles will be made later.

Frohman Serial Is Completed

High Dives, Explosions, and Daredevilry to Be Seen, Is Report

WITH the return to New York of the cast of "The Invisible Ray" from Jacksonville, Florida, last Friday, the Frohman Amusement Corporation announces the entire completion of the 15-episode serial, "The Invisible Ray," starring Ruth Clifford and Jack Sherrill. The production was thirty-four weeks in the making, principals of the cast travelling as far west as Los Angeles, and as far south as Miami, Florida, with the opening episodes made in New York City.

The Frohman Amusement Corporation has issued the following statement, regarding its forthcoming release:

"The production is unique because of its record. Three separate studios were employed at as many diffrent locations. A negative of 124,180 feet was used. One-hundred twenty-four different and varied hazardous stunts were staged and photographed, in every one of which either Ruth Clifford or Jack Sherrill were the participants with the exception of one stunt where a daredevil double was engaged. This was the diving from an aeroplane proceeding at 80 miles an hour and more than 200 feet in the air, into the ocean. These stunts involved the use of railroads, drawbridges, aeroplanes, motor boats, yachts, automobiles, land slides, cliffs, a lighthouse, a schooner, government yacht, and a varied assortment of buildings, including armories, tenement houses, and private residences. Three small structures were blown up and three-quarters of a mile of caves or underground passages were built. Two automobiles were destroyed and the side of a mountain was blown out. 300 pounds of dynamite were used and fourteen of the interior sets were practical sets, being the corridors, writing rooms and hallways of the Mason hotel at Jacksonville, Florida, and the Commodore Hotel in New York City. An exact duplicate of the Columbia University chemical laboratory was built and destroyed.

"Messrs. Reinhart, Earle and Peacock, the photographers employed in the making of the serial, claim that between themselves they devised no less than 32 original photographic effects that have never at any time appeared in any motion picture. 1,488 still photographs were taken.

"Out of the total of thirty-four weeks during which the company was on the payroll three weeks and two days were lost because of accident, inclement weather, illness of some of the principals, and delayed transportation because of railroad strike. The lowest number of scenes taken in one day were nine and the greatest number was sixty-two. This, it is believed, establishes a record for the number of scenes taken in any one day.

"'The Invisible Ray' was written by Guy McConnell, one of the most prolific scenario writers of serial stories, and deals with the discovery of an unknown force, the use of which could either wreck the universe or act as a panacea for every known ailment. It comes in to the possession of a band of criminal scientists known as 'Crime Creators,' but it is impossible for them to use it without possession of the formula. In the production, the identity of the five principal characters is unknown and the denouement of the story is stated by the producers to be the most astounding revelation ever created in a serial.

"The Frohman Amusement Corporation have not as yet determined the method of release of the production, as to whether it will be distributed by way of the state right market or placed with an established organization operating its own exchanges. In any event, the production will not be released before September of this year."

Larry Semon Grows in Favor

3,000 Houses Show Comedian for the First Time

LARRY SEMON'S popularity as a comedian, and the real merit of his productions are being demonstrated, it is said, by the rapidly increasing demand for his comedies reaching the Vitagraph offices. Although already recognized as one of the cleverest funny men before the camera, the announcement that more than $3,600,000 was to be expended on the Larry Semon comedies within three years, has brought this star more prominently before those who appreciate clean, wholesome comedy, and the increased popularity has been the incentive for the comedian to do his utmost to deserve the confidence placed in him by comedy fans, according to Vitagraph.

Marion Davies, star in Cosmopolitan Productions, is an artist of ability as well as a film favorite

Some idea of the great Larry Semon wave that is sweeping over the country may be gained by the fact that within the past five weeks more than 3,000 theatres throughout the United States and Canada, which never before exhibited a Semon comedy, have added his pictures to their attractions, and are advertising and presenting them as features. The additional bookings are by no means confined to any particular class of theatres, but include a wide range from the smallest to the largest. Among the more prominent theatres that have booked the Larry Semon comedies, beginning with "School Days," which is just being released, are the America in Denver, the New Madison, in Detroit; the Portola, in San Francisco; the California, in Los Angeles, and the Gardner and Loew's Hippodrome, in Baltimore

Not only are the Larry Semon comedies attracting attention and bookings in new fields among the exhibitors and maintaining their favor with the older ones, but pleased showmen throughout the country are going out of their way to put their approval in writing. The letters come from all parts of the States and Canada, from big exhibitors and little, some serious, some humorous. M. R. Humble, manager of the Family theatre in Walkersville, in Canada, across the river from Detroit, writes one of the latter. He says:

"You know what I think of Larry Semon. Almost a year ago I told you that he had it over the others like a tent. It won't be long before some of the late comedy kings will discard their phoney beards, moustaches and become tragedians. They must be discouraged and disappointed if they have been watching our friend Larry."

Some of the exhibitors are so anxious to show their appreciation that they send telegrams. "To our mind 'The Grocery Clerk' and 'The Fly Cop' could not be improved," telegraphed C. F. Rollins, of the Star theatre, Boston. "However, if Semon's next one, 'School Days,' is any better we will take off our hats and say that Larry Semon is without any shadow of doubt King of Screen Comedians."

Larry Semon's newest, "School Days," will open a week's engagement at the Capitol theatre, New York, this coming Sunday.

Lloyd Ingraham Will Direct Mrs. Chaplin

Mildred Harris Chaplin's fourth First National attraction is to be directed by Lloyd Ingraham, who has two of the past year's successes to his credit, "Mary's Ankle" and "What's Your Husband Doing?"

Canada Distribution Fixed

Canadian Exhibitors Exchange to Handle all Hodkinson Products

THE W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announces the closing of a contract with the Canadian Exhibitors' Exchange for the distribution in Canada of practically all Hodkinson current and forthcoming releases.

Negotiations at the Hodkinson home office for the Exhibitors' Exchange were conducted by J. C. Brady, president of the Canadian organization, and H. Alexander, one of its directors. The Exchange, which numbers among its 160 members many of the best known showmen in Canada, has branches in all the principal cities in the Dominion. As a result of obtaining the Hodkinson franchise for all Canada, William E. Allan, general manager of the Exchange, has arranged to open offices in Winnipeg and St. John.

Though the Hodkinson output will be released formally in the Fall, some of the big specials, including "Sex" and "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," J. Parker Read, Jr.'s Louise Glaum productions, will be ready for Canadian exhibitors within a few weeks.

Among the pictures to be distributed by the Canadian Exchange are the product of the following Hodkinson producing units: J. Parker Read, Jr., Robert Brunton Productions, Joseph Levering, Deitrich-Beck Productions, William Parsons, Louis Tracy Productions, Irvin Willat Productions and the Dial Film Company.

Delegates Hail Charles Ray

First National Officials See Big Business Ahead for Juvenile Star

FIRST NATIONAL officials took occasion at their first convention since the acquisition of Charles Ray to acclaim the star in a most enthusiastic fashion and to prophesy for his forthcoming First National films a brilliant success. John C. Ragland, vice-president of the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation, who represented the interests of Mr. Ray at the Chicago gathering last week, reports that the consensus of opinion among First National delegates, concerning the business prospects of the star, is exceedingly rosy.

The reports from all parts of the country show that there is great interest in the new era of independent production upon which the star has recently launched, says Mr. Ragland in a statement from the Congress Hotel, Chicago. First National officials are receiving continual queries concerning the forthcoming films of Mr. Ray, and not only are business prospects for the future tremendous, but already the preliminary selling arrangements are in full sway and going stronger daily. The film men declared that the distribution of Mr. Ray's First National products would proceed automatically, and that the results would give some astonishing new records to the industry.

According to Mr. Ragland's report, the members of the Circuit were particularly pleased that the First National star was to appear in "Forty-five Minutes From Broadway" as the first of his new series of big pictures adapted from vehicles of reputation. Insistence was unanimous on the strength of the story, and it was freely predicted among delegates to the convention that Charles Ray in his bigger and better productions was in a fair way to step into the stellar male position in the film world.

To Duplicate First Success

Neilan Reports Heavy Bookings on "Don't Ever Marry" Augur's New Hit

THE success of "The River's End" and the favorable reception accorded to "Don't Ever Marry," are made the topics of comment in a statement recently received from the offices of the Marshall Neilan Productions. The statement follows:

"Marshall Neilan's initial independent productions, 'The River's End' and 'Don't Ever Marry' prove that this new organization is an important factor in producing circles. Proclaimed one of the biggest, if not the biggest photoplay of the year, 'The River's End' gave Marshall Neilan Productions an auspicious debut in the industry as well as among the motion picture theatre-going public.

"It is confidently expected at the Neilan offices in New York that 'Don't Every Marry' will easily duplicate the nationwide success of 'The River's End.' Bookings on the second picture, according to J. R. Grainger, in charge of sales, already exceed those on 'The River's End,' one week after the release date. In various districts the smaller towns are now already playing 'The River's End' to take advantage of the wave of popularity accorded the picture in nearby metropolitan sections. An instance is given in the case of Grantwood, N. J., an hour's ride from Times Square, where Manager Kelly opened with the picture one month after its debut at the Strand, New York. The theatre seats only 200 persons, but the business recorded at the box office on the opening day was exactly 100 per cent. more than the biggest day of the theatre since it opened several years ago, the former record being held by "The Miracle Man.'" In exploiting the picture, Manager Kelly received exceptional co-operation from Waterson, Berlin & Snyder, publishers of the song, 'The River's End,' who plastered the town with streamers, banners, etc., and supplied the theatre with a free singer.

"S. Barrett MacCormick, considered by many in the industry to be the leading showman of America, opened with 'Don't Ever Marry' at the Circle theatre, Indianapolis, last week. Three days after the film opened he wired Mr. Neilan as follows: 'Consider "Don't Ever Marry" one of the greatest comedies ever screened.'"

Universal Opens New Stage

Can Accommodate Twenty Units at One Time; Newest Equipment

A NEW stage, said to be large enough to accommodate twenty companies at the one time, is nearing completion at Universal City. Although still unfinished, the new building was officiallly opened several days ago by a dance and reception at which Isadore Bernstein was the guest of honor. Mr. Bernstein, after an absence of five years, returned recently to the coast as the general manager of Universal City.

A statement issued by Universal has the following to say about its new stage:

"A new stage, so large that twenty companies can work on it simultaneously, is nearing completion at Universal City. Although part of it still is unfinished, the new building was officially opened several days ago by a dance and reception given ostensibly in honor of Isadore Bernstein, who after an absence of five years, has returned to the film city to be its general manager.

"The new stage, known as the North stage, is the most modern picture making plant in existence. It is 400 feet long and 140 feet wide. It cost $100,000. With the new stage space, Universal City now has more than 150,000 square feet of stage.

"The North stage has a sub-cellar generating plant which will supply it and five other buildings with electricity. The electrical equipment will be in the form of a transformer station, utilizing the 15,000 volt current of the Southern California Power Company, and distributing it to smaller stations through Universal City at a reduced voltage.

"A complete elimination of the bothersome stage cable has been effected in the construction of the new stage. Heretofore, in a motion picture studio, these cables, laid helter-skelter over the floor of the stages, have greatly hampered the work of all engaged in the making of pictures. In the North stage all the distributing lines will be located above and below the stage proper. George Williams of the Universal City technical department superintended the building of the new structure."

S. M. P. E. CONVENTION MEETS MONDAY IN MONTREAL

ALL roads are leading this week-end to Montreal where the Spring convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers will be called to order on Monday. Reservations indicate that the session is to be the largest in the history of the Society. Fifteen papers have already been prepared. Theatres, studios, laboratories and research work have been covered by the authors of the papers.

The Perkins Electric Company invited the Society to Montreal and the program will be arranged by Mr. George Perkins of that firm.

Anniversary this Week of "Topics" Release

The Pathe Exchange, Inc., and Timely Films, Inc., are celebrating this week the first anniversary of the releasing of "Topics of the Day" by the Pathe organization. The close of the first year finds the film in use in practically every first class theatre in the country, and it is in use in at least one theatre in every city, village and town in which a motion picture theatre is located. It is one of the most widely distributed of the several Pathe short subjects.

Aside from its function as a distributor of some of the best laughs of the week, all selected by the editors of the Literary Digest, it has aided in many public movements in the course of the year and has become a decided influence on the public opinion of the nation.

Universal Cartoon Has 5,000 Drawings

An animated cartoon by Leslie Elton, in which there is a separate drawing for each frame of the entire three hundred feet of film, is announced by Hal Hodes for the new novelty reel soon to be released by Universal.

The subject which features "Cinema Luke," the funny cartoon comedian of Elton's "comics," took more than five thousand separate drawings. Elton was assisted by ten artists. It took two weeks to complete the cartoon.

Washington Exhibitor Praises Vitagraph

Vitagraph makes public this week a letter from J. J. Payette, assistant general manager of the Crandall Theatres of Washington, D. C., in which Mr Payette gives high praise to Vitagraph's production of "The Sporting Duchess," in which Alice Joyce stars. He says: "I am taking this method of complimenting Vitagraph on the excellent production of 'The Sporting Duchess,' now running at the Metropolitan. In my opinion it is one of the best in which this actress has appeared."

Fox Purchases Two Novels for Mix

William Fox has brought the picture rights to two western novels, written by James B. Hendryx, for Tom Mix. "The Texan" will go into production shortly at the Hollywood studios. The other book is entitled "The Prairie Flowers." Work is to start immediately on the adaptation of these stories under the supervision of Hamilton Thompson, editor "The Texan," according to present plans, will be released after "The Untamed," upon which Mix is at present engaged.

The letter in the back of the book appears today. Turn the pages quickly until you come to it.

Goldwyn Features Are Started

One in East and Second in West Under Way, Is the Report

GOLDWYN announces that work has been started on two of its big feature productions and that another picture, based on Irvin S. Cobb's story, "Boys Will Be Boys," will soon be placed in production at the Culver City studios. The Goldwyn statement, announcing its production activities, is submitted as follows:

"Goldwyn has started work on its third eastern production starring Madge Kennedy. The new vehicle is 'The Girl With the Jazz Heart,' from the story by Robert Shannon, which first appeared in Munsey's Magazine. Miss Kennedy recently finished the picturization of 'The Truth,' taken from the famous play by Clyde Fitch. 'The Girl With the Jazz Heart' is regarded by officials of the Goldwyn organization as a certain money-maker. Although cast along different lines, it possesses the same universal appeal which distinguishes 'The Truth.' It gives Miss Kennedy every opportunity to display her humorous and emotional talents.

"'The Girl With the Jazz Heart' will be directed by L. C. Windom, who directed 'The Truth.' Joe King is playing opposite Miss Kennedy. The rest of the cast is being selected while Miss Kennedy and Mr. King are working together.

"Director Reginald Barker started work this week at the Culver City Studios on what promises to be the biggest picture ever made on the Goldwyn lot, the all-star production of 'Black Pawl,' from the widely read story by Ben Ames Williams. 'Black Pawl' is a virile tale of the sea, intensely dramatic and replete with spectacular incidents that will be utilized in making the film version one of the screen sensations of the year.

"Russell Simpson, a powerful actor who profits by a rugged physique and a dominant personality, has been chosen to interpret the masterful character after whom the story is named. He has just completed a strong part in another all-star Goldwyn production, 'The Branding Iron,' and his remarkable work in that picture is responsible for his choice to fill the exacting role of Black Pawl. Mr. Simpson has previously been seen in such productions as 'The Old Homestead,' 'The Barrier,' 'The Brand,' 'Out of the Dust' and 'Breakers Ahead.'

"Director Barker is now considering a number of actors available for the character of Red Pawl and expects to reach a decision this week. John Bowers, one of the most popular young leading men on the screen today, will play Dan Darrin, Helene Chadwick will be Ruth Lytton, and Alec Francis will fill the role of Samuel Poor.

"The Irvin S. Cobb story and play, 'Boys Will Be Boys,' will soon be placed in production at the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation's studios in Culver City.

"Much of the success which the play scored on Broadway was attributed to the appeal to the character known as Peep O' Day and interpreted by Harry Beresford. The story is built around this figure, that ranks as one of Cobb's greatest creations. Goldwyn has not yet announced the actor to play the title role on the screen, but it is probable that a choice will be made within the next week. The story, with its rural background and true to life characterization and incident, affords other inspiring opportunities for telling performances.

"Word also is received from the Coast that Mabel Normand, Director Victor Schertzinger and his entire company have left for San Francisco, where some big boat scenes will be made for Miss Normand's next picture. In the course of this story, Miss Normand will be required to dive from the deck of a ship into the ocean."

Bruce Completes Series

West Indian Scenics Soon Ready for Release Through Educational

ALTHOUGH his scenic pictures have been before the motion picture public over a longer continuous period than those of any other scenic artist, Robert C. Bruce has just completed his first series taken outside the continent of North America. As a matter of fact, before this all of his work, with the exception of a few pictures made in Canada, have been confined to the United States.

Mr. Bruce has just completed a trip of several weeks to Cuba and Jamaica for Educational Films Corporation and is now editing and titling the pictures made there. Among the titles are "The Castaway," "The Isle of Desire," "Tropical Nights," "The Narrow Winding Road," "The Banana Special" and "Water Trails." Cities and the usual objectives of the tourist have been carefully avoided in these pictures, and novelty is promised as one of their principal appeals.

Upon the completion of these pictures Mr. Bruce will start on his first professional trip abroad, first visiting the British Isles. He will take his entire expedition with him, and in order that he may be satisfied that all his material is suitable he will leave next week for a trip to the White Mountains and other sections of New England, covering fifteen hundred miles in a week and putting his cameras, automobiles and staff to the most strenuous tests. Mr. Bruce will remain abroad for several months, returning only to edit and title some of his pictures, and then continuing his work in European fields.

His work abroad does not contemplate any of the usual travel material but scenic studies of various sections in line with the work that has won him such a high standing in this country.

Goldwyn's next Pauline Frederick picture will be "Roads of Destiny" from an O. Henry story

Old Print Pleases Newspaper Men

One of the features at a testimonial dinner given last week in the Waldorf-Astoria, New York City, in honor of "Jim" Corrigan, who has been a New York newspaper reporter for fifty years, was a novelty two reel comedy depicting humorous incidents in Jim's career. The picture was arranged by the Universal Film Company

The title of the picture was "Love Triumphs Over Handcuffs." It was obtained by digging up an old print of the adventures of a reporter.

Atlas at Work on Unusual Subject

Jacques Byrne, sunburned and mosquito bitten, is back in Chicago after a sojourn in the everglades of Florida and at Jupiter Island, where he directed the shooting of some of the scenes for "The Greatest Business in the World," the forthcoming Atlas Educational Film Company's picture which will be released through Si Greiver.

Twenty million women in America alone, are engaged in "The Greatest Business in the World," which is housekeeping, and the picture makes an interesting analysis of the different methods in vogue from the days of the caveman down to the present or electrical era, the marvelous developments in housekeeping conveniences and labor saving devices in the last twenty years, which was greater than that in the previous two thousand years, being given particular attention.

"Prehistoric stuff" was what Mr. Byrne was seeking at Jupiter Island where caves of coral formation and tropical growth formed wonderful natural settings for the caveman's housekeeping, as shown in the picture. He also found some very wild settings in the Florida everglades which also were visited by the company.

"The Mollycoddle" Set for June Release

Two of the greatest factors of life, to-day, heredity and environment, have been used by Douglas Fairbanks in supplying the theme for his third United Artists Corporation production, "The Mollycoddle." Hiram Abrams has announced June 13 as the release date for this production.

Reared amid the conservative surroundings of an English environment, Richard Marshall, interpreted by Fairbanks, becomes a man of gentle manners and fastidious tastes. Then the girl gets into Richard's life and also into difficulties. Richard's American two-fisted fighting ancestry eventually cracks the polished exterior, and of course things start to happen with a rush.

Douglas Rothacker and H. J. Aldous in East

Douglas D. Rothacker and Treasurer H. J. Aldous of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company arrived in New York last week and have established their headquarters at the offices of the Eastern Industrial Division of the Rothacker Company, suite No. 303, Candler Building, 220 West 42nd street. Mr. Aldous will be in New York during the present week, but Mr. Rothacker expects to remain a week longer.

Lee Kohlmar Engaged by Universal

Lee Kohlmar, one of the best known character comedians on the stage, has been signed by Universal to appear in a series of one and two-reel comedies. Another stage favorite recently engaged by Universal is James Liddy.

Seena Owen Will Please

"House of Toys," a Splendid Story for Popular Star, Say Producers

Seena Owen, star of "The House of Toys," an American Film Company feature for Pathe distribution

SEENA OWEN has scored a big success in "The House of Toys," it is reported. She looks and acts to perfection the role of the thoughtless and selfish girl who approaches the problem of matrimony with but one thought: how romantic to be poor with the man one loves.

The force and timeliness of the theme so convincingly put over, with artistic insight and treatment which reflects great credit on the director, George L. Cox, is sure to make "The House of Toys" a very popular photonovel. The settings are beatuiful, for there is nothing of physical poverty or sordidness pictured in the drama; it is the story of a veritable house of toys and a "dream girl" whose play house was shattered.

Pell Trenton in the leading male role makes a pleasing hero. Helen Jerome Eddy interprets the role of the secretary, the "other woman" in the case, and George Hernandez appears in the likable role of Jonathan Radbourne, a veritable Cheeryble brother. Lillian Leighton, Henry Barrows, Marian Skinner, William Buckley, Stanhope Wheatcroft and Perry Banks successfullly round out a very fine supporting cast.

The novel from which the drama is adapted was written by Henry Russell Miller, a practicing lawyer in Pittsburgh, Pa. Daniel F. Whitcomb is the scenarist.

Albert Kaufman on Coast

Plans Early Production of First Holubar-Phillips Film in West

ALBERT KAUFMAN left New York last week for California. Mr. Kaufman expressed enthusiasm over the results of his short visit to New York and stated that he was not yet in a position to disclose his new plans but expected to do so within the next few weeks.

Immediately on his return to Hollywood, Mr. Kaufman plans to start shooting on his first Allen Holubar production, starring Dorothy Phillips, all the advance preparations for which were prepared under his supervision during the past month. Olga Scholl, author of the "Heart of Humanity" and "Right of Happiness," the two former Holubar-Phillips successes, has just finished the first story to be handled by Mr. Kaufman.

Agnes Ayres, now appearing in a Marshall Neilan Production for First National release, will soon be starred by Mr. Kaufman, who has just closed with a director of prominence to stage her first offering.

In addition to these units, Mr. Kaufman promises to announce the names of a new star and director with whom he expects to close arrangements during the next few days. Anthony Paul Kelley will also do a story for Mr. Kaufman's presentation.

Other plans are now underway which indicate that Mr Kaufman will soon have a large producing organization on the West Coast. In accordance with his recent alliance with Marshall Neilan and by arrangement with that producer, the advertising and publicity of Albert Kaufman Productions will be directed by Pete Smith in the Marshall Neilan New York office. A large national advertising and publicity campaign on all Kaufman stars, directors and productions is now being planned and will be put into execution in the near future, it is stated. At the large studio which Mr. Kaufman shares with Mr. Neilan at Hollywood, Edward O'Hara will be in charge of the repertorial publicity work of both organizations.

Mildred Harris Chaplin In Unusual Offering

Mildred Harris Chaplin's third First National production under the Louis B. Mayer banner will surpass all former efforts of the star, according to reports from the Mayer offices. Director John Stahl prepared all the details of the script, it is stated. Ramsey Wallace and Gareth Hughes have also assisted in the production. George Fisher, Winter Hall, Catherine Van Buren and Richard Headrick were engaged in Los Angeles to complete the cast.

The title is as yet unannounced. Unusual expenditures of time, money and effort have been made, it is said, to turn out a screen masterpiece. By the time the production is completed, the picture will have taken six months in the making, it is declared by the Mayer office.

New Method Speeds Up Serial Production

William Duncan is now making the final episodes of his new serial, "The Silent Avenger," out on the Coast. A new plan which Duncan perfected recently enables him to work on more than one episode at once, and within three weeks he will have completed the most expensive and what he regards as the most elaborate serial he has ever produced.

Since the picture was started, it has not been delayed one day in the course of filming; the camera has turned on every working day of each week. Disadvantages of weather were overcome; there was no waiting for locations or sets.

Hawaii Y.M.C.A. Wants Universal Picture

That the Americanization movement is far reaching in its scope is evident from the letter received by the Educational Department of Universal from the Y. M. C. A. of Hawaii. Information regarding the film "Is America Worth Saving" was sought. The Y. M. C. A. desires the use of the picture during the month of June. It will be shown in every public school in Honolulu, as well as the public parks and sugar plantations. The film is now on its way to the island.

HopeHamptonAcquires Van Loan Story

For her second production to follow "A Modern Salome," which is reported to be doing big business throughout the country on the Metro program, Hope Hampton has just bought a new story written by H. H. Van Loan, which is as yet unnamed. This gifted author, who has been writing for a number of the best known picture stars for several years now and whose latest screen story is "The Virgin of Stamboul," has turned out a scenario for Miss Hampton which he claims is by far the most worthwhile plot he has ever put on paper.

Louise Glaum Writes for Fan Magazines

Eugene V. Brewster, publisher of Motion Picture Magazine, Shadowland, The Magazine of the Arts, and Motion Picture Classic, announced in New York yesterday the acceptance by Louise Glaum, the screen star, of an editorial post on the Brewster publications offered the luminary during her recent sojourn in the eastern metropolis. Her monthly article will deal with life among the film folks on the Coast.

Nagle Will Play Leads For Famous Players

According to an announcement by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Conrad Nagle, young stage star and screen leading man, has just been engaged on a long term contract to play leading roles in Paramount Artcraft pictures produced at the Lasky studio. Mr. Nagle will begin work early next month.

Billie Burke to Make More for Paramount

Announcement was made yesterday by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, that Billie Burke has just signed a new contract for a series of Paramount-Artcraft pictures, by arrangement with Flo Ziegfeld, Jr. Miss Burke, whose latest picture, "Away Goes Prudence," will be released early in July, will begin work on the first of her new series in the near future. Mr. Lasky declined to disclose at this time the name or the nature of the popular Paramount star's first picture.

Seeks to Recover Five Missing Reels

The St Louis Film Board of Trade offers a reward of $25 for the arrest and conviction of H. E. Specker, who formerly operated motion picture theatres at Mattoon and at Neoga, Ill. Specker, the Film Board of Trade alleges, has failed to return five reels of film delivered to him at Mattoon. These reels cover the following subjects: "Knights of the Western Land" (2 reels); "Threads of Fate" (1 reel); "The Wrong Flat" (2 reels).

Cupid Hard at Work at Universal City

Following the recent news of the Priscilla Dean-Wheeler Oakman marriage, comes the word of other nuptials on the Coast. Jack Perrin and Josephine Hill, both Universal screen actors, were married recently and Hope Loring, of Universal's scenario department, and Louis Lighton, screen writer and author, followed suit

Edith Roberts in "Marama"

South Sea Islands Story, Directed by Norman Dawn; Jack Perrin Leads

A PICTURE of the South Sea Islands, the heroine of which is half-caste native girl, educated in an American seminary who returns to her wild customs and native dress, has just been put into production at Universal City, Cal. Edith Roberts will star in the new picture, which is to be called "Marama."

"Marama" was bought for Priscilla Dean. All plans were laid for its early production by that star. Almost at the last minute, however, a story was found that suited Miss Dean much better. It suited her more than her role of Sari in "The Virgin of Stamboul," according to Universal. Miss Roberts was the logical successor of Miss Dean in the volatile leading role of the projected South Sea picture. She is said to be especially suited for the part, not only because of her youth but also because of her excellent dancing. One of the features of the "Marama" will be a weird and beautiful religious dance with which the heroine signifies her return to the customs of her people.

Norman Dawn, who directed Miss Roberts in "Lasca" will supervise the making of the picture. Dawn at one time passed more than a year in the South Seas, gathering material for travelogues, and is entirely conversant with the costumes, customs and mannerisms of the island savages.

"Marama" was written by Ralph Stock, writer of many popular novels and magazine stories. Stock cruised for many months through the southern Pacific archipeligo in a small boat, it is stated, collecting material for his pen.

Miss Roberts will be supported by Jack Perrin. Others in the cast will be Noble Johnson, Richard Cummins, Arthur Jervis, Lucille Moulton and Lillian Phillips. William Howard will act as assistant director to Dawn.

Neilan's Latest Is Scoring

Exhibitors and New York Critics Pleased with "Don't Ever Marry"

MARSHALL NEILAN'S second independent production, "Don't Ever Marry," an adaptation from Edgar Franklin's popular story, is achieving another big success for the young producer according to newspaper critics and exhibitors.

A telegram received by J. R. Grainger of the Neilan offices in New York from J. H. Kunsky in Detroit, where the picture opened at the Adams Theatre, reads as follows: "Great picture going over big. Received most favorable notice from press and patrons. Should grow in popular favor as week progresses."

In New York at the Strand theatre, Jack Eaton reported exceptional business. The newspapers proclaimed the picture another big success. McElliott, of the Illustrated News said: "'Don't Ever Marry' is an exceptionally bright farce, brisk as they make 'em and adorned by two very pretty girls, Marjorie Daw and Betty Bouton."

Ben F. Holzman, of the Evening Mail, stated that the picture is not only amusing from start to finish, but the titles indicate that the producer realized the important part that reading matter plays in screen presentations.

The critics of the New York Globe, the New York Tribune and the Journal of Commerce, also reported favorably on the picture.

Returns From Convention

Day of Independent Exhibitor and Producer Coming, Says Official

JOE BRANDT, director general of the National Film Corporation and Eastern representative of the Marion H. Kohn Productions, has just returned to New York after attending another convention in Chicago.

"It's convention after convention, these days," said Mr. Brandt, "but while there seems to be no immediate effect from any of them, the truth is that each and every one is making more solid the foundation for the 'independents' in the motion picture industry. The independent producer and the independent exhibitor have really the same battle to fight, and these conventions are making them realize the inherent strength unionization of their efforts will develop.

"The fight in this industry is similar to that in any other business where a trust has temporarily assumed the upper hand. The exhibitors have to a certain exent been mere tools for the big fellows, but they are now on the verge of the awakening and this augurs well for a healthier business future for them.

"The numerous conventions are rapidly bringing to light the solution of the independent exhibitor-independent producer problem. We may very shortly see the day when the small independent producer with a worthy picture will be able to properly market it, and where the independent exhibitor will have no difficulty in booking only pictures which he wishes to. The open market day is almost here."

Hudson Bay Festival Held in Canada

One of the greatest celebrations ever held in Canada began this week with the observance of the two hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the incorporation of the Hudson's Bay Company. The first of the series of festivities were held in Winnipeg and lasted for three days, followed by similar ones in Calgary, Edmonton, Victoria and Vancouver.

A chief feature of the celebration was the showing of a motion picture record of the Hudson's Bay Territory made for the company by the Educational Films Corporation, of New York. Nearly 20,000 feet of these pictures were made by H. M. Wycoff, the camera man.

Paul Cazeneuve Begins Second Fox Picture

Paul Cazeneuve has begun the direction of his second picture for the William Fox Film Corporation. This new picture, "Her Honor the Mayor," was written by Arline Van Ness Hines and was formerly staged on Broadway. The star of the screen version is Eileen Percy. Denison Clift adapted the work, and he is said to have embodied the snappy dialogue of the original in clever sub-titles.

The cast includes Ramsey Wallace as leading man, Charles Force, William Fletcher and Edwin Booth Tilton. Tilton, it will be remembered, was recently placed under contract by this producer for a series of character roles in the Western studio productions.

Pathe Announces Recent Promotions

The following appointments have been announced by the Pathe Exchange office: R. S. Shrader, manager of the Indianapolis branch, as Central Western manager; F. B. Elliott as the Indianapolis branch manager; Miles F. Gibbons, manager of the Pittsburgh branch, as the Short Subjects sales manager; Frank C. Bonistall as manager of the Pittsburg branch. The Pathe statement declares that these promotions are made in accordance with the organization's policy to advance its employees as an award of loyalty and efficiency.

Vitagraph Story Wins Praise From Editor

After reading the synopsis of "Dollars and the Woman," the new Alice Joyce production, James R. Quirk, editor of Photoplay Magazine, stated that he regarded it as "one of the greatest present day themes."

The telegram to Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, read in part as follows: "It is a great domestic sermon that should show the way to happiness in these days when the living problem brings despair, misunderstanding and consequent unhappiness into thousands of homes."

"Dollars and the Woman" was written by Albert Payson Terhune and directed by George Terwilliger. Robert Gordon is Miss Joyce's leading man.

New York Critics Like DeMille's Latest

After seeing Cecil B. DeMille's latest Paramount Artcraft special, "Why Change Your Wife?" at the Criterion theatre, the verdict of the New York critics seems quite unanimously to have been, "DeMille has gone and done it again." As a matter of fact, those are the very words used by two of them in the course of their reviews of the picture which is packing audiences at every performance during its indefinite run at the remodelled house which has taken its place on Broadway as the third of the Riesenfeld directed motion picture palaces.

Compliment Rothacker on Color Work

Watterson R. Rothacker was the recipient of many compliments on the color work of "The Yellow Typhoon," which First Nationalers at the Convention viewed at a special showing at the Siegfeld Theatre.

First National Conventioners were the guests of Louis B. Mayer at the Rothacker Studio-Laboratories at a private showing of the third Mildred Harris Chaplin First National production, which is as yet unnamed. It was the consensus of opinion that this picture is the best ever created by Mrs. Chaplin, it is stated.

Christie Showing Real Action

Centering on Features and Two-Reelers at Present Time

With the recent studio improvements completed, and with the acquisition of its own electrical generating plant, the Christie Film Company's Hollywood studio has swung into its program of spring and summer activity indicated by the recent announcement that Christie would soon produce fewer and greater productions. Having terminated the production of all pictures not bearing the Christie name production is at present being centered on productions of feature length and two-reel comedies, with the customary Christie one-reel comedies also in progress.

Al Christie, who is supervising all of the comedies and special productions, is himself directing one of the new Christie two-reel comedies, a light farce featuring Bobby Vernon, Neal Burns, Teddy Sampson, Vera Steadman and Charlotte Merriam. On the completion of this feature comedy he will take a one-reel comedy company to Bear Valley to make one of the Christie comedy releases for early summer.

Another Christie two-reel comedy is also in progress, being directed by William Beaudine, who filmed the latest Christie two-reeler, "Petticoats and Pants." In this new comedy are Fay Tincher, Jimmie Harrison, Charlotte Merriam and Eddie Baker.

Having completed the cutting work on the Robertson-Cole feature, "A Smart Aleck," which features Charles "Chic" Sale, Director Scott Sidney is preparing to start work on another feature production, also to be released by Robertson-Cole, which is the first of a series of the famous Arsene Lupin stories by Maurice Leblanc which they have acquired. Wedgwood Nowell, signed by Robertson Cole to appear in the important role of Arsene Lupin, has arrived in Los Angeles to begin work shortly.

Two other directors, Frederic Sullivan and Allen Watt, are both engaged in producing Christie comedies, the first with Earl Rodney and Helen Darling, and the latter with Dorothy Devore and Eddie Barry.

The Christie Company has secured the services of C. E. Day, formerly in charge of the art work at the Hoover photographic studio in Los Angeles, who is collaborating with the Christie staff artist, E. G. Klein, to develop by still life photography many new art title effects which will shortly be seen on Christie made productions.

Christie's sixth director, Reggie Morris, is finishing under Al Christie's supervision the third of the famous series of "Bringing Up Father" comedies in two reels. In the comedy are featured Johnny Ray, Margaret Fit Roy and Laura LaPlante, who were seen in "Jiggs in Society," the first of the series, which has just played with great success the first run cities. That these comedies are going over with better success than was predicted is indicated in the bookings from the first run theatres, which have already played the first of the series and which in many cases have featured this two-reel comedy at the head of their programs.

It is expected that still further plans for feature productions will be announced shortly by the Christie company upon the return of C. H. Christie to Los Angeles. The general manager is now in the East in conference with leading independent distributors, and it is known that before his departure last week he secured an option on another huge tract of ground in the Hollywood section. This is in addition to the purchase of a choice section of property on Sunset Boulevard, announced several weeks ago.

Pickford Release Due June 27

"Suds" Produced with Unusual Attention to Details

Having established herself as the greatest exponent of child characters on the stage and screen, Mary Pickford will shortly be seen in "Suds," a photoplay of an entirely different nature to anything in which she has heretofore appeared, says United Artists. Hiram Abrams, of United Artists, has announced June 27th as the release date of Miss Pickford's second "Big Four" production.

The theme of "Suds" is based on Maude Adams' famous play, "'Op o' Me Thumb" which she presented for a long time at the Empire theatre in New York as well as on her triumphal tours of America; it is from the dual pen of Frederick Fenn and Richard Pryce, two brilliant young English authors. For several years Miss Pickford has had the character of Amanda Afflick in mind, it is stated, and has been waiting the opportunity to present it in the proper manner and with the proper settings.

Since the completion of "Pollyanna" in the latter part of 1919, Miss Pickford has been at work with her staff of assistants on "Suds." Over four months were spent in the adaptation of the story for the screen by several scenario writers in the photoplay profession, and the versatile star went over the entire story again and again, word for word, until in its typewritten form it was a photoplay gem, it is declared.

"Not until she was satisfied that the story was flawless would Miss Pickford begin rehearsals and production," declared the statement from the United Artists' offices. "In the meantime her technical staff had been at work on interior and exterior settings. Photographs of several streets of London slums were taken by Miss Pickford's English representatives and these were sent to the studio and exact reproductions were constructed in the huge lot adjoining her dressing room. Several other authorities on life and customs in the Soho district were also called in and the work was continued until the settings and scenes were pronounced perfect even to the most minor details.

"The photoplay colony as well as the city of Los Angeles was combed for people to appear in the crowded street scenes, and when everything was to her entire satisfaction Miss Pickford gave orders for the filming to start.

"An example of the care which America's Sweetheart lavished on the production of 'Suds' is shown in the fact that she had the entire country ransacked for the most woebegone and dilapidated looking horse obtainable to pull the laundry delivery wagon which is used in the story.

"And instead of using two cameras as she did in 'Pollyanna' and her other productions, Miss Pickford had three photographers constantly at work under the supervision of Charles Rosher, who is responsible for the splendid photography in all of her recent productions.

"Jack Dillon who so successfully directed several of Jack Pickford's productions, is director in charge of 'Suds,' and he, together with Waldemar Young, who wrote the scenario, have worked with Miss Pickford ever since she first contemplated the play for production."

"Ruth of the Rockies" a Ruth Roland Serial

"Ruth of the Rockies" is the title selected for the fifteen episode serial which Ruth Roland is now producing at the Astra studios for Pathe. The picture will be Miss Roland's seventh Pathe serial. The scenario by Gilson Willets, is a picturization of "Broadway Bab," written by Johnston McCulley.

Priscilla Dean in "The Virgin of Stamboul"

PREMIERE IN NEW YORK WAS AUSPICIOUS

THE premiere of "The Virgin of Stamboul" was at the Broadway theatre, New York, where the picture held up for a four weeks engagement. Unusual exploitation for the metropolis was given the production beginning some weeks before the opening with much publicity that received nation wide attention.

In strict secrecy, outside the producers private office, a publicity stunt of exceptional value was planned and carried out.

This campaign opened with the planting of a "Turk" with his suite in New York from whom came a story that he was in America in search of a girl of his country who had escaped from a Turkish harem.

The story was well told, the atmosphere of realism to make the tale plausible was provided, and all the New York newspapers carried articles on the news pages for several days concerning the stranger and his quest. After the release of the picture and the subsequent information was divulged that it was a press agent's story, the campaign was continued with other forms of publicity. Bill boards in all parts of the city were used freely, the newspapers carried displays extolling the merits of the production and electric signs were utilized. When the feature opened at the Broadway all New York had heard something about it.

Synopsis of "The Virgin of Stamboul

SARI is a beautiful beggar girl in the streets of Stamboul. Captain Pemberton, a dashing young American soldier of fortune, in command of the famous Black Horse Troop, falls in love with her. At the same time, Achmet Hamid, a powerful Sheik of the desert, plans to kill a young American in love with his favorite wife. Following him to the Mosque, he stabs him in the back, but is seen by Sari. Realizing this fact, the Sheik plans to marry her to protect himself. Pemberton learns of the marriage plot and is able to marry Sari himself by proxy under the Turkish law. Discovering the trick, the Sheik kidnaps them both and immures them in his desert home. Sari escapes and brings the Black Horse Troop to the rescue in time to see Pemberton victor over the Sheik in a tremendous struggle.

AUDUBON THEATRE GIVES FEATURE GOOD EXPLOITATION

ANOTHER notable New York engagement was at the Audubon theatre, and again the feature of the showing was the exploitation.

The first move to put over "The Virgin of Stamboul" at the Audubon was to make the most of the highly artistic and original press matter furnished. An original herald in red and white was adopted as the most expressive of Turkey. Illustrations were used and the reading matter carefully prepared. Care was taken to see that every known patron of the theatre received one of these heralds.

The big double lobby of the theatre with entrances on two streets was first decorated in bright flowers expressive of the luxury of the Ottoman Empire. Enormous oil paintings from "stills" from the production were then placed at points of vantage and on golden easels. Three hundred red balloon bubbles were hung on invisible threads, and arches of festooning were draped from wall to wall over the paintings and from each festooned arch was hung a golden crescent cut-out. These crescents were five feet from tip to tip. In one lobby they were hung as a crescent rides in the sky and in the other they were hung points downward In both lobbies they formed arches. On each crescent was printed in showy, artistic lettering the name of the attraction and the date. Sixteen of these crescents were used. The hundreds of lights in the lobbies were equipped with red bulbs, which flashed glistening red rays on the gold of the enormous crescents, the red of the balloons and the pink and white of the flowers.

To carry the Oriental idea further Miss Virginia Carr, an actress from the William Fox studios, was engaged to portray the character of the virgin. She wore a red, jeweled Oriental costume of flashing brilliance. A flowing red veil partly hid her features. Around her darkened tresses was a band of gilded metal heavily jewelled and property beads and jewels were used liberally from the top of her head to the turned up tips of her Turk'sh slippers. She greeted all patrons of the house at the auditorium entrance and handed out cards detailing the merits of the production.

The Oriental idea was carried thru from the street to the portal, and then it was carried on the night nun the auditorium by seven creole ushers employed by the Audubon and noted for their attractive appearance were gotbed in Turkish turbans which also wore during the whole performances and for several days before the opening date on "The Virgin of Stamboul." These jewelled, plumed and beaded turbans bobbed about as the ushers went about their work and attracted widespread attention. Trailers, slides, newspaper ads and the usual methods of impressing the public were used widely, yet judiciously. The effect was easily noted in the box office.

SALT LAKE HOUSE STAGES NOVEL CAMPAIGN

A WESTERN theatre, the Kinema of Salt Lake City, is another theatre to exploit the picture in royal fashion. Above is a view of the special lobby built for the occasion. William Cutts, the manager of the Kinema, followed the plan used in New York, but with variations. The various accounts of the news story carried by the papers before the New York opening were run in the Salt Lake papers. Mr. Cutts planted a "Turkish girl" at a leading Salt Lake hotel and secured numberless news stories prior to the time the picture opened. More publicity was secured by sending a masked feminine horseback rider about the city during the engagement. In a local store window a "Turk" sat and smoked his pipe. This last stunt attracted great attention, every passerby stopping to view the strange sight. Newspaper space for this showing was used freely. One of Mr. Cutt's displays is to be produced on this page.

CANADIAN CITY CAMPAIGN SUCCESSFUL

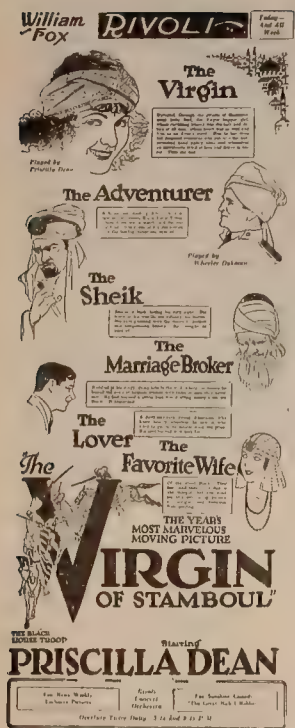
THE New Grand theatre of Montreal, Canada, was one of the first theatre in the Dominion to play the picture. The New Grand exploitation was based on newspaper display and the use of such advertising as 24 sheet stands, window card and other similar material of the more orthodox kind. Especially effective were the newspaper displays which the New Grand planned for the showing. Space 4 inches deep by five columns wide were purchased, all of which played up the Oriental atmosphere, the star and the title of the picture. Cuts of the various characters were used in the displays as will be features of this campaign was noted by the illustrations on this page.

DENVER ENGAGEMENT COMPLETE SUCCESS

THE Rivoli theatre of Denver is also another house which has given "The Virgin of Stamboul" a big advertising campaign and boosted it's box office records by reason thereof.

Newspaper displays in half page and quarter page size were purchased and carefully prepared reading matter was run in the newspaper both prior to and during the engagement. The Rivoli exploitation campaign made much of the unique characters.

CHICAGO PAPER INAUGURATES CONTEST



IN Chicago an exploitation campaign of unusual note was successfully carried out. Among the beauty contest—effected with the Chicago Herald and Examiner in which 500 entrants were secured. The Herald Examiner gave the contest a lot of publicity, running a six-column cut of the contestants with a head which contained the title of the production. A special performance of the picture was given to the contestants at the Playhouse which also was mentioned by the paper.

Other good advertising of an unusual nature was put over successfully in the Windy City. A girl dressed as an Arabian rushed down one of the main streets and striking a posture of extreme supplication before a policeman, cried: "Save me! Save me! The Turks are after me!" The policeman took the girl to the police station where she told an incoherent story until the whole police force were beginning to think she was out of her mind. Later she admitted that she was employed as an usher at the Playhouse. She was finally taken to a hospital and her case marked "nervous breakdown." All this with a picture of the girl in two column, ten-inch size, was run on one of the news pages of the Herald-Examiner.

ST. LOUIS FOLLOWS LEAD OF OTHER CITIES

BEFORE the opening of the engagement of the feature at the New Grand Central theatre, St. Louis, a special showing was held for the press, exhibitors, exchange managers, etc., resulting in plenty of space from all the St. Louis papers and a special two-column story by Florence Canby in the Inquirer, that included a banner across the page that read, "Priscilla Dean, a Knockout in 'The Virgin of Stamboul.'"

The New Grand Central management was aggressive with its publicity matter for the showing beginning immediately after the special performance which was about two weeks before the opening date. The city was placarded with signs, posters and banners announcing the booking and the papers carried daily readers and display ads.

SUPERBA, LOS ANGELES, DOES GOOD ADVERTISING

THE Superba theatre of Los Angeles was another theatre where the newspaper display was used to advantage. Specially drawn ads. in big space were used. All of these brought the spectacular part of the production well to the fore besides playing up the star and the title.

OTHER THEATRES PLAY PICTURE TO BIG BUSINESS

THE Washington theatre, Detroit, after an advance campaign of publicity which embraced all the orthodox methods besides many novelties played the picture a week and regretted that the policy of the house was a week's run for the reason that the picture showed every indication of being worthy of an indefinite run. Manager McDonald made a special effort with his newspaper advertising, his ads., boosting the picture strongly and dwelling particularly on the magnificent spectacle presented, the novel story and the popularity of the star.

A. L. Rule, manager of the Chatterton theatre, in Bloomington, Ill., was one of the first of the theatres in the smaller cities to obtain a booking. Encouraged by the reports of the way the public was responding to intensive advertising campaigns in the big centers, Mr. Rule went the limit with his exploitation and left no stone unturned. He built a lobby display carrying out the Oriental idea as have other theatres, got space in a number of prominent store windows and plastered his city with paper.

Three Favorite Players Now With Robertson-Cole

Otis Skinner, Broadway stage favorite, who will star in an adaptation of his greatest success, "Kismet," under the Robertson-Cole banner

Ethel Barrymore, who has electrified Broadway this season in her stage play, "Declasse" who returns to the screen as a Robertson Cole star

Pauline Frédcrick, popular on both stage and screen, who is now a Robertson-Cole asset

Carpentier Picture Titled

"THE Wonder Man" is the title which Robertson-Cole has selected for the Georges Carpentier super-special which will be given the public through re-release on May 30th, a picture starring a famed world figure and an actor destined not only to be a dramatic sensation, but the greatest winner of the year for the enterprising exhibitor.

The title "The Wonder Man" is only made public as the picture is being completed. But in reality it was selected months ago when Carpentier was signed abroad by Robertson-Cole, following that exciting period when half a dozen leading companies were bidding for his services on the screen. It was a case where a photoplay was written around a man's personality, thus assuring what might be termed a good literary fit, rather than to search the market for a story which would have to be more or less a misfit for the reason that there is but one Georges Carpentier.

Patently the thing to do was to find out just what sort of a story Carpentier should have, and give it to him. In reviewing the baffling paradoxes which are the most impressive characteristics of the man, the title, "The Wonder Man" came up as the most logical name which could be given a picture written with the famous Frenchman as its leading figure.

As gentle as a woman in manner and appearance, this fair-haired boy has an arm and fist which are known the world over and a method of fighting which makes him comparable only to the tiger. Having won fame first in the prize-ring, an institution at times condemned by the more discriminating, and charged with low and brutal ideals, Carpentier is preeminently a gentleman. Although he has won the boxing championship of Europe in a battle which was one of the most sensational ever fought, and in which he stood forth as one of the most hardest fighters who ever entered the squared ring, Carpentier is a student of the arts—even more than that he is himself an artist.

Those who sat about the ring in the Solax Studio, Fort Lee, on a recent evening and saw the handsome young Frenchman enter the ring with Robert Barrat, who plays opposite him in "The Wonder Man" felt an advance tingle of the thrill which is to be national in a few short weeks. For, going there to catch a glimpse of a famous prize fighter, they saw an actor. They gasped more at the perfection with which the man took his part than at the marvelous manner in which he handled himself in the ring from a fistic standpoint. Going there they had carried some vision of a vast human hulk of a man who would act awkwardly, perhaps even stupidly, make the passes which the director would shout at him.

Instead, they saw an actor, consummate and polished, a man who wielded the wonderful strength and skill which are his entirely to the ends of the drama. Not even the voice of the director, for the most part, was needed to warn Carpentier that he must restrain himself, that he must appear afraid, dazed, "groggy," nervous, and distraught, as the story called for it, and that never once must he give a hint of his powers until the closing round where he administers in quick succession the two blows which fell his antagonist.

With all his position as champion pugilist of Europe, one might suppose that Carpentier, while in this country, would appear mostly in the company with American sporting men, and fistic "fans." Such is not the case. While Carpentier has in no wise slighted this element, he has shown his marvelous diversity of interest and ability by meeting persons of all walks of life, many of them intellectuals, and those concerned in the arts. Writers, painters, sculpters, ministers, priests, politicians he has met and through his interpreter, and, by means of his own English which rapidly is improving through his diligent study, talked with them.

Another point on which Carpentier is a puzzle is in his domestic life. With the girls of France—and for that matter all allied countries—admiring him by the thousands, he chose no famous daughter, or no far-famed beauty, such as the stage or the studio would have given him. On the other hand he wedded a "back home girl," one he had known all his life, a girl he loved after the wholesome fashion of a boy, and a young man. She was his pal. She is his wife. How many men raised to the heights which Georges Carpentier has achieved would pass up the most famous beauties of the world's greatest cities to seek out the simple village girl he loved as a boy? The soldier, boxer, sportsman gives her all the attention any wife could ask. He is delightfully old-fashioned in that he always is seen with her, no matter what invitations he may receive to go in distinguished company.

It was this startling array of contrasts which led Robertson-Cole to name the forthcoming American society drama, in which Carpentier is to be the leading character, "The Wonder Man." Carpentier is a wonder. But his appearance on the screen will be far from a matter of speculation and uncertainty to the exhibitor. Even the organization which contracted with the famous Frenchman for the picture, and which will distribute it, at times has been surprised at the tremendous public interest in the man—an interest which is bound to be reflected at the box office.

The units which comprise the Robertson-Cole selling force were quick to recognize the strength of "The Wonder Man" as a selling title, and, as soon as it was made known in the branches, nearly every manager sent in to A. S. Kirkpatrick, vice-president and general manager of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation an utterance in praise of the selection. Most of them believed that the title had been picked merely for its selling force, so strong did they estimate it. Merely to call attention to how closely it fits the man was the statement issued that this title was picked even ahead of the story, as the one and only title not only for Carpentier, but for his picture.

Robertson-Cole Star on Tour

THE Georges Carpentier "million dollar production" will be completed this week so far as the actual photography is concerned. "The Idol of France" finished his last screen scene on Sunday, May 2, in time to start on his tour of the country and this week the other members of the company are making the final scenes.

The widespread announcement that Carpentier is to tour the country at the rate of $2,000 per day has made exhibitors put on their thinking caps and they are calculating how much more the game Frenchman will be worth to them in pictures where he will have a greater opportunity to show his versatility in an hour or more on the screen as against a few moments of "personal appearance." It is believed, too, that the personal appearance of Carpentier will increase his value in the cities where he appears when the picture is shown. He is such a lovable character and such a manly man that those who see him personally will want to see him again and again and inasmuch as the picture shows him from every angle it will prove, in the estimation of many exhibitors, to be the greater attraction.

It is certain that no motion picture actor or pugilist has ever been so favored by the public than the French hero of the ring and the air. One reason for his popularity was given tersely by a well known satirist recently when he said:

"Carpentier is the type of man that every man would like to be, but never is."

Despite the satire, it is a very good reflex on mankind that man is prepared to applaud the model of his thoughts.

The enthusiasm of women over Carpentier was again illustrated on the occasion of the direction of the big fight scene in the society drama. Invitations were extended to the principal sport enthusiasts of New York and New Jersey to be present and they responded in such numbers that the Solax Studio was positively jammed with men. The invitations had been given for "gentlemen only," but many women, intent on seeing the man who is the rage of two continents, managed to find their way to the studio and to secure accommodations for themselves in the galleries out of the range of the cameras. Most of these ladies, all of whom were dressed in the height of fashion, confessed that they had never attended a boxing exhibition before in their lives but they admitted that Georges Carpentier was the magnet that drew them, uninvited, to the studio. They expressed themselves delighted with all that they had seen and there were many among them who asked for the privilege of being introduced to the young Apollo. However, all such introductions were forbidden as there was not a person among the 1,500 in the studio who did not want the same thing.

The newspaper reports on the fight (in which Robert Barrat, the "heavy" of the production, was Carpentier's opponent) were all very complimentary to the star and the newspaper writers went out of their way to express their approval of Carpenter's ability as an actor. It was an eye-opener to all present.

Robertson-Cole exchanges are being besieged by exhibitors owing to the wealth of publicity that Carpentier has received. The keenest exhibitors in the country are recognizing the fact that Carpentier threatens to be the best box office attraction ever offered to them. His popularity is assured and his ability will make him a permanent star in the motion picture firmament.

Maurice Tourneur Has New Actress

According to Maurice Tourneur, a new luminary will soon burst forth on the screen. He asserts that she is unknown at present; that he discovered her by strange accident and that she is richly endowed with the requirements that lend to the general make-up of the ideal screen artist.

Robertson-Cole Seek Director for New Star

NOW that Pauline Frederick has been signed by Robertson-Cole, and the story of her first super-production selected, attention is being given the matter of choosing for her a director competent to impart to the initial picture the desired distinction.

No detail is to be overlooked either in the choice of stories, supporting cast, or directors, while the time and cost of the new Robertson-Cole-Frederick pictures both are to be increased over those which Miss Frederick made in the past.

Miss Frederick goes to work in the West immediately on a story the name and nature of which is carefully guarded. While no specifications are given, it may be predicted that this new scenario will not lack the story elements which with her wonderful emotional acting helped make Miss Frederick so popular from an exhibitor's standpoint.

"The Bottom of the World" Scores : : :

"ALL that was predicted for 'The Bottom of the World,' the Sir Ernest Shackleton Antarctic Expedition picture, by the exhibitors, scientists, travellers, and reviewers, who were privileged to preview it and by virtue of the wide interest in the picture when it was shown in England, has come true. Broadway has taken 'The Bottom of the World' to its heart, which is a fact of great significance when one remembers that the film is actual history and not a flight of fancy."

Such is the opinion registered by the Robertson-Cole Company after noting the reception, accorded to "The Bottom of the World" by the audiences that have viewed the picture at the Rivoli during the present week. "Aside from the warmth with which the New York show-world has greeted the Shackleton picture, the scientific world in the metropolis is much interested," continues the statement from the Robertson-Cole offices. "This is evidenced in the showing of the picture at the American Museum of Natural History, where it was viewed by scores of savants concerned in the various sciences. Through the courtesy of Robertson-Cole, which is distributing the film, it was given a showing at the museum before members of the scientific staff, and their guests."

Remarkable attention was given the Shackleton picture in connection with its Broadway showing from the first. When it was shown to Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, one of the country's foremost exhibitors, and managing director both of the Rialto and Rivoli Theatres, he did not wait for a salesman to approach him on the matter of booking the picture, but personally ordered it at once from the New York exchange. He saw in its humanly interesting story, as well as its wide scientific interest the greatest picture of its kind ever made. The New York papers more than backed up his judgment.

Said the Times, a paper which does not become enthusiastic without good reason:

"'The Bottom of the World' is the title given to the motion picture record of Sir Ernest Shackleton's last Antarctic expedition at the Rivoli this week. It is the real feature of the program, by virtue of its ability to entertain and, thank Hugo Riesenfeld or whoever is responsible, by the emphasis placed upon it in advertisements of the bill. Instead of jogging along in the well-worn rut and ranking it merely as a filler because it lacked the conventional hero-heroine-villain device, Dr. Riesenfeld apparently realized that he had something genuinely dramatic and interesting in his possession and ventured to announce it as his chief attraction of the week.

"With the increased and increasing number of motion picture theatres on Broadway, is it too much to hope that some manager, free to do so, will vary the regular run of so-called, but often miscalled, dramatic pictures by devoting the better part of his program to such a work as 'The Bottom of the World' whenever he can get it? But in the meantime, there is reason to be grateful to Dr. Riesenfeld for as much as he has done at the Rivoli this week.

"The picture is a photographic record of the explorer's trip. First there are interesting scenes on board Shackleton's ship, The Endurance, which are followed shortly by the first glimpses of icebergs. There are some excellent pictures of seals, and a number of views of sea and ice expanse are of majestic beauty. Perhaps the most fascinating part of the film is that showing the Endurance breaking her way through a field of ice and finally brought to a standstill in it. There are other scenes of the activities of the explorers."

The Sun, another of the New York papers which prides itself in clinging to facts, says:

"At the Rivoli the most pulsating feature is not the dramatic picture" (it names one of the most advertised productions of one of the greatest companies). "The real sensation is 'The Bottom of the World,' which is a film log of Sir Ernest Shackleton's raid on the South Pole. The pictures of the ice pack crumpling up his ship and of seals one of them scratching his tummy- are graphic and shivery enough to make one keep one's overcoat on in the house."

No daily paper keeps more closely in touch with Broadway than the Evening Telegram. Commenting on "The Bottom of the World" this paper said. "The film showing Sir Ernest Shackleton in search of the South Pole is a fascinating picture."

The Globe goes much stronger, seeing the Shackleton picture blazing the way toward better things for the industry. It says:

"'The Bottom of the World' at the Rivoli this week proves again that a travel scenic can be far more dramatic and thrilling than most picture plays with a plot. It has caught on the screen Sir Ernest Shackleton's valiant race for the South Pole in the good ship called Endurance, which did not entirely justify her name. The grim story is told against a background of heavy snow and wind and grotesque ice shapes. There are the dogs, the 'huskies,' mostly pups, for comedy relief. It leads the explorers up to the moment when the Endurance is caught between two vast wedges—ice bound—'as silent as a painted ship upon a painted ocean.'

"After a picture like this one, you forget about the cheapness, the vulgarity, the absurdity of most scenes now shown on the screen. You feel a renewed assurance of the real purpose and future of what are now known as 'the movies'."

Without qualification, the Evening Sun, one of the greatest newspapers in America in appreciation of real art, says:

"'The Bottom of the World' the filmed record of Sir Ernest Shackleton's trip to the South Pole, is one of the most beautiful and thrilling scenic pictures ever presented in New York."

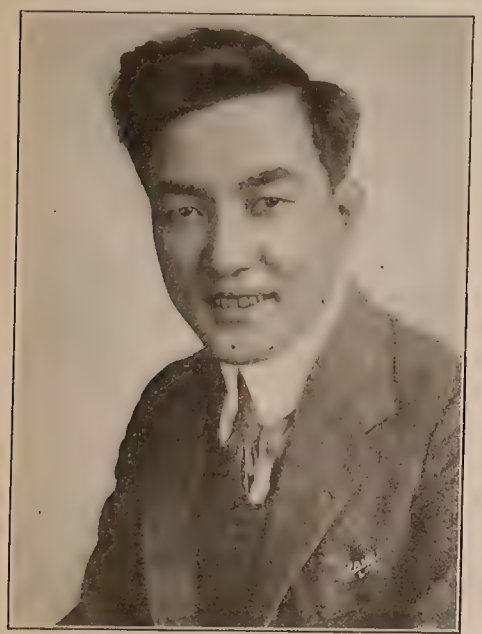
The Evening Post, the old conservative paper of a small and very blue-blooded circulation, praised as follows:

"'The Bottom of the World', a record of the voyage of Sir Ernest Shackleton in the Antarctic Ocean, was shown yesterday at the Rivoli Theatre. The pictures of seals and penguins at play, the slow motion films of the crushing of the Endurance by the ice, and the hardships of the dog sledge trip home, were remarkably effective."

Following the showing at the American Museum of Natural History, George H. Sherwood, assistant secretary of the museum, said: "The Shackleton picture shows clearly many points of interest to the students who heretofore mainly depended upon books and verbal pictures of the almost unknown regions. 'The Bottom of the World' is indeed in all respects a most wonderful picture and has aroused my interest to such an extent that I hope to obtain a print for our library. The Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation is to be commended."

Dr. F. A. Lucas, Director of the Museum, was unwonted in his praise for the picture and expressed his wonderment at the daring and heroic endeavors of Shackleton's party. He was greatly impressed by the fact that even though Shackleton's home was being crushed by ice, the photographer calmly ground his camera.

The attention which New York is paying to "The Bottom of the World" is not the only flattering indication of its power as an attraction. Perhaps the factor most interesting to the exhibitor seeking compelling pictures lies in the enthusiasm with which other men in his own business have greeted the Shackleton film. Besides Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, who booked it first in New York, others have followed eagerly.



Among those are Marcus Loew, who controls the largest theatre circuit in the country, centering around New York city. The Shackleton picture will be shown in all the Loew houses, having been picked by the discriminating, and

Robertson-Cole Sums Up Activities : :

ROBERTSON-COLE in a recent statement points with pride to its present prosperous condition and position of prestige among motion-picture concerns as a vindication of its policies and a sign that its stars and attractions have met with the fullest approval of the exhibitor and motion-picture patrons. Some current activities of the organization are recounted in detail, and considerable space is devoted to the merits of its screen luminaries and their productions. The Robertson-Cole statement is submitted in full:

"Robertson-Cole, which lists in its greatest announcement a startling aggregation of stars and attractions, considering the short life of this distributing organization, owes its success to the fundamental principle of co-operation with the exhibitor. The company's rapid rise is due directly to its concern in the prosperity of the theatre manager. For Robertson-Cole strives at all times to guarantee the financial advancement of the man who buys its pictures, knowing that by an unfailing principle its own interests will thereby automatically be served.

"Greater than its pride in the appearance on paper of the attractions which it is announcing, is Robertson-Cole's confidence in the actual box office value of every unit of its list. It has held constantly in mind, while binding by contract the stars and attractions herein mentioned, the thought that each must be compelling when given the supreme test of the public's choice. In line with this is the clause of rejection which protects the company in its relations with its producing allies.

"This clause is a provision to the effect that each and every picture must rise to the level set by the rigid requirements which are known as the Robertson-Cole standard. The operation of this clause is of utmost interest to the exhibitor as it represents to him a stern barrier raised against uncertain and inferior attractions, the booking of which is bound to mean disaster. Not only is the clause of rejection effective against pictures which are made by producing allies, but those which are made by independent producers and bought in the open market.

"THIS basic truth, holding the secret of its steady advancement, is being presented by Robertson-Cole to the exhibitor not only through the merit of the pictures it releases, but through the excellence of its service. Managers and salesmen in the twenty-five branches are under instructions from the Robertson-Cole executive offices to make the service and attention given the exhibitor down to the smallest detail, as nearly perfect as is humanly possible. Every effort is being made to convince the theatre manager who buys pictures that Robertson-Cole is operating its business primarily for his benefit, and that it considers his success its own.

"Nor has this propaganda, carefully sown and diligently backed up, been in vain. Daily more inquiries and bookings are flowing into the Robertson-Cole executive offices as a faithful index of the growing confidence and trust which exhibitors everywhere are coming to place in the name of Robertson-Cole and its productions. A word-of-mouth advertising is going up and down the nation to the effect that here is a company which is not in the business to 'clean up' this year on mediocre productions, but which expects to remain year after year, presenting always worthwhile pictures, and building month by month a confidence among exhibitors which shall place Robertson-Cole with the older, more substantial firms of all lines which owe their continuous success to fair dealing and honesty of purpose.

"The foundation of Robertson-Cole on this latter phrase, 'Honesty of Purpose,' is not a haphazard choice. It is the actual word of R. S. Cole, as he enunciated it at the convention of Robertson-Cole, at Hotel Astor, to the selling force of the distributing company a few weeks ago.

"At this time, Mr. Cole said: 'I wish to instill in your minds the one thought as to our business. It may be summed up in three words, 'honesty of purpose.' We insist on your commanding the respect of every exhibitor with whom you do business, whether he is paying $2,000 for the use of one of our productions, or paying only $5.00. We want every employee to realize that we will not tolerate methods which might be considered by an exhibitor as 'putting something over.' You must be fair and honorable in your business dealings with every one you come in contact with. That, in brief, is the very foundation of Robertson-Cole.

"BESIDES the rapid growth of its organization, its swiftly increasing prestige in the industry, and the worth of its stars and productions, which has come to be universally acknowledged, Robertson-Cole has another and even more convincing claim to permanence. This is its home office building now under course of construction at the corner of Seventh Avenue and Forty-eighth Street, New York City, in the heart of the film administrative world. In a day when building material is sky-high and labor the same, Robertson-Cole feels the need of its own quarters to the point that it has purchased ground, and launched upon the project of building its own home.

"The new building will be 'by, for and of' Robertson-Cole. Robertson-Cole is building it, will own, occupy and control it. Fireproof throughout, it will be 12 stories in height, with entrances from both streets, and freight and passenger service elevators. The building will be complete and ready for occupancy by November 1st.

"There will be three theatres on the roof. These will be utilized for the showing of film to press representatives, foreign buyers and various persons interested in Robertson-Cole pictures. The best possible equipment will be installed in these theatres, including six standard machines. Three operators will constantly be on duty to project pictures. This will treble the present facilities of Robertson-Cole for the screening of pictures.

"As a most unusual feature of these three theatres, on the top floor of the building, there will be installed a suitable organ. This will enable the company to give special exhibitions at various times to which guests will be invited, as well as to screen a picture, with musical accompaniment, so obtaining the exact effect of a regular theatre showing.

"Probably the most unusual and progressive feature which is contemplated is the department which will entertain exhibitors from all parts of the world. Irrespective of whether or not the exhibitor shows Robertson-Cole productions, or is in the market for any pictures, he will be welcome to that part of the building which will be set aside for visiting exhibitors. Here he will find the city's best reference library on motion pictures and other subjects and here also he will find free stenographic service.

"Starting within a few weeks and continuing during the season of 1920-21, the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation will put in the field only pictures which are qualified to be known as 'specials.' Stars are being contracted with on the understanding that they are only to make a limited number of pictures each year, such pictures as will stand up with the best which are being made, and win consistently at the box office.

"Robertson-Cole believes that the film industry up to the present has been dominated too much by greed for profit, which lead to the hasty making and release of pictures which could not assure a continued income or a good reputation to the releasing company. This is the thought back of its plans always to give the exhibitor a production which he can show at a profit, and it plans not only to make sure of a good picture but to accompany it with such exploitation and merchandising facilities as are in keeping.

"TO appear in these special productions, Robertson-Cole has signed a number of stars whose names have definite and undisputed box office value. Some are new, and some have been appearing in Robertson-Cole pictures. But all are alike in one respect. They command the instant and consistent attention of the exhibitor, for he knows that they have made him money, and will continue to do so. This sort of star Robertson-Cole always is seeking. This is the test of a star from the Robertson-Cole viewpoint.

"A typical star, selected by this method, and pledged to appear in pictures which shall be profitable attractions for the exhibitor is one of the newest Robertson-Cole acquisitions, Pauline Frederick. Miss Frederick is conceded one of the biggest favorites with the motion picture public, and her pictures are exhibited in the largest first run theatres throughout the country as fast as they are released. In productions with vigorous stories of modern American life, always with strong love interest, and not infrequently tinged with a mystery motif, Miss Frederick is scoring month after month. Perhaps the most striking quality of her appeal is the consistency with which she has been a winner.

"Never artificially advanced by exaggerated advertising campaigns, her success is based on her own good work, and has been growing better, and of wider, and of more compelling nature with each Broadway and national success. Miss Frederick combines that rare trinity: great emotional acting ability, charm of person, and a deep sincerity, with a happiness and fervor which have made her a world star, eagerly sought after in every community.

"Miss Frederick appeared in musical comedy for a number of years. Most of her appearances were in 'The Princess of Kensington,' 'It Happened in Nordland,' 'The Little Gray Lady,' 'The Girl in White,' and in several other musical successes which played on Broadway and toured the country.

"With William Gillette she was leading woman to 'Sampson.' Later she had the most prominent feminine role in the famous Biblical drama, 'Joseph and His Brethren.' This play had a long New York run and was seen in all the large cities of the country, establishing Miss Frederick as one of the best actresses of her class in the world. It so firmly fixed her in the dramatic world that important producers began to bid for her services on the screen. Miss Frederick's dramatic abilities were even better adapted to the screen than to the speaking stage, and from the first her success was complete.

"With several of the leading companies in the field, Miss Frederick starred in successes which won her an instant and consistent following. Within the last three or four years she has been recognized generally as one of the most regular box office winners in the motion picture world.

"Mr. Sale's screen tests as already seen by Robertson-Cole are excruciatingly funny and the prediction is made that his first picture will at once place him among the leaders in his particular field.

"The new laurels which have been won this past season by Ethel Barrymore in 'Declasse,' her dramatic triumph, which has been seen by thousands during the run now in its eighth month at the Empire theatre, New York City, will be one more reason why exhibitors will be interested in 'The Super-Woman,' which is being made with Miss Barrymore as star for release by Robertson-Cole. 'The Super-Woman' is a dramatic piece particularly suited to Miss Barrymore's talents, and one which will be an important contribution to the year's successes.

"'The Super-Woman' is being filmed with great care and at an expense which will make it one of the finest pictures of the year. It contains a part which fits its star eminently and offers a dramatic situation which is comparable to the strongest in which she has ever appeared. Mr. Barrymore comes of a famous family of actors which stands near the pinnacle of the American theatrical world. The use of her name as a factor to conjunct with and to this great drawing power will be added an intrinsic merit which will put the attraction across big."

"ROBERTSON COLE in presenting on the screen, 'So Long Letty,' the famous Morosco stage success which will be picturized by the Christie Film Company, the celebrated producers of picture in a lighter vein, will be giving the exhibitor and the public one of the most certain attractions in years. In fact, Robertson Cole goes so far as to style this picture the biggest production to which it thus far put its name. Aside from the merit of the picture, which are surpassing, there has been issued the most pretentious and complete press book ever put out by the exploitation department of Robertson Cole, to aid the exhibitor in making this production a winner at the box office.

"'The Fortune Teller,' gives Miss Rambeau a role which suits her emotional powers exactly. She is seen as the loving wife of a cold, exacting scientist, who turns her off after a harmless escapade in which she was not at fault. She is denied the custody of her baby son, whom she loves with all a mother's heart. Years later she comes across the son struggling against handicaps, having spent his boyhood without the helping hand of a mother.

"In mentioning 'The Fortune Teller' it would not be fair to overlook another Robertson Cole special release of current date. This is 'The White Dove' with H. B. Warner as its star.

"Exhibitors in all parts of the United States are finding 'The White Dove' a feature of great attractive power because of the humanity of its appeal and its merits as a dramatic spectacle. It is founded on the novel of the same name by William J. Locke, and in it H. B. Warner does the best work of his career.

"'The Bottom of the World,' the picturized version of Sir Ernest Shackleton's famous expedition into the Antarctic regions has been released by Robertson-Cole as the season's most successful travel and exploration picture. After a wide success in England, the South Polar pictures promised to even surpass in the United States the marked popularity which it has enjoyed in the United Kingdom.

"It traces in minute detail the trip which Sir Ernest Shackleton and his followers in their ship, 'The Endurance' made from South America into the most remote parts of the South Polar circle, showing a wonderful wealth of detail including animal life, studies of the ice and snow and dozens of humanly interesting adventures which were the lot of the Shackleton party.

"In closing there is just a word to say, as a final thought for the exhibitor Robertson-Cole will have more announcements. This is only a beginning, the result of a scant year's work, and a first year in the motion picture industry, at that. Before the fall season this rapidly-moving company may have among its other announcements one which will surpass any of those herein set forth."

"IN presenting Marjorie Rambeau as the star of 'The Fortune Teller,' the Albert Capellani masterpiece to be released by Robertson-Cole, the distributing organization knows that it is placing within reach of the exhibitor one of the greatest attractions in year. In fact, Robertson-Cole goes so far as to style this picture the biggest production to which it thus far put its name. Aside from the merit of the picture, which are surpassing, there has been issued the most pretentious and complete press book ever put out by the exploitation department of Robertson-Cole, to aid the exhibitor in making this production a winner at the box office.

"Dustin Farnum is another great star whose drawing power was realized by Robertson-Cole when it obtained his services for a limited number of pictures to be laid in the great open. Notable as has been Mr. Farnum's work on the screen in the past, the new special pictures for which he is now signed will eclipse them all.

"In closing a contract with Dustin Farnum for exclusive screen appearances, Robertson-Cole is obtaining the productions of a star with a remarkable dramatic record as a leading figure in plays and photoplays of the great open. Mr. Farnum's contract conforms with those which have been closed with other stars as to a limitation of the productions to be made annually.

"According to present plans only four Farnum pictures will be made a year to allow for extraordinary care and perfect work. The first production which Mr. Farnum will make for Robertson-Cole is to be called 'Big Happiness.'

"Mr. Farnum's stage career before he went on the screen was a long and distinguished one. 'The Virginian,' a famous play of the open country, was his first starring vehicle. Such was the wide success he won in this picture that he was picked as star successively for 'The Ranger,' 'The Squaw Man,' 'Cameo Kirby' and 'The Littlest Rebel,' all dramas with bold backgrounds and rugged themes.

"Sessue Hayakawa, the noted dramatic star whose pictures are magnets of known power in the exhibitors' world, has recontracted with Robertson-Cole for a new series of pictures. The closing of this new understanding, which provides for the best pictures Hayakawa ever has made, is a definite endorsement of the recent Hayakawa pictures, made by Haworth, which have passed the most exacting box office tests, and proved themselves among the finest attractions released. Hayakawa is an unique star on the screen, holding a position which none can rival, and full advantage of this is to be taken in the forthcoming pictures, the first of which will be issued at the close of his present contract.

"Hayakawa is to have leading roles in a series of new productions of such caliber as to make them second to none which have been made by any star. This will be an attraction aside from the tremendous drawing power which is found in Hayakawa's unique position.

"Schooled in the lore of the Orient he understands also Occidental customs and culture, and so is the chief depictor of the Oriental outlook staged against an Occidental background and vice versa. Hayakawa's position as a cosmopolitan actor, which has been built up through his selection of many lands as the scenes of his drama, is to consume and be augmented in the new series which is to be released through Robertson-Cole.

"Hayakawa has a unique personality of boundless dramatic instinct. On the screen he makes an impression which is never forgotten and there is behind each of his productions a quality which finds in the hearts of every audience an immediate and lasting response."

"OTIS SKINNER, conceded the greatest romantic actor on the American stage today, found in 'Kismet' a vehicle for the most dramatic portrayal of his career. Consequently in obtaining a contract for the appearance on the screen of Mr. Skinner in this story, Robertson-Cole is securing a production which has few equals in matters theatrical.

"Critics of the drama have long felt that 'Kismet' is better suited to the screen than to the stage, as it has an excellent story capable of being spread over much better time and location than was possible in the theatre.

"Consequently the screen version, played by the actor who made such a great success out of the stage version, is certain to be the season's unprecedented dramatic triumph. Mr. Skinner is at the height of his powers as a dramatic actor, having behind him many years of success. He has always been associated with the best acting talent of the American stage and with the best histrionic ideals fostered on this side of the Atlantic.

"'Kismet' is a play of the desert, placing Mr. Skinner in the role of an Arab. His soul is tried by one of the strongest dramatic situations ever conceived. This is an attraction, the drawing power of which the exhibitor will not need to be urged to take advantage of.

"For several years the screen powers of Bessie Barriscale has been a growing factor in the exhibitors' world. Especially in the last few months this feminine star has come to be one of the most certain and consistent of box office winners. Hence her new contract with Robertson-Cole for the release of a new series of pictures, which is to include the best themes she ever has approached and the finest dramatic productions ever turned out by B. B. Features, is of deepest interest to showmen.

"In her position as the leading characterizer on the screen of society women, and middle class wives, Miss Barriscale has been fortunate in obtaining stories which have enabled her to reach a height not surpassed by any screen actress in her class. It is the purpose of Robertson-Cole and the executives in B. B. Features to see that her future releases are selected with even greater care and that Miss Barriscale is given every opportunity to surpass even the splendid pictures which she has recently been making for release through Robertson-Cole.

"Booking Miss Barriscale is far from an experiment, as her work is widely known and very generally recognized as being the most finished product in its particular class. Women patrons particularly are fascinated by this star, who is known as one of the leading exponents of modern fashions on the silver sheet."

Robertson-Cole's Stars

"A TYPICAL instance of the way in which the trust Robertson-Cole places its Lee Cody is vindicated may be found in the wide success which is being won by the latest of his Lee Cody productions, 'The Butterfly Man.' It is surpassing the wide financial success of 'The Beloved Cheater,' his first special Robertson-Cole production, and maintaining the high standard which was promised to exhibitors when Cody first began to make this new series.

"In 'The Butterfly Man,' Mr. Cody plays another of his fascinating, tantalizing parts which are certain to please motion picture patrons, and fill the till of the exhibitor. In 'The Butterfly Man' Mr. Cody has the role of a handsome young man, a social climber, who sacrifices everything in order that he may win an heiress, and so 'fix' himself financially and socially.

"Through a series of dazzling pictures of 'high society' life, 'The Butterfly Man' flutters, to reach a dramatic finale which makes this picture one of the most distinctive of the year. The picture's foundation is George Barr McCutcheon's story of the same name.

"From all over the country has come a great flood of press clippings showing conclusively that 'The Beloved Cheater' has been hailed as one of the worthwhile dramatic novelties of the year. As 'The Butterfly Man' is a production of even greater power and box office value, the prediction is made by Robertson-Cole that Mr. Cody in this second of his series will win even greater laurels than in 'The Beloved Cheater.'

"Memorial Day has been fixed as the date of the pre-release of the American society drama in which Georges Carpentier, the famous world figure, is to appear for Robertson-Cole. This picture, which will be the unique and winning sensation of the motion picture year is just about complete in the Solax Studio, Fort Lee, N. J., where Carpentier, soldier, aviator, sportsman, social favorite, and a champion boxer has been working for several weeks under the direction of John G. Adolfi.

"One of the greatest assurances that the Carpentier picture will be given a reception second to none produced this year is the widespread public interest in the French hero. Every one of the 1,000,000 men who were under arms for the United States in the Great War will want to see this famous brother in arms, and there will be several million more potential patrons added in the families and friends of the soldiers. Sporting writers who have given Carpentier hundreds of columns of space have assured all the men selling the picture, and there is no fear but that this fine looking young athlete will be a compelling attraction to the fair sex.

"It can never be said that Carpentier is a freak of the studio," said John G. Adolfi, the director. "This man stands head and shoulders over any other person who has been put into a motion picture for the purpose of capitalizing his publicity. By this, I mean, that Carpentier is a real actor. He doesn't have to rely on what the world knows about him to be a success. If nobody ever had heard of this quiet, intelligent, capable young man, he could still go in and win out as a motion picture actor. He has every necessary quality.

"Screen tests of Carpentier, shown at the Robertson-Cole executive headquarters entirely bear out this estimate. With a clear conception of what is needed for success before the camera, Carpentier is seen in a remarkable diversity of emotional poses. But most impressive of all was his winning smile, which has been titled, 'The Million Dollar Smile.' It is indeed a warm, interesting, pleasing smile which will hold its own with every famous smile now on the screen."

"VERY soon exhibitors all over the country are to be able to share in the golden sunshine which always fell over box offices able to put up a sign bearing the name of 'Chic' Sale. This famous depictor of small town and 'rube' characters is rapidly finishing his first picture made under a contract with Robertson-Cole for his appearance upon the screen. For years Mr. Sale was one of vaudeville's headliners, and a musical hall favorite, who convulsed thousands with his droll mannerisms and speeches. Now exhibitors are to be able to give him to the public, thereby offering one more attraction of whose drawing power there is no question.

"The first picture will be from Cobb's Saturday Evening Post rural classic, 'A Smart Aleck.' Considering the quaint humor of the story, and the wonderful work of Mr. Sale, this picture is certain to take the country by storm, and win handsomely for every exhibitor who books it.

"For years on the vaudeville and musical hall stage Mr. Sale was the leading American portrayer of this style of humorous character. He was only induced to go before the camera because of the fact that the world was clamoring for his work and would not be satisfied with the limitation of personal appearance.

far-sighted exhibitor as a film of compelling power.

In the West, Eugene Roth, director of the California Theatre, San Francisco, has booked the picture for a showing in his house, one of the leading theatres west of the Rockies. In the Madison Theatre, Detroit, Michigan's finest house, John H. Kumsky will show "The Bottom of the World," because he considers it a production which stacks up against any dramatic picture obtainable, as a feature. The Stanley Theatre, in Philadelphia, one of the representative houses of that part of the country., the Euclid Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio's finest picture house, and the Auditorium, Minneapolis, a house which is controlled by a competing company, all have booked "The Bottom of the World," and will feature it.

In England the critics hailed "The Bottom of the World," as a sensation, not only in its class, but in any classification. Leading English publications said:

"Epoch-making pictures - pictures that should be seen by everyone who has eyes to see and a heart to understand." — Lloyd's Weekly.

Moss Plays Capellani Film

"The Fortune Teller" Opens May 9 at Broadway; Is Heart Drama

AS a proof of the merits of the picture as a box office attraction, Robertson-Cole has placed "The Fortune Teller," the Albert Capellani super special, with Marjorie Rambeau as its star, for a run, starting Sunday, May 9, at B. S. Moss's Broadway theatre, New York City. Here, at the film presentation center of the country, it will start a career which is bound to be a financial and artistic success, says Robertson-Cole.

"The Fortune Teller," which is described by the distributing corporation as the greatest picture to which it so far has put its name, will herewith have a Broadway presentation at a house which holds a leading place among the motion picture theatres of "The Great White Way," and one at which "big pictures" without number have started their national runs.

The engagement which the Capellani picture begins at the Broadway will be continued with uniform success all over the country, in the opinion of the Robertson-Cole organization. They hold that the booking of the production by the Broadway is only a forerunner of what will happen in every one of the more important cities, basing this judgment on the fact that the picture, which is the greatest achievement of the famous French director, is of supreme appeal as a human document.

In telling why he feels that "The Fortune Teller" is his masterpiece, Albert Capellani, its director, says:

"'The Fortune Teller' is a story which grips from the opening scene until the final fadeout. The plot comes from the celebrated A. H. Woods production which had a continued success on Broadway at the leading theatre in the United States.

"The spoken drama was indeed a great drawing power but the time necessary to convey the beautiful thought of the story was too great for the legitimate stage. Realizing this, I was quick to take the story at one of the highest prices ever paid for a play and worked it to the limit to bring human interest and heart drama to the front via the film."

"The Butterfly Man" Is Another Cody Hit

Impelled by its own merit and Mr. Cody's appealing characterization in "The Beloved Cheater," Cody's second Continental special, "The Butterfly Man," has swept the country from coast to coast in half the time which it took "The Beloved Cheater" to cover, according to Robertson-Cole.

Mr. Cody in "The Butterfly Man" is supported by Louise Lovely, Rosemary Theby, Lila Leslie, Andrew Robson, Alberta Lee, Alec B. Francis, Mary Land and Marth Mattox. The press and exploitation book which Robertson-Cole has issued on "The Butterfly Man" is the most elaborate and most practical in the series of campaign books, which this company has been issuing.

Third Marshall Neilan Picture Completed

The final scene of Marshall Neilan's third independent production following "The River's End" and "Don't Ever Marry," was "shot" last week and the work of cutting and assembling the film is now under way. Although the title of the film is not ready for publication, it is stated that the picture presents a highly dramatic subject. Agnes Ayres, the film actress recently signed to appear both in Marshall Neilan and Albert Kaufman Productions, plays the lead.

The production has been scheduled for release the middle of June. In the meantime work is rapidly progressing on the fourth Neilan production, to be released by First National and in which Wesley Barry, of freckle-faced fame, will play the leading part.

"Old Wives For New" Will Be Reissued

To give exhibitors who have shown "Why Change Your Wife?" and other Cecil B. DeMille productions an opportunity to obtain greater revenue from the popularity of Mr. DeMille's pictures the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation announced this week that the great Cecil B. DeMille success of a few years ago, "Old Wives for New," will be reissued June 6th.

"Old Wives for New" was the first of the series of productions in which Mr. DeMille brought to the screen an exposition of the various problems of marriage. Because of its universal appeal and its keen insight into human nature, as much as because of its skillful production, the picture proved a big success.

Another Curwood Novel Will Reach Screen

The popularity of James Oliver Curwood's stories, and the growing demand for special pictures have induced Louis B. Mayer to produce Curwood's famous novel, "Isobel," as a special attraction.

Work on the production was started at the Mayer studio last week with Edwin Carewe directing. House Peters and a notable cast including Jane Novak. The working title of the picture is "The Trail's End." Definite distributing arrangements have not been made, according to the Chaplin-Mayer office.

Gordon Opposite Alice Joyce in Another

Rapidly following the announcement that upon the termination of his contract with J. Stuart Blackton, Robert Gordon is to become star of his own company, is the news that meantime, he will appear again with Alice Joyce in the leading masculine role. His work in "Dollars and the Woman," a recent Vitagraph picture is said to be more or less responsible for his selection for a splendid part. This will be Mr. Gordon's second picture with Miss Joyce.

Claire Whitney in Cast

Has Been Engaged by Metro for Part in "Love, Honor and Obey"

Claire Whitney, who will be seen in "Love, Honor, and Obey," a Metro picture

CLAIRE WHITNEY has been engaged for the part of Marian Holbury in the forthcoming S. L. special production, "Love, Honor and Obey," adapted by Eugene Walter from Charles Neville Buck's novel, "The Tyranny of Weakness," and now being made at Metro's New York studios in Sixty-first street. E. J. Ratcliffe has also been added to the all-star cast of "Love, Honor and Obey," which includes Wilda Bennett, Henry Harmon, Kenneth Harlan, William Williams and George Cowl.

Miss Whitney was recently starred in the screen production, "Mothers of Men." Prior to that she was seen in the Metro special, "The Man Who Stayed at Home," with King Baggot. The screen career of this stage actress has also included leading roles in "The New York Peacock," "Thou Shalt Not Steal," "Camille," and "Shirley Kane." Miss Whitney is a New York girl and a graduate of Wadleigh High School.

Her part of Marian Holbury in "Love, Honor and Obey" is that of a society leader who leaves her brutal husband after a violent quarrel and flings herself into the unwilling arms of Stuart Emmet, a novelist, the role to be interpreted by Kenneth Harlan.

Mr. Ratcliffe, a veteran actor, whose last engagement was with International, is to play Marian's husband, a wealthy clubman, whose moral sense has been blunted by continuous high living.

The production is directed by Leander de Cordova, who was previously with Metro as an assistant director, helping produce among other plays the screen version of "Romeo and Juliet," with Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne.

To Picturize "Passers By"

Blackton Buys C. Haddon Chambers' Stage Success; Rawlinson Starred

PATHE this week announces the acquisition of J. Stuart Blackton's screen version of C. Haddon Chambers' famous play, "Passers By." This production, having as the head of a competent cast Herbert Rawlinson, has been in the making for four months. Release date of the celebrated play has not been set yet but will be announced shortly.

In the cast with Mr. Rawlinson are Tom Lewis, Dick Lee, and W. J. Ferguson. Mr. Lewis, who plays the part of the "Cabby," is at the present time a headliner on the Keith and Proctor vaudeville circuit. W. J. Ferguson, one of the oldest and best known character actors in America, who interprets the role of Waverton's butler, a much more important part than the character indicates, has been featured for months in "The Little Whopper," which just completed an all season run at the Casino theatre in New York, and is now on tour. Dick Lee has a national reputation for his "character" ability, which he uses to the fullest advantage portraying "Burns."

Herbert Rawlinson is declared to make an ideal Peter Waverton, the wealthy Londoner who throws open his mansion to the "passers by," portrays the role in which Charles Cherry and Richard Bennett won fame on the stage in this country. In England, Gerald Du Maurier, son of the famous Du Maurier who wrote "Trilby," portrayed Waverton, achieving his brightest fame. At present Cherry and Bennett are earning laurels on the American stage. The former is starring in "Scandal," now nearing the end of a year's run in New York, while Bennett is featured in "Beyond the Horizon," another of the great stage triumphs of the year.

"Passers By" comes as the sixth Blackton release through Pathe within the year, included in this number being such successes as "My Husband's Other Wife," "Respectable by Proxy" and "The Blood Barrier."

Kosmik to Specialize on Scenic Settings

In "The Hope Diamond Mystery," a serial now in production, Kosmik Film, Inc., are specializing in scenic settings. The story was written by May Yohe, and Grace Darmond and George Cheseboro will be featured. Others in the cast are Carmen Philips, Harry Carter, William Buckley, William Marion, Boris Karloff, Ethel Shannon and others. Stuart Patson is the director. The Hearst newspapers will publish the story simultaneously with the release of the serial.

Sues Amalgamation for $720,153 Damages

C. G. BINDERUP, of Minden, Neb., who is suing the so-called Omaha Moving Picture Film Trust for $720,153 damages on the allegation of a conspiracy to ruin his business in the operation of twenty-eight Nebraska theatres, submits the following explanation in a recent letter to the NEWS:

"I regret to inform you that on Nov. 13, 1919, the writer was placed on the blue list or black list of the Omaha film exchanges for no other reason than the fact that I would not consent to act with the combination, The Omaha Film Men's Board of Trade of Omaha, Neb., in boycotting one house belonging to R. Ruby, of Orleans, Neb., under his management but supplied with service in regular order over circuit, in connection with my own houses on individual contract, for a serial program, paid for cash in advance.

"I was informed by telegram to discontinue shipping program into Orleans for Mr. Ruby; and as I refused to do this, I was placed on their black list and all film service discontinued, regardless of the fact that I had contracts in force, paid in advance."

Goldwyn Pictures Fill Frisco Theatres

Goldwyn Week on Market Street, San Francisco, Cal., brought record breaking crowds at the California theatre where Pauline Frederick in "The Woman in Room 13" was the attraction, and at the Rialto, showing Rex Beach's "The Silver Horde." The pictures opened on a Sunday, one of the finest of California Spring days. Many people had gone to the beaches, or on motor trips, yet lines two and three deep waited in front of the theatres from opening time until shortly before the closing hour.

The city was so well covered with twenty-four, three and one sheets that no one could travel about San Francisco without being met by the name of Goldwyn.

"Fires of Faith" To Be Revived in Mid-West

A keen revival of interest in the Paramount-Artcraft production, "Fires of Faith," is being fostered through the active efforts of the Salvation Army officials of Ohio and West Virginia at this time. Special Representative Harris P. Wolfberg of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is working in close co-operation with the Salvation Army officials of Cleveland. Cleveland Salvationists are offering exhibitors showing "Fires of Faith" throughout Ohio, close personal co-operation in making their engagements successful. The Salvation Army launches its 1920 drive in May.

Although the picture has not been completely titled and cut, it is said that the men who saw it were enthusiastic

Many offers were received by Herman F. Jans, president of the Jans Pictures, Inc., and all of them are being considered and will be held pending the decision of Mr. Jans as to just what men are most fully equipped to handle the feature.

Within a short time "Madonnas and Men" will be given a special presentation at one of the legitimate Broadway theatres, this being in line with Mr. Jans idea of everything in connection with this feature being done in a particularly big way.

Reelcraft Comedy and Western Finished

Nat Spitzer, West Coast studio manager for the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation at Hollywood, announce the completion of Billy Franey's latest one reel comedy, under the direction of George Jeske, to be titled "Tarred and Feathered." Texas Guinan has completed another two reel Western feature under the direction of Jay Hunt, called "The Night Rider." These two pictures will be released on the exclusive one and two reel program of the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation.

C. A. Willat to Manage West Coast Studios

C. A. Willat has been appointed general manager of the West Coast studios of the National Film Corporation of America, according to announcement made by Capt. Harry M. Rubey, National's president.

Under "Doc" Willat's management the National will resume the production of features, with several heavy-calibre stars, with whom Mr. Willat is now negotiating, it is stated. Victor A. Nulty will continue as production manager at the National.

Madlaine Traverse Productions to Release on State Rights Market

MADLAINE TRAVERSE, well known star of motion pictures, who terminated her contract with Fox Film Corporation upon the completion of "The Spirit of Good," will star in big features to be released on a state rights basis, according to news from Los Angeles. The plans for the making of Madlaine Traverse Productions have been completed and work will start on the first feature to be released by the new organization in August.

Miss Traverse was one of the first stars to spread the fame of Fox Film Corporation. Her first picture, "The Caillaux Case," made eighteen months ago, is still one of the most popular films shown in France. In all, Miss Traverse made fourteen Fox productions, many of them based on famous stage successes, and her latest picture, "The Spirit of Good," is said by those who have seen it to be the greatest she has made.

Miss Traverse came to the screen from a successful international career on the stage. For three years she was seen in the New York and London success, "The Chorus Lady." She decided to forsake the stage for the screen after "Yes or No" closed and was immediately signed by William Fox.

It is the plan of the star to come East early in June to get her wardrobe and return to the coast in July, when she will start her first production.

Offices of Madlaine Traverse Productions will be established in New York and Los Angeles and the company will make four or five specials a year. Well known artists will support Miss Traverse in these independent releases, the first of which will be "The Stain of Innocence."

Aywon Buys Joy Comedies

Company Acquires World Rights to Series; Territory Being Sold

NATHAN HIRSH, president of the Aywon Film Corporation, announces that he has just acquired the world's rights to the Joy Comedies and that he will release a series of fifteen two reelers starring Charlie Joy, and a bevy of Miami Beauties.

This will make available for the independent exchange men and through them the exhibitors of the country, a series of up to the minute comedies described as "full of pep, action, fun and laughs galore," to say nothing of a number of the pretty girls. Each of the two reelers will present a legitimate story packed full of real laughs. The first three, which are already completed and ready for distribution are: "Too Much Garlic," "Back to Nature" and "The Vampum Hunter."

The three comedies mentioned were screened privately a few days ago for the benefit of trade journalists and newspaper men. The comedies have been most aptly described as bubbles of joy, and seem destined to brighten up many a program throughout the country.

Mr. Hirsh believes that the Joy Comedies will prove one of the finest money making attractions he has ever distributed. This supposition appears to have been supported because of the fact that barely had the news gone out that Aywon had contracted for the world's rights to these comedies than the state rights buyers began making arrangements to buy up their various territories.

Territory is now being disposed of by the Aywon Film Corporation through their home office at 729 Seventh avenue, New York City. From present indications it looks as if practically all of the territory in the United States will be contracted for in record breaking time.

Irving Lesser Buys "That Something"

Irving Lesser, who has been associated with his brother, Sol Lesser, for the past three years, has secured the international rights on a seven reel production made by the Hermann Film Company which is an adaptation from the W. W. Woodbridge story, "That Something," dedicated to the Rotary Clubs of the world. The story is now in its eleventh edition, and upwards of twenty five million copies have been distributed. Lesser has opened offices in the Grosse Building, Los Angeles, and will begin the distribution of the film in the Coast states. The first showing will be at the Garrick Theatre, Los Angeles, beginning Sunday, May 2. Later the picture will open at San Francisco, Portland and Seattle. In all instances the showing will be under the auspices of the local Rotary Club.

United States Corporation in New Studio

The United States Photoplay Corporation last week moved into their new studio in New Jersey, known as the E. K. Lincoln studio. Since April 15, Harry McRae Webster, director, John L. McCutcheon, associate director, and Herbert L. Messmore, technical director, had been working to get the building ready for occupancy. The company has a twenty five months' lease on the studio, and announces that it expects to buy a forty acre plot nearby and erect their own studio, which will be modernly equipped in every detail. The United States Company now has four productions, "Determination," "The Soul of Man," "The Home of Men," and "Deception."

Walter Miller Leads In "Why Tell?"

The Elk Photoplays, Inc., announces that Walter Miller is appearing in the five-reel drama, "Why Tell?" He is supported by Irva Ross, Noah Beery and Charles Graham, according to the announcement.

Three One Reel Comics on Christie Program

The Christie company announces three new one-reel comedy stories in which matrimonial affairs seem to predominate according to the subject matter indicated by the titles, which are: "Should a Husband Tell?," "License Applied For" and "No Babies Allowed."

The three new Christie subjects are the result of the work of three directors and three authors. "Should a Husband Tell?" features Dorothy Devore and Jimmie Harrison. It was written by Keene Thompson and directed by Allen Watt. "License Applied For" presents Earl Rodney in the role of a young man who bought the license before he proposed. The story is by Scott Darling and was directed by Scott Sidney. In the comedy, "No Babies Allowed," Dorothy Devore and Jimmie Harrison are again presented in a story which shows how to beat the landlords. The story by Jack Jevne and Keene Thompson was directed by Frederic Sullivan.

Briggs Comedies Are to be State Righted

The Briggs comedies, which during the past year have been released through Paramount Exchanges will in the future be distributed via the states right market. The Chadwick Pictures Corporation, a company formed recently to handle productions produced for the open market will handle the sale of these comedies throughout the world.

Release of the first series of ten Briggs comedies will be at the rate of one each week for ten weeks. Chadwick Pictures corporation have taken offices in the Leavitt Building in New York city, and Jacques Kopfstein, the vice president, is in charge of the sales department.

Southern Exchangemen Like Jans Pictures

F E. Backer, general sales manager for Jans Pictures, Inc., returned recently from a flying trip through the South, filled with enthusiasm due to the manner in which southern exchangemen and state right buyers spoke of the two initial releases featuring Olive Tell, in the interest of which this trip has been made especially for. According to Mr. Backer conditions in the South in the motion picture industry was very good.

Rights on Big Comedy Sell

Quality Pictures Buys Territory on Fine Arts Five Reel Feature

WILLIS KENT, head of the Quality Pictures Company, Denver, made a special trip to New York this last week to purchase rights to "Up in Mary's Attic," the five-reel super-comedy produced by the Fine Arts Pictures, Inc., of which Murray W. Garson is president. Mr. Kent had never seen the picture but was attracted by advisements in the trade press. Before he left he dictated this unsolicited statement and mailed it to Charles F. Schwerin, general sales manager for Fine Arts:

"To open my new exchange in Denver I realized that I should have one big headliner one picture that every one would have to use. Therefore, when I saw the announcements of 'Up in Mary's Attic' I came to New York to look the picture over on the off chance that it might be what I wanted.

"Since seeing parts of it I want to say that this production is not only far better than I hoped or dreamed, but in my opinion will be the greatest money getter ever released. It has everything—delicious comedy minus the slapstick; a dandy story with a heart interest that is irresistible; the most gorgeous bunch of girls ever assembled, and the sweetest, most appealing star in pictures. It is the comedy supreme — the finest blending of laughter and tears, smiles and heart throbs, ever achieved on the screen. And that is what the dear old public loves.

Mr. Kent is said to have paid one of the highest prices ever recorded for the rights to the "Mountain States" — Colorado, Utah, New Mexico and Wyoming.

Prepare for "Tarzan" Film

Sets Being Constructed; New Space Leased; to Be More Than a Serial

"THE SON OF TARZAN," which will be under way at the studios of the National Film Corporation of America as soon as the necessary sets have been completed by "Micky" Caldwell, will be more than a serial, according to Harry J. Revier, who was chosen to direct this production. Mr. Revier has arrived on the West Coast and is superintending all phases of production. Roy Somerville, photo-dramatist of note, who was chosen to adapt the last of Edgar Rice Burroughs' books of the Tarzan series for the screen, has completed three episodes of continuity. Actual production will be started about the middle of May, according to Mr. Revier.

The production of "The Son of Tarzan" will make such a heavy demand upon the present studio space of the National Film's plant in Hollywood that several acres of unimproved property adjoining the plant have been leased for an indefinite period, according to advices from the West Coast. Negotiations are now pending which will bring three additional acres under the plant's management. More stages will also be constructed, it is stated.

Jack Hoxie, who was slated to appear in the leading role of "The Son of Tarzan," will not be cast for the serial, but will be starred in a series of western features to be produced by National Film.

In his announcement of National Film's forthcoming production, "The Son of Tarzan," Mr. Revier declares: "Simply because it will be released in episode form it will not necessarily have to be serial. On the contrary, each release will be a feature and can be exploited as such."

Lesser to Distribute "That Something"

"That Something" is the mysterious yet alluring title of a multiple reel drama, produced by the Herman Film Corporation, which is to be exploited throughout the United States by Sol Lesser. "That Something" is an inspirational drama.

States Rights Company is Incorporated

A new organization, recently incorporated under the laws of New York State, is known as the Climax Film Corporation, and has opened executive offices at 729 Seventh Avenue. Climax announces that it has already purchased the New York State and northern New Jersey rights to "A Common Level," a six-reel spectacular drama, featuring Edmund Breese and Claire Whitney, released May 15. Charles Rosenfeld is the moving spirit behind the new organization.

Mickey Film Executive in East on Business

Ludwig Schindler, president of the Mickey Film Corporation of Chicago, is in New York loking after the interests of his firm's productions, which include the special feature which has attracted unusual attention both from the box office and entertainment angles, "The Woman He Chose." Mr. Schindler reports an unprecedented demand for the prints where the territory has been sold and that exhibitors are everywhere meeting success in showing the feature.

Victor Kremer Reports Sale of Comedies

The final sales drive in the interests of the five Chaplin productions controlled by Victor Kremer Film Features, Inc., has resulted in the sale of practically all of the open territory for these comedies. Victor Kremer, president of the organization, reports the consummation of sales for California, Arizona and Nevada, Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas, eastern Missouri and southern Illinois.

Reelcraft Provides for Prompt Distribution

Railroad strikes will in the future hold no terror for the distributors of Reelcraft Pictures Corporation releases. Each of the producing companies are working over-time to provide the General Office with several releases ahead in every series on the releasing schedule. Advertising matter is also being prepared considerable time in advance, to permit the shipping of the complete release from print to paper several weeks in advance of the scheduled release date.

THE THIRD

A murder committed in a motion picture studio; circumstantial evidence points to the guilt of a girl star in that studio; the chief argument of the prosecution is a motion picture film which apparently shows the girl in the act of committing the crime. Certain dangerous men, to serve their own ends, seek to fasten the crime upon the girl, while her own friends do their best to save her.

With such a plot, with such a sterling actor as Warner Oland playing the "heavy," with such a charming star as Eileen Percy and with fast and furious action in every episode, you may depend upon it that this serial is there.

Pioneer Distributing System Growing

Contracts were signed last week between the Pioneer Film Corporation and Tom N. Parker, president of the Parker Film Company, Dallas, Texas, whereby the latter became a unit in the Pioneer Co-operative Distribution System.

The addition of this territory, which includes Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas, leaves only two minor sections of the country without a Pioneer distributor. Negotiations are now under way with the remaining territories of the United States and it is expected that within the next two or three weeks the Pioneer system of exchanges will embrace the entire United States and Canada.

Eddie Bonns Managing Sales For Chester

Eddie Bonns, who has been associated with the Warner Brothers, leaves that organization to join C. L. Chester as Sales Manager of Chester Productions. Mr. Bonns will leave New York for Los Angeles Tuesday for a conference with Mr. Chester.

The Chester organization, which has in the past specialized in Scenics and Comedies, has now arranged to extend its activities to feature productions.

Beban Picture Should Please all Classes

George Beban, who plays the Italian role in "One Man in a Million," which will be distributed and exploited by Sol Lesser, states, in connection with this picture, "I have a picture that will please the masses, the classes, the young and the old." Beban is the author, director and producer of "One Man in a Million."

Harry H. Poppe Will Write For Screen

The ranks of those who write for the screen was augmented this week when Harry H. Poppe announced that he had resigned as advertising and publicity manager for A. H. Fischer Features, Inc., and had embarked in business for himself as a writer of original stories for the screen. He has established his headquarters at 3 East 44th street, New York.

Will Make Short Subjects

A LITERARY of short features with a world wide circulation is the term name for a program of one and two reel features now being produced and contemplated by the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation.

The relation held by short stories and magazines to the world of fiction is similar to the relation of the short subject to the motion picture industry. One and two-reel comedies are even more popular than the short humorous stories of the magazines. The demand appears to be far greater than the supply at all times. To date, Reelcraft Pictures have given comedy the first consideration, not particularly by choice, but because of the demand of the exhibitors. Four producing companies already are furnishing comedies for the Reelcraft program. Billy West is supplying one two reel comedy every other week, Alice Howell a two reel comedy every alternate week, Billy Franey one reel comedies are being released one every week; while Milburn Moranti is making a series of two reel comedies that are said to be different from the ordinary laugh producer, to be released every other week. Moranti has surrounded himself with cast including Helen Williams, Fritzi Ridgeway, Joe Bonner and Albert Huston. Many of the scenarios have been completed by Grover Jones, the well-known humorous title writer.

For the followers of the melo-drama and speedy western action, Texas Guinan is featured in a series of two reel Westerns, directed by J. Hunt. These Westerns have proved exceedingly popular. Texas Guinan is remembered for her dashing winsome Eugenie roles in musical comedies, and proves just as winsome and dashing in the movies.

Cartoons have also been considered by Reelcraft, negotiations have been progressing, whereby a nationally known comic artist drawing a popular series of newspaper cartoons may soon be drawing an animated weekly release for Reelcraft distribution. Educationals will also be made and distributed.

The scenic series of the Reelcraft program will be supplied by Leland J. Burrud under the Sunset Scenic brand. Mr. Burrud has a special motor truck equipped and fitted for the purpose of developing his pictures as he takes them on location, enabling him to motor from place to place, with utter disregard of railroads. Burrud claims that the most beautiful spots in all the United States are farthest from railroad stations, and a motor car is the only means of getting to these wonder places of nature. The Scenic series will be one reel each and released weekly.

One of the innovations planned by Reelcraft is a series of pictures which, it is hoped, are different from any now being offered in the field of short subjects. A popular male star of international fame will be featured in a series of stories by a prominent author. These pictures are not planned for release before early fall and announcement will be made later concerning the star and the pictures. Other novelties are planned for release from time to time.

National advertising campaigns will be carried on each separate series of releases. A service department has also been established and is now working out advertising plans for the individual Exchanges distributing Reelcraft Pictures.

Reelcraft Has Four Companies Making Comedies

Masterfilms Has Long List

Company Reports Many Features and Comedies for New Yorkers

NEW YORK Independent Masterfilms, Inc., the Victor Kremer Exchange which is reported to be breaking records in booking the five Chaplin comedies, included among which are a "Burlesque on Carmen," "Work," "The Champion," "The Jitney Elopement" and "By the Sea," has recently acquired a large list of films for distribution in New York and Northern Jersey.

With the acquisition of these pictures, including variety of features, western dramas, comedies, scenics, cartoons and educational subjects, New York Independent Masterfilms, Inc., is now in a position to supply every exhibitor in this territory with a complete and diversified program of the highest calibre. Such present day stars as Bryant Washburn, Taylor Holmes, Broncho Billy and Mary McAlister are featured in many of the special subjects included in the new Kremer Exchange program.

Exclusive of the Chaplin pictures, the new productions include the following features: "Hayoe," starring Bryant Washburn; "Fools for Luck," starring Taylor Holmes; "The Golden Idiot," starring Bryant Washburn; "A Small Town Guy," starring Taylor Holmes; "Skinner's Baby," starring Bryant Washburn; "Young Mother Hubbard," starring Mary McAlister. Comedies: "A Hot Time in Snakeville," "Snakeville's New Sheriff," "Snakeville's Epidemic," "Snakeville's Debutante," "Slippery Slim Diplomat," "Slippery Slim and the Claim Agent," "Slippery Slim's Inheritance," "Slippery Slim's Strategy," "Sophie's Birthday Party," "Sophie Gets Stung."

Kellerman Underwater Scenes Taken

This week marked the shooting of the famous under water scenes for Annette Kellerman's production, "What Women Love," which is to be distributed and exploited by Sol Lesser.

Two well known writers, Reed Heuttis of the Los Angeles Evening Herald staff, who is known as the 'James J. Montagne of the Pacific Coast' and Vincent Bryan, the well known song writer will collaborate on the subtitles for the new comedy drama.

Stars Being "Shot" for "Screen Snapshots"

Jack Cohn, producer of the novelty reel, "Screen Snapshots" announces that his cameramen have already secured shots of some of the prominent screen stars on the Coast and have arranged to take the balance in the very near future. He states that directors and stars themselves have co-operated in a manner beyond his expectations.

Simplex Notes

Mr. C. D. Struble, Manager of the Yale Theatre Supply Company, Simplex Distributors for western Missouri, Kansas, Oklahoma and northwestern Arkansas, reports that besides having moved his establishment from its old location at the Sheidley Building, to the newly erected Film Building at 17th and Main streets, Kansas City, Mo., he has also been active in spreading the fame of the Simplex Projector thru his territory.

A partial list of recent Simplex installations made thru the Yale Theatre Supply Company include the following:

Film Millennium Near Says Louis Burston

The film business is facing its greatest prosperity year, according to Louis Burston, serial producer, who leaves New York for his Los Angeles studios next week to complete plans for shipments of "The Great Reward," his new Francis Ford serial.

Mr. Burston bases his judgment upon many angles experienced within his six weeks close contact with Eastern producers and Eastern capital since his return to New York. He sees every reason to believe that the old prophesy that motion pictures would some day be established as are other popular products of public consumption is about to be immediately fulfilled.

Universal to Start on Technical Pictures

The new technograph division of the Educational Department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company is rapidly rounding into shape and will soon start work producing scientific films for theatre showing. The first unit of the new field of endeavor to get underway started work last Monday.

Realizing that to obtain the most instructive, artistic and interesting results from educational motion pictures it would be necessary to install an animating-art department, Universal's Educational Department added to the rapidly expanding department an especially designed trick-title apparatus.

New Company Starts Work

Screen Crafts Begins on "The Great Physician," a Seven-Reeler

WITH H. M. Lawson, veteran exhibitor, who is at present owner of a chain of motion picture playhouses in Arizona and Northern California, as president and general manager, Screen Crafts, Inc., the newest organization to enter the film production field, this week commenced work on "The Great Physician," under the direction of Chadwick Ayres, director of many screen successes.

A noteworthy cast has been assembled for the play and includes some of the foremost artists of the silent drama. Robert McKim is leading man and Rhea Mitchell is leading lady, while other well-known players in the cast include Snowden Baxendale, who has just entered motion pictures after a long career on the New York legitimate stage; Arnold Gregg, Lew Morrison, Charlotte Woods, Robert Anderson, Max Davidson, Olga Gray and Maxine Adair.

"The Great Physician," a story from the pen of the well known author of screen plays, Carrie B. Hutcheson, is in seven impelling reels, and was scenarized by Clarence Ludy, who has been assigned the task of writing continuity for forthcoming Screen Crafts productions.

In addition to its production of "The Great Physician," Screen Crafts has undertaken the filming of a series of two-reel athletic comedies featuring Bumps Adams, well known funster, at its newly constructed studios in Culver City, Cal.

Art-O-Graf Will Film Robert Bennett Story

Hard on the heels of the release of "The Desert Scorpion" and "Wolves of the Street," comes the announcement by the Art-O-Graf Film Company, that the production is well upon the way of "Finders Keepers," one of Robert Ames Bennett's stories. Edmund Cobb and Violet Mesereau will be featured.

Billy Franey Making Reelcraft Comedies

Billy Franey is now being featured by the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation in a series of one reel comedies. Production has been going on for some weeks at the Hollywood studios of Reelcraft under the personal direction of Franey. Release date for the first release is set for May 17th.

"Mary's Attic" Is Near Ready

THE final editing of "Up in Mary's Attic," which is being supervised by Elmer J. McGovern, is almost completed, according to an announcement by Murray W. Garsson, president of Fine Art Pictures, Inc., this week.

The work under Mr. McGovern's charge has progressed rapidly, so that Fine Arts executives are confident that a trade showing can be held within a short time.

"'Up in Mary's Attic' is the cleverest, most original and most whimsical narrative to ever reach the screen. That is our assertion, broad though it may seem, and we stand on it," says Murray Garsson, president of Fine Art Pictures, Inc.

Because of the enthusiastic response given preliminary exploitation of the feature, Mr. Schwerin, general sales manager, and Murray W. Garsson are confident that "Up in Mary's Attic" will set a new record in state right sales.

Never, according to Mr. Schwerin, in his experience in the films, has he received so many applications for territory and state rights as he has had in the last few weeks for "Up in Mary's Attic."

Hallroom Boys Getting Good Publicity

Jack and Harry Cohn, producers of the Hallroom Boys Comedies in which Neeley Edwards and Hugh Fay are featured, report that the syndication of the comic Percy and Ferdie cartoon strips by the New York Sun is proving of great publicity value for exhibitors booking the series.

The Cohns announce that in addition to the newspaper publicity they are getting on the Hallroom Boys Comedies, they will shortly inaugurate an exploitation campaign which all exhibitors using the series will be urged to adopt.

Early Release Date For Marie Doro Picture

Announcements have been issued by the Pioneer general office in New York that the May release will be Marie Doro in "Midnight Gambols," supported by Godfrey Tearle and a large cast of well-known players, which includes Mary Jeffold, Christine Maitland and Sam Livesey. An elaborate display of lithographs, lobby displays and novelties is being arranged.

Kohn One Reelers Will Star Bill Jones

Marion H. Kohn Productions, which are featuring Polly Moran and Grace Cunard in two-reel comedies and westerns, respectively, announce that no changes have been made in regard to the footage of the "Smiling Bill" Jones Comedies, which will be continued as single-reelers.

VITAGRAPH

SIX large settings occupy a greater portion of the Vitagraph stages and lot this week, and gives the impression that William Duncan has a monopoly on the space. All of these settings were especially built for the last two episodes of the Duncan serial, "The Silent Avenger." One of the largest is a tunnel 500 feet in length which will be used for scenes near the final climax. The Duncan Company has set a unique production record of filming scenes every day since they began work on this serial.

The Vitagraph Company headed by Earle Williams and directed by Chester Bennett, is planning to leave for San Francisco to make Chinatown scenes for "The Purple Hieroglyph" from the story by Will F. Jenkins, and scenario by J. Grubb Alexander. Upon the company's return from San Francisco, time will be spent at the Submarine Base at San Pedro where submarine scenes will be taken.

The Tom Terris Company filming "The Girl Out of the Sky," from the Gouverneur Morris story, has returned from Catalina Island where many of the scenes were made. The complete cast includes Marguerite De La Motte, Wallace MacDonald, Hallam Cooley, Joseph Swickard, Arthur Hoyt, Marcella Daly, Joseph Singleton and George DeRuiz.

The Antonio Moreno Company filming, "The Veiled Mystery" with Pauline Curley as the feminine lead, is now working under the direction of Webster Cullison at Catalina Islands where scenes for the fourth and fifth episodes are being taken. Story for this serial was written by President Albert E. Smith and Cleveland Moffitt.

A big temple set erected for "The Hidden Danger" serial was used this week after considerable delay in finding suitable types. The scenes required thirty Hindus each more than six feet in height. William Bertram is the director of this serial and Joe Ryan and Jean Paige are being featured.

Joe Rock and Earl Montgomery have each completed three two-reel comedies, and are taking a short vacation. Larry Semon is working on a back stage burlesque which will probably be titled "The Stage Hand"; and Director Jesse Robbins is filming a mountain comedy with Jimmy Aubrey.

Announcement was made this week of the marriage of Ernest F. Smith, son of W. S. Smith, general manager western Vitagraph studios, and Miss Grace Chapman. The groom is a member of the Vitagraph camera staff.

METRO

ANNOUNCEMENT is made of the change of three titles of forthcoming Metro productions. One of these is the Bert Lytell subject adapted from the I. A. R. Wyle story, "The Temple of Dawn," which will be released under the title of "The Price of Redemption." The final scenes for this were made by Lytell and Director Dallas FitzGerald at Chatsworth this week, when battle scenes requiring 700 people in East Indian costumes were used.

The Winchell Smith production of "The New Henrietta" has been given the title of "The Saphead," which has Buster Keaton in the name role.

The third final title to be decided upon is that of the picture featuring Alice Lake now being directed by Edwin Mortimer. This is adapted from the Julie Hearne play, "The Outsider," by A. P. Younger. The picture has been titled "The Misfit Wife."

A new Screen Classics subject was commenced by Director Wm. C. Dowlan, which will feature Viola Dana, who plays the role of a shimmy dancer. The subject is titled "Head and Shoulders," and Gareth Hughes has been selected to play the masculine lead. Other principals are Edward Jobson, Priscilla Ainsworth and Lawrence Grant.

One of the most important and attractive series of scenes for the coming Nazimova production, "Billions," were filmed this week and consisted of the sequence known as "The Garden of Dreams." These scenes required the most elaborate settings built at the Metro plant.

Norman Kennedy has been cast to play one of the leading roles in "Hearts are Trumps," which is a Drury Lane melodrama and which will be put in production next week under the direction of Rex Ingram.

It is the intention of Metro to have Bert Lytell make a series of four pictures in New York, and this star will leave for the eastern studios as soon as the editing of "The Price of Redemption" is completed.

Jean Havez, song and vaudeville sketch writer, who has written for Mack Sennett and Roscoe Arbuckle, has been engaged by Metro to write the scripts for the Buster Keaton comedies to be made under the direction of Eddie Cline.

BRUNTON

IT was definitely stated at the Robert Brunton Studios this week that an eastern branch plant of this company would be established in the near future, which bears out the previous announcement to this effect made in Motion Picture News. This definite information was given out on the eve of the departure of M. C. Leeve, vice-president and general manager of the big Brunton studios in Hollywood, for New York where he is to make a survey of producing conditions and select site for a plant to be erected in the east. While in New York Mr. Levee will also consummate contracts with a number of independent producing companies who plan to make pictures on the west coast.

Jack Cunningham, the screen author who is under contract with Robert Brunton, has been granted a vacation which he is spending at Del Monte, after a year's strenuous work. During the period Cunningham wrote the continuity for two fifteen episode serials, nine five-reel features, and four original stories.

Rose Curland, the short story writer and former dramatic editor of the Galveston Post, has been made a member of the scenario staff of the B. B. Hampton Company at the Brunton studios.

Director Arthur Rossen has completed the making of all scenes for the Betty Compson production, "The Test," at the Brunton studios. It is expected several weeks will be required for the titling and editing of this subject.

FOX

SEVERAL changes have occurred at the William Fox studio pertaining to the personnel. Both Madlaine Traverse and Gladys Brockwell have fulfilled their contracts and have left that organization. Miss Traverse's most recent production was "The Spirit of Good," and that of Miss Brockwell "A Sister to Salome."

Eileen Percy is to be featured in the screen version of the Arline Van Ness Hynes play which was produced at the Fulton theatre, New York, "Her Honor the Mayor." This play, which was originally a drama, has been converted into a light comedy drama and is being made under the direction of Paul Cazeneuve. Ramsey Wallace is the leading man; Charles Force, heavy, and Edwin Booth Tilton plays the leading character role.

The western story by Charles Alden Selzer, "Fire-Brand Trevison," is being made by Thomas Heffron, a new director at the Fox plant. Winifred Westover is the leading woman, and the cast includes Martha Mattox, Stanton Heck, Catherine Van Buren, Frank Clark and Joe Ray.

The Shirley Mason picture adapted from the story, "Peter from Nowhere," being directed by Howard M. Mitchell, has been given the permanent title of "The Little Wanderer." This is the story of a girl who masquerades as a boy in the New York slums and was written by Denison Clift, Raymond McKee is the leading man and principals of the cast are Cecil Van Auker, Alice Wilson and Jack Pratt.

The next picture to be made by William Russell is an adaptation from the Ridgewell Cullen novel, "The Twins of Suffering Creek," which is to be directed by Scott Dunlap. Jane McAlpin will play opposite Russell. The Max Brand story, "The Untamed," will serve as the next vehicle for Tom Mix.

F. P. LASKY

JUDGE BEN B. LINDSEY and Mrs. Lindsey have arrived in Hollywood to play the part of themselves in the William D. Taylor play based on the problem of the juvenile character and at present titled "The Boy." Judge Lindsey gained international prominence by his work in behalf of the American boy who gets into trouble, and he is considered the greatest authority of the country on the question of proper jurisdiction for the bad boy. Others prominent in this play will be Horace A. Wade, the nine-year-old author of "The Shadow of a Great Peril"; Louis Sargeant, who played in "Huckleberry Finn," and Lila Lee.

It has been decided the Sir Gilbert Parker play, "The Translation of a Savage," will have a different title for the screen version, but at the studio it is reported no definite name has been selected. George Melford has made all scenes for this play, and is next to film "The Old Homestead." This well known play was screened for the Paramount program in 1915, and that production was re-issued as one of the Success Series in 1918. The coming production will be more elaborate in every respect and the players selected to this time are Theodore Roberts, Mabel Julienne Scott and Monte Blue.

Tom Geraghty has completed the scenario for "Burglar Proof," and this is to be put in production by Major Morris Campbell as director and Bryant Washburn as the star.

Sam Wood has taken up the direction of "The City Sparrow," starring Ethel Clayton, and Joseph Heneberry has been making good progress in the first starring vehicle for Roscoe Arbuckle, "The Life of the Party."

Cecil B. de Mille is leaving for a business trip to New York in the next few days, and his coming production, "Something to Think About," will be held for cutting and editing until his return.

MAYER

TWO Louis B. Mayer-First National subjects are now in production. "Harriet and the Piper," is the vehicle for Anita Stewart, and Ward Crane who played opposite Miss Stewart in "The Yellow Typhoon," has been retained as leading man. Bertram Bracken of the Wm. H. Selig forces has been borrowed, together with his assistant Jack Layer, for the making of this film, and the supporting cast is made up of Charles Richmond, who arrived from New York last week for this special engagement; Irving Cummings, Myrtle Stedman, Byron Munson, Virgina Dare, Barbara La Mar Deely and Margaret Loomis. Monte M. Katterjohn, who wrote the continuity for "The Yellow Typhoon," is author of the screen version of "Harriet and the Piper," and is now at work on the third scenario for Miss Stewart which is an adaptation from a novel "Sowing the Wind."

"Old Dad," the next Mildred Harris Chaplin story is now being directed by Lloyd Ingraham. In this, George Stewart, brother of Anita, is the leading man.

The special production, "The Trail's End," adapted from a James Oliver Curwood story, "Isabelle," has been completed under the direction of Edwin Carewe with an all star cast. This film was made by Louis B. Mayer and Col. Wm. N. Selig.

GARSON

HARRY GARSON has selected locations in the vicinity of Santa Barbara known as "The Channels," for the making of many of the scenes for the Sir Arthur Wing Pinero drama, "Mid-Channel," in which Clara Kimball Young is to be seen in the role originally played by Ethel Barrymore in this play on the speaking stage. J. Frank Glendon, who played opposite Miss Young in "For the Soul of Rafael," is playing opposite Miss Young in her coming production, and Helene Sullivan who played a vampire role in the recent production, has also been retained for "Mid Channel."

Joe Neely, a California author, who has a number of stories to his credit, has been placed in charge of the reading department of the Garson studios

GOLDWYN

EVERYTHING is in readiness for the filming of the Ben Aimes Williams story of the sea, "The Black Pawl," which is to be a Reginald Barker production. Russell Simpson has been engaged to play the name role, and the supporting players will be John Bowers, Helene Chadwick and Alec B. Francis.

Director Victor Shertzinger and the Mabel Normand Company have gone to San Francisco for harbor scenes for "Rosa Alvira." One of the sensational stunts to be performed by Miss Normand is that of leaping from the mast of a ship into the ocean.

Carl Gerard has been selected for a role in the coming Jack Pickford films, "The Man Who Had Everything," now being directed by Al Green.

J. D. HAMPTON

COMPLETE all star cast for "Half a Chance," the initial Robert Thornby feature to be made at the Jesse D. Hampton studios, was announced this week to consist of Herbert Standing, Sidney Ainsworth, Wilton Taylor, Little Mary McAllister, and John Gough, who will play in support of the leads, Mahlon Hamilton and Lillian Hall. The continuity is an adaptation from the Frederick Isham novel of the same name.

Jesse D. Hampton has purchased the screen rights on the Marah Ellis Ryan story, "That Girl Montana," which will be used as a starring vehicle for Blanche Sweet, and will be made following the completion of the Kenneth B. Clark story, "Port O' Caprice." Miss Ryan is author of two other stories recently filmed, "Told In The Hills" and "For the Soul of Rafael."

E. L. Smith, general manager of Jesse D. Hampton Productions, returned this week from a trip of seven weeks to New York and principal cities in the east. One of the purposes of the trip was to confer with Howard E. Martin, the company's eastern representative, relative to stories suitable for Robert Thornby and Henry King special productions.

Hydroplane and airplane scenes were made with Blanche Sweet this week, when with Director Henry King the actress went to location on Catalina Islands in a hydroplane.

The Jesse D. Hampton Production, "Felix O'Day" in six reels with H. B. Warner, was given its final preview at the Hampton studios this week. This F. Hopkinson Smith story opens in the aristocratic circles of England, and later has a New York eastside atmosphere. It is spoken of as a powerful dramatic story of a man who is betrayed by his best friend, and devotes his life to the repayment of the debt.

UNIVERSAL

UNIVERSAL City units are busy in finishing the subjects recently started previous to the advent of the new supervising organization headed by Isadore Bernstein, and this week the information is given out that plan of production is shortly to be announced.

The work of filming the recently purchased South Sea Island story, "Marama" which was prepared for the screen by Doris Schroeder, was started this week by Director Norman Dawn. Edith Roberts is to be starred in this picture, and the supporting cast selected includes Jack Perrin, Richard Cummings, Lucille Moulton, Lillian Phillips, Noble Johnson and Arthur Jervis.

Rollin Sturgeon and the Ann Cornwall Company have been at Sacramento making river scenes for "The Girl in the Rain." In taking scenes from a raft, a near accident was narrowly averted by Cameraman Alfred Gosden who dived into the water and prevented the raft from striking a large projecting rock which would have caused the Allen Curtis has been engaged by Universal to direct the making of a series of comedies, and is now at work on the first titled, "A Hero 'n'everything." The cast includes Monte Banks, Mavis Mantill and others.

Information is given out that the next serial to be made by Universal to star Elmo Lincoln will give the big fellow the work of playing double roles, that of the hero and the heavy. Robert F. Hill is busy with the direction of this story, from continuity by Phillip Hubbard and Arthur H. Gooden.

George Ovey has been engaged to play in Rainbow Comedies, and his first appearance will be in "Should Waiters Marry?" He will be supported by an army of bathing girls, as well as Bud Jamison, Chai Hong, June Love and Eddie Lambert.

The animal comedy, "Diligent Lions and Delinquent Husbands," laid in a ladies' tailoring shop, has been completed, and Director Fred Fishbeck has commenced the making of "An Awful State."

Another Rainbow Comedy titled, "Stripes and Stars," is being directed by J. A. Howe; and Noel Smith is making "Love and Gasoline" with Harry Mann.

The Pacific Producing Company, recently organized, is filming a two reel western, "The Governor's Pardon," at Universal City. This was written and is being directed by William J. Craft, with Eileen Sedgwich and Joe Moore as the featured players.

Doris Schroeder is writing the continuity for "Out of a Clear Sky," recently purchased story which is shortly to be put in production.

The U. S. Custom inspector is now at Universal City laboratory to appraise the duty on film brought back by Director Henry McRae, and the Marie Walcamp Company from the Orient. The company will not be charged with film that is discarded.

Another story purchased by Universal is that by Edgar Franklin titled, "Once a Plumber" which will be used by Lyons and Moran following the filming of "La La Lucille," which has been put in continuity form by Phil Hearn.

NATIONAL

C. A. Willat, pioneer of the motion picture industry who is familiarly known to many as "Doc" Willat, was this week appointed general manager of the studios of the National Film Corporation of America by President H. M. Rubey. Willat has been actively connected with the industry since 1904, and later he built the Willat studios and laboratories at Fort Lee. Under his management, production of features will be resumed at the National plant, and announcement of the engagement of several stars is expected shortly. Victor A. Nulty will continue as production manager of the National.

Plans for the making of the National serial, "The Son of Tarzan," were changed this week when it was definitely decided to have Jack Hoxie continue in western roles of feature productions instead of playing in this serial. The lead has not been selected to succeed Hoxie who is to begin on a five reel western subject within the next few weeks.

Work has already been started on "The Son of Tarzan" serial, the first scenes being made in a gigantic jungle set erected on an unimproved piece of ground adjoining the National studio which was recently leased to make possible greater producing activities planned by the National Company.

Victor A. Nulty, production manager of National, has engaged Fred Bennett to write a series of ten comedies which are to feature Buddy Post. The series will be released through Goldwyn. Bennett has just completed a series for the Hank Mann Comedies.

Pretty warm this week.

Will Rogers is teaching Jack Pickford to swing a rope.

Pete B. Kyne is going about in a new Marmon touring car.

Visalia, California, is being used by the Goldwyn Company as Jackson, Ohio, in "The Great Accident."

Bert Lytell this week finished his East Indian prince part, and enjoyed the first shave for five weeks.

Zane Grey's popular novels have been read by 650 million people in the United States alone, so we are told.

By this time the waiting world knows who the additional United Artists members are—thanks to Hi Abrams.

Director Reginald Barker became the victim of poison oak while filming location scenes for "The Branding Iron."

Arthur Rossen has joined the ultra rich film class and purchased a building site of two acres in Beverly Hills.

Eugene B. Lewis now hangs his hat at the Ben B. Hampton studios. Eugene is going to write some scripts for B. B.

B. B. Hampton has purchased an airplane to transport film and other light weight supplies to companies on location.

Ruth Stonehouse is going to introduce Turquoise blue pajamas veiled with Black net in "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath."

Harvey Gates was seen playing a new kind of South Sea Island instrument at the Kosmik studios this week. No casualties were reported.

Now that a company is filming the Bible, we are informed the motion picture industry is in for a house cleaning and some new Kalsomine on the back fence.

Claire Adams has refused a contract offered by the Melbourne Cinema Company, which means that Claire doesn't care whether she's in a wet or dry country.

The 1920 crop of personal P. A.'s is increasing. Our daily mail is becoming badly littered up, all of which requires the purchase of a larger wastebasket.

Lloyd B. Carleton has taken out the megaphone and dusted it off, and is now stirring up the air in the vicinity of the old Bernstein studios in Boyle Heights.

The most recent mistaken identity story to reach our sanctum is that relating to May Allison. Even the people on the lot don't know her in her present make-up.

Sam Rork was so intent upon picking out all his nifty clothes to take to Chicago, that he missed the train Sunday morning, and therefore didn't get away until Monday.

If Cullen Landis ever writes the story of his life, we are informed he might title it "From Truck Driver to Movie Star." Five years ago he was honking a horn on a truck.

Ora Carew has nothing to do this week but play in scenes on Mount Baldy during the day, and then motor sixty miles back to Los Angeles to make personal appearances in the evening.

Reports reach us that Irene Rich is catching all the trout in Ventura County. The press agent evidently doesn't know that the open season for trouting does not begin until May 1.

David Butler has been playing such good hand ball that he threatens to break into the championship class, thereby having the pleasure of playing for a handsome cup given by the L. A. A. C.

Just because an elephant refused to go under a big arch of an East Indian set, Cleo Madison was forced to ride the beast up and down the setting for four hours, and then she claimed sea-sickness.

Sid Grauman claims he booked the Victor Kramer release of Charles Chaplin in "The Champion" on the merits of the picture, even though he advertised it, "A picture that proves that Charley can fight."

Stuart Paton has a pair of gold cuff buttons he received for appearing as Mathis in "The Bells" before the late King Edward and English royal family. Paton was then known as "Scotland's Tragedian."

When Lyons and Moran complete "La La Lucille," they are going to film, "Once a Plumber," which is said to be decidedly appropriate for Lee Moran, and which causes the comedian to inquire, "What do you mean?"

Tod Browning had a tooth pulled the other day, and the dentist became so enthusiastic he broke Tod's jaw, all of which means that Tod will be forced to hiss at his actors and actorines during the direction of scenes.

Olive Thomas' pet goat was marooned on a rock in the Pacific at Laguna last week, and the director found it necessary to restrain the actress from rushing in to rescue the cute little animal. No casualties were reported.

Among those who took part in a Bowery cafe scene for Selznick "Stop That Man," were Spike Robinson, Al Kaufman, Terry Keller, Boat-Nose Mullin, Broken-Nose Murphy, Flat-Nose Reese, Rat-Eye Kirby, Chuck Sampson, Baldy Williams and Tin-Ear Shales.

There was quite an exodus from our town Monday when several of our well-known film men beat it for the First National Convention. Those who took the Charley Pike Special were Sam Rork, Charles Christie, Louis B. Mayer, A. S. Kirkpatrick and others.

When Director Norman Dawn saw Edith Roberts in her Hula grass skirt for a South Sea Island picture he said, "Those clothes make you look shorter." Whereupon Edith replied, "Yes, but I am afraid they will make the men in the picture look longer." which is a cruel way of putting it.

Dear Exhibitors and Everybody:

Eight weeks, a few thousand dollars, a heap of tin-horn stocks sets, redressed, a "Masked Mystery" a female lead — and the average "Serial" is wished on you!

I've already spent sixty thousand smacks and three months on the first six episodes of my serial, "The Hope Diamond Mystery."

Say! My sets alone will cost one hundred thousand dollars; my company is headed by Grace Darmond and George Chesebro and Stuart Paton is directing; May Yohe, formerly Lady Francis Hope, wrote the plot and Acts in it ——— Believe me, I am tickled to death — I've got an honest-to-goodness serial-chock-full of power and pull — coming along the home stretch!

I will be East with the reel goods as soon as I get good and ready.

So long

The first of the two reel "Sheriff Nell" series of western comedies being made at the National studios for Marion H. Kohn Productions, Inc., will be finished this week. This series features Polly Moran, and in them the former Keystone comedienne will revive the character she made famous previously.

Marion H. Kohn is having a number of new designs in one piece bathing suits made by a Los Angeles modiste for use in the sixth of the "Smiling" Bill Jones comedies which is now in the making.

HERE AND THERE

COMPLETE cast for the initial production of Kosmik Films, Inc., "The Hope Diamond Mystery," has been announced and includes Grace Darmond and George Chesebro as featured players, supported by a cast of exceptionally well known people, including Carmen Phillips, Harry Carter, Dot's Karloff, William Marion, Ethel Shannon, William Buckley and Captain C. Clayton. The serial is an adaptation from the story written by May Yohe, formerly Lady Frances Hope, and the continuity is being prepared by Harvey Gates. Charles Goddard and John B. Clymer. The production is to be supervised by L. A. Wheeler and Stuart Paton is in charge of the direction. Sam De Vall, formerly technical superintendent for D. W. Griffith, has been engaged to supervise the construction of the series of settings necessary. The one now in the course of building is that representing an East Indian temple which, it is stated, will cost $10,000.

The D. N. Schwab Productions, Inc., has purchased the screen rights for story, "Benny and Her Familee," which is to be the third story for David Butler. The company is now at work in completing "Smiling All the Way," under the direction of Fred J. Butler. The present subject has Helen Scott as leading woman, she taking the role of an Embryo poetess of the Greenwich Village type.

The Willat Productions, Inc., recently formed by "Doc" and Irving Willat, has leased space at the National Film Corporation's studio in Hollywood and plan to shortly begin the making of the first of the four productions to be made for release through W. W. Hodkinson. The first production will be an adaptation from the F. N. Nescott novel, "Debney Todd." Irvin V. Willat, who was associated with Thomas H. Ince for several years prior to and since his returning from the army as a director, and who was in charge of the filming of the Hobart Bosworth-Ince Special, "Behind the Door," is president and general manager of this new organization, and will direct the making of the four pictures.

The producing organization of the Clermont Photoplay Corporation has begun the filming of another Lloyd B. Carleton production for Selznick Enterprises which will be "Mountain Madness," a story of the Virginia hills, by Anna Alice Chapin, author of "The Eagle's Mate" which proved such a successful vehicle for Mary Pickford. At the present time the company is working at an old studio in East Los Angeles, but within the next few weeks will move to their new plant which is now being built on Sunset Boulevard, near Gower street in Hollywood. The cast selected for this Carleton production includes Mignon Anderson, Ora Carew, Howard Miller and Edward Coxen.

Director George L. Cox, in charge of making the special production at the American Film Company studio at Santa Barbara, has just completed the making of "Blue Moon," adapted from a recent Bobbs Merrill book, and is now filming "Whispering Smith," adapted from the story of that name by Frank Spearman. The cast selected for this subject includes Irene Rich, Kathleen O'Connor, Charles Clary, James Gordon, Robert Walker, Alfred Ferguson, Frederick Monley and others.

SCREENCRAFT, INC., recently organized in California, has leased the Essanay studios at Culver City, and are preparing to film a seven reel metaphysical story entitled, "The Great Physician," which will feature Robert McKim and Rhea Mitchell.

Orpheum to Be Entirely Remodelled and New Ventilating System Installed

Fond du Lac Theatre Will Not Be Recognized When Decorators and Structural Workers Finish

THE Orpheum theatre, Fond du Lac, Wis., owned by William E. Ainsworth, is being remodeled at an expense of $25,000, and when reopened on June 1 in its beautiful and enlarged form will be one of the most attractive picture houses in Wisconsin.

The plans for the remodeling, which was begun the second week in April, provide for the extension of the building some 35 feet, or to the full depth of the lot, 120 feet and the utilization of the second story as well as the main floor for theatre purposes.

The structure will be fireproof throughout, the construction being of brick, concrete and steel. The projection room will be entirely of steel and concrete.

No change will be made in the lobby, but the foyer will be widened and made longer, this being made possible through the removal of the side stairway which now leads to the flats on the second floor Separating the foyer from the main auditorium will be plate glass windows in mahogany settings.

From either side of the foyer a stairway will rise to the mezzanine floor from which a full view may be obtained of the theatre below. At the east end of the mezzanine floor and extending the entire width of the building will be the ladies' rest room, hung with rich draperies and furnished in wicker. Mr. Ainsworth's private office will be located on this floor.

From the mezzanine floor another double stairway will rise to the balcony, landing patrons at the middle of the balcony incline. There will be seating for 240 on this floor with two boxes of six chairs each. The ceiling clearance of the balcony will be ten feet at its lowest point and the balcony will extend 40 feet over the main part of the theatre.

The entire lower floor will be finished in mahogany and green and the floor itself will be constructed on the "dip" plan, which will give to each patron an unobstructed view of the stage. All steps will be eliminated even at the entrance and at the rear exits of which there will be two, one at either side of the stage.

There will be a 28-foot clearance to the ceiling at the lowest point on the first floor and a 38-foot clearance to the highest point.

A complete roof ventilating system will be provided. In addition to this two large suction fans will be installed, thus providing plenty of ventilation and an abundance of fresh air all the time.

The decorating scheme throughout will be old rose, dull grey and ivory, while a clever panel effect with Corinthian pillars and cameo center design will add to the attractiveness of the house. The side walls will be of stucco handsomely decorated.

Situated in the grills and on either side and also above the stage will be the pipes and other equipment of the new Bartola organ which is to be the largest the concerns makes and which will cost $10,000. This organ will be operated with a low wind pressure to give that soft and melodious tone so noticeable in the Bartola organ which has been in use in this theatre for some time.

A large picture screen, known as a Mazda Gold Fibre screen, will be installed as Mazda equipment is used throughout. The projection room, which is located at the extreme east end of the balcony will contain three modern machines, two for daily use and one for emergency purposes.

New leather upholstered chairs will be used installed throughout the building which will have a seating capacity of 750 or more than double that of the old theatre.

The plans for the remodeled theatre were drawn by K. S. Lapina of Chicago. The contract is held by the Immel Construction Co. of Fond du Lac. It is expected that the remodeling will not interfere with the exhibitions for the first three weeks. However, Mr. Ainsworth plans to close the theatre about May 1 for a month reopening on June 1.

Mr. Ainsworth became proprietor of the Orpheum four years ago. Under his management the patronage has steadily increased the business for the first three months of the present year being double that for the same period in 1919

Strand in Remodelled Form Stands Out as One of Dubuque's Finest Theatres

Formerly an Unimposing Structure of Brick but Now Finished Throughout in White

THE most modern, up-to-the minute theatre in Dubuque, Ia. is, without question, the Strand, owned and managed by the Bradley and Maclay Real Estate Co. The Strand, or the New Strand, as it should properly be called, was opened to the public October 16, after almost a year's remodeling, caused by its having been gutted by fire two years previous.

The theatre, formerly a gloomy red brick building, has been refinished in pure white, with the result that its simple beauty attracts the attention of all passers by. Great electric lamps illuminate the building, and the bills are announced by means of a mammoth electric changeable letter sign. There are plenty of exits and entrances, with panic-proof latch bolts on each door.

The interior decoration is a work of art. The lobby is of fine tile of blue and white design, while the woodwork is mahogany. The ticket booth is conveniently located to one side, leaving the remainder of the lobby for attractive displays. One enters through swinging doors, into the sub-lobby, and from thence either to the theatre proper or to the balcony. The floors of the entire theatre are carpeted to match the other furnishings; the walls and ceilings are tinted in tan and gold—indeed, a combination of rare beauty. The chairs are the most comfortable for theatre use and are silver grey leather upholstery.

Broad stairways on either side of the inner lobby lead to the balconies, where the same pains have been taken for beauty and comfort as for the downstairs. Miniature floor lamps serve as a guide to the theatregoers who enter during the showing of a picture. On the right landing, before the entrance to the balcony is a cozy nook, with chairs, settee and reading lamp, where patrons may wait, if they so desire until the beginning of the next performance.

The Keller Electric Company has installed modern indirect lighting system, and in so doing have arranged to combine serviceability with art. The screen is set rather back on a fair sized stage, and half hidden lights of torquoise blue give it the necessary light and produce a most artistic effect. A fire-proof picture booth is equipped with two of the latest model Simplex projecting machines and the remainder of the mechanical devices of the theatre are in excellent condition.

The Strand has not an orchestra, but the installation of a $10,000 Kimball pipe organ, with orchestra attachment, furnishes so excellent a substitute that the theatre's patrons have no desire for an orchestra. The organ is played by a first class musician, whose excellent music attracts not a little patronage of his own.

The Strand was remodeled under the direction of James Gregory, and the electrical end was left to the Keller Electric Company. The first class condition of the Strand is due, in a great measure to their efforts to carry out every detail of the plans of the management.

Since its opening the Strand has shown nothing but first-run pictures, and is now a splendid example of a theatre which endeavors to give its patrons the best.

Oil Burning Equipment for Theatres May Solve Problems of Many Amusement Places

The Allen Theatre in Winnipeg Boasts of One of First Installations of This Nature

It may be true that the supply of crude oil in this country will dwindle to nothing in the next ten years, but one thing is fairly certain—the oil supply of today is more regular and dependable than the coal supply. That is one of the reasons that caused the builders of the Allen theatre in Winnipeg to decide on an oil-burning heating equipment. There are other reasons, such as the absence of dust and ashes, the ease of regulation and the plentiful supply of heat, all of which are of importance in Canada where the winters are anything but mild.

It is not our intention to go into the technical details of the type of oil burners used at the Allen, but we do wish to explain their workings so that other prospective builders of theatres will have a general idea of the layout of a heating system using oil as its fuel.

Fig. 1 shows one corner of the boiler room with the blower fan driven by a motor, the latter shown at the extreme edge of the illustration. This turbine fan supplies several thousand cubic feet of air per minute at 4 to 5 ounces of pressure, to the burners. The air is required in order to mix with the oil and produce an inflammable mixture. Smaller pipes will be noticed leading from a point just below the boiler door. These conduct the oil from the reservoir to the burners. The reservoir is a steel storage tank from which the fuel oil is pumped by means of a small motor-driven pump.

Fig. 2 shows the burner itself. The large pipe is the one leading from the air pump and the small one is the oil feed pipe. The oil passes through the center of the gun and is discharged into the inside of the cup, which is shown detached, at the lower right-hand corner of the photograph. The air, which enters through the large pipe, also passes up the gun and drives the oil cup at a high rate of speed as it passes through the vanes inside the cup. This rotation of the oil cup causes the oil to be broken up into a fine film and atomized as it is discharged from the outer end. The air exhausted through the turbine mixes with the oil and produces a combustible mixture.

The rotary type of machine shown in Fig. 3, operates somewhat differently. The motor at the left revolves the long shaft and the burner head, by means of gearing in the gear box.

The fuel oil is fed to the machine by a pump and then passes through a pipe which you see entering towards the bottom of the gear box. It then passes up an oil spindle which you see lying in front of the picture and is discharged from a spout into the burner head which revolves about four thousand revolutions a minute. The oil, by centrifugal action, is thrown upwards over the outwardly tapering face of the burner and discharged between the air vanes. The upper and lower set of vanes on the burner create the air supply so that there is merely an outwardly moving film of oil discharged between two outwardly moving layers of air.

Referring again to picture No. 2, the circular air valve is held up as long as air is passing into the burner and this holds the lever handle in such a position that the burner is kept in forward position on the rack. At the same time the segmental rack into which the oil valve adjusting lever is set is also held in position. As soon as air is cut off the oil valve handle automatically closes and at the same time the burner is automatically pulled back out of the fire.

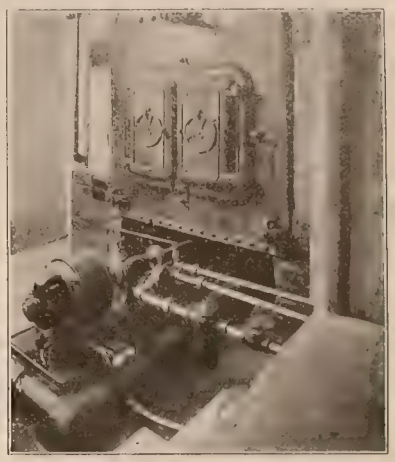

Fig. 4—Installation of rotary type of machine similar to one installed at Allen theatre

The oil burning equipment described was designed, patented and installed by the Fess Oil Burners of Canada, Ltd. This particular installation was the first made in the vicinity of Winnipeg and its operation is being watched with great interest by theatre men and theatre architects.

Oil burners can generally be used in high-class residential sections where soft coal is prohibited and for this reason the successful outcome of the Allen heating plant may lead to the adoption of oil burners in many of the newer theatres to be erected in exclusive neighborhoods.

A Page Showing the Tendency in Modern Lobby Design

The magnificent lobby of the Capitol theatre in New York would have been a wonderful sight in b l a c k and white, but in its colors of cafe au lait and gold it is proving to be one of the show places of the city.

Contrasting to a certain extent the quiet tones of the Capitol, the lobby of the new Brooklyn Strand with its high colors carried out in the style of the Pompeian period exhibits a lavishness seen in but few other buildings in this country.

Singapore Theatres Well Housed

Singapore prides itself on having three movie houses. They are the Palladium, Liberty Hall and the Empire Cinema. These theatres are furnished with pictures about the same time that they are shown in the States.

The Strait Settlements is a hotbed of movie fans. The exhibitors are imbued with western ideas and herald their pictures widely with posters, throw aways and other advertising schemes. They also have learned the value of theatre "fronts."

K. W. Tann, the native manager of the Universal branch, reports that all that is necessary is to announce a Universal serial and the theatres are packed.

Toledo's Million Dollar House

Toledo is to have a million dollar movie house, to be known as Zorn's Million Dollar Capitol Theatre. It will seat 2,500 persons and is to be designed along the lines of the Capitol theatre in New York City.

Edward Zorn, who has been manager of the Temple theatre in Toledo for years, and Joseph Fanning of the Temple staff, are interested with E. P. Severcool and E. B. Edmonds, Toledo Hotel men.

The new theatre will be opposite the Temple and beside the Federal Building. A big restaurant, and other business houses are occupying the new theatre site. Work will start within a few months, it is thought.

Mr. Zorn, together with several Toledo architects, is planning a trip to some of the country's largest theatres.

Zorn's Million Dollar Capitol theatre will be five stories high, built of steel and white terra cotta. There will be a large circular mezzanine with a nursery and maid in attendance. Beautiful marble stairs will lead to the mezzanine. The lot on which the theatre will be built has a 121-foot frontage and is 120 feet deep. It is in the heart of the business district and on St. Clair street—Toledo's theatre row.

Typhoon Fan Company Sales

The recent warm weather throughout the South, has convinced theatre owners that it is time to install their cooling apparatus for the coming summer, and, during the past week, the Typhon Fan Company of New York have closed contracts to equip the following theatres with the Typhoon Cooling System.

Howard theatre, Atlanta, Ga., Royal theatre, S. A. Lynch Enterprises, San Antonio, Tex.; Rex theatre, Sumpter, S. C.,; Bijou theatre, West Palm Beach, Fla.; Capitol theatre, Moultrie, Ga.; Spohn theatre, Goshen, Ind.; Empress theatre, Wichita Falls, Dallas , Tex.; Lucas theatre, Savannah, Ga.; Georgia Amusement Co. theatre, Athens, Ga.; Strand theatre, Rome, Ga.; Princess theatre, Henderson, N. C.; Criterion Amusement Co., Chattanooga, Tenn.; Royal theatre, Wilmington, N. C.

Notes of New Theatres

Anthony Corlets of Wilmington, Del., states that he expects to open his New Victor Theatre at 1715 W. 4th Street about the first of June. He is installing a Hallberg generator, Minusa screen, Powers motor driven machine, and will employ an orchestra to furnish the music.

Benny Freed, formerly a representative of the Fox Exchange of Phila., is now managing the Lyric Theatre at Summit Hill, Pa.

Under the able management of Chas. Campbell, the Y. M. C. A. Theatre at Coatesville has been doing a capacity business. The business has increased to such an extent that the Association has decided to make some extensive alterations, adding ten feet to the width of the theatre, gaining three hundred additional seats.

W. F. Boogar, formerly of Philadelphia but now operating a hotel at Coatesville, Pa., has plans for an 1800-seat theatre in connection with eight store rooms. On account of scarcity of material and labor shortage, he has deferred building until now. He reported to the writer that work will be started at once and when the building is completed will represent a $240,000 investment. Mr. Boogan first started in the moving picture business on Market Street in Philadelphia about 15 years ago and is interested in one or two of the theatres in Philadelphia at the present time.

George Brown of Parsons, Pa., states that he will soon commence work on remodelling and enlarging his Palace Theatre.

The citizens of Frankford, Del., are proud of the new 500-seat theatre erected by Benj. M. Jones, which will open during the week of Mar. 29.

Advance Facts on New Buffalo Theatre

THE new Rivoli theatre in Broadway, just beyond Fillmore avenue, Buffalo, is nearing completion and could be opened in June, but it has been decided by Joseph Kozanowski, builder of the house, and Harry Dixon, city salesman for Realart, who will manage the theatre, to postpone the opening until September 1.

While the public will not be given a treat in neighborhood picture presentation this summer because of this decision and while the features of the house are being kept secret until opening day, the Motion Picture News representative is able to give some facts about this big theatre in one of the most thickly populated sections of the Queen City of the Lakes.

The Rivoli has a frontage on Broadway of 85 feet and a depth of 145 feet. It will have a seating capacity of 2,000 and when completed will represent an outlay of close to $200,000. The house is constructed of red tapestry brick with white terra cotta trimmings. The 2,000 seats are upholstered in leather and the number is divided between the first floor and a large balcony. The floors will be covered with rich carpets.

The music will be furnished by a 15-piece orchestra and large pipe organ. The stage, upon which will be erected an elaborate scenic setting, will be 22 by 12 feet. There will be a double-deck foyer and a mezzanine floor. A large ventilating plant will force the bad air out and bring the fresh atmosphere in. The lighting system will be indirect throughout. There will be two large ticket offices in the lobby, each of which will have automatic machines. The throw in the Rivoli will be 137 feet and two new Simplex machines are now being installed by Al Becker of the Becker Theatre Supply Company, local agents.

Mr. Dixon, who will manage the Rivoli, is a veteran in the film game, having managed several local neighborhood houses. He is also former manager of a local exchange and just now is acting as city salesman at the Realart office, where he will remain until a few weeks before the Rivoli opening.

Development of the Mazda Lamp for Projection Purposes

A Series of Interest to All Projectionists

This is the third installment of an exhaustive article on the Mazda Lamp and its application to Projection. The author is H. Freeman Barnes, which is proof enough that the data is authoritative.

The importance of correct adjustment is shown by the following table (from actual measurements):

	Light on screen
Mirror properly set	100%
Mirror ⅛" too far to one side	78%
Mirror ⅛" too far to front	85%
Mirror ⅛" too high or low	73%

The condensers in use with the arc system when employed with Mazda projection were found to be unsuitable. First, they were of too long a focus. If the focus could be shortened, i. e., the lamp brought nearer the face of the condenser, more light would be picked up. Second, the image of the arc, as focused on the aperture plate with plano condensers functions well in putting a uniform picture on the screen; with the Mazda lamp, however, the filament and its mirror image are not uniform enough in brilliancy to allow it being focused in this manner—so some scheme had to be devised which would break up these images sufficiently to secure a uniform screen illumination.

Fig. 5—Mirrors of 7 in. and 5 in. diameters

The projection lens picks up any image which is at or near the aperture plate and reproduces it on the screen. Hence, if the light at the aperture plate is uniform, the light on the screen will be likewise. If the light, however, is uneven at the aperture plate, the screen itself may be streaked.

The prismatic or corrugated (8) condenser fulfills these requirements. Only one condenser is used—instead of two as with the arc (9). As contrasted with the comparatively long focus of plano condensers, the back focus of the prismatic, i. e., the focus on the light sides, is 2½", thus bringing the light source much nearer and increasing the amount of light picked up.

Naturally, the shorter we can make the focus of our condenser, the more light will be picked up. For instance, if we had a stream of water issuing from the nozzle of a hose in the form of a broad spray, if we attempted to catch a portion of this water in a bucket, the closer we place the bucket to the nozzle the more water would be collected.

It is the same with light and a condenser. Light issuing from a filament is analogous to the water coming from the nozzle of the hose. The condenser might be lightened to the bucket, and catches the rays of light, as the bucket catches the water.

The corrugations or rings on the surface of the condenser help to break up the filament image, thus insuring an even screen. Where plane condensers are used for projection with a Mazda lamp, the filament itself must be thrown out of focus and fairly even screen illumination is thus assured by the blurring of the image.

With stereopticon projection, on the other hand, a set of plano condensers must be used—and hence two sets of condensers are supplied; the corrugated for motion picture work, and plano condensers for stereopticon projection. With stereopticon projection, the projection lens is designed to pick up any image from a point directly in front of the condensing lens itself, so that if the condensing lens is perfectly clear, as the plano lens for example, the light on the screen will be uniform. Where an attempt is made, however, to use a prismatic lens, for stereopticon projection, the corrugations or rings of the condenser itself will be noticed upon the screen.

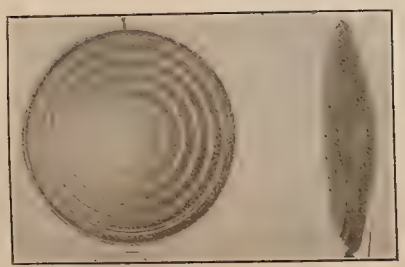

Fig. 6—Two views of the new prismatic condenser

The projection lens used with motion pictures, however, focuses not upon the condenser itself, but upon the aperture. As the distance between the aperture and condenser is comparatively great, the corrugated condenser is more than enough out of focus—its corrugations therefore do not show on the screen, but, on the other hand, help to even up the screen illumination.

The prismatic condenser is 4 7/16 in. in diameter and 2½ in. focus, on the light source side. It can be placed from 6½ to 8 in. away from the aperture. The smooth or convex side faces the lamp. The corrugated or concave side is placed towards the film.

It has been determined from many experiments that the prismatic condenser will "pick up" light from an area approximately 4/10 of an inch in diameter—a circular area.

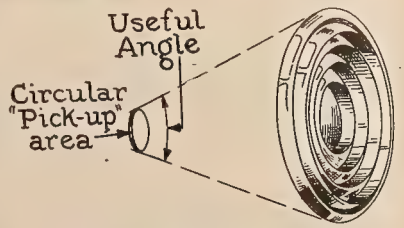

Fig. 7—Showing "pick-up" area and "useful angle" of light

In other words, at a place exactly 2½ in. back from the condenser there is a circular area 4/10 of an inch in diameter from which the light will be collected by the condenser and passed through the aperture plate, and finally through the projection lens on to the screen. In order to cover a circle 4/10 of an inch in diameter, it is necessary to make the filament 4/10 of an inch square.

Light rays from any filament outside this area, while striking the condenser will be bent in such a way that they will not pass through the aperture, and conse-

Work and Power

Whenever the resistance of an electric circuit is overcome energy is consumed and work is done. The mechanical analogy of this is the effect of a force acting thru a certain distance. A force may be exerted on a body but unless some motion takes place there will be no work done. Thus a generator may be revolving and producing an electromotive force, but unless an external circuit is connected to the terminals of the machine and a current caused to flow no work will be performed by the generator.

Energy is the ability to do work, thus electrical energy is the ability of a circuit to perform electrical work. Just as a weight can be made to perform work in falling from one level to another so an electric circuit performs work as a result of a fall in potential. Also as it is necessary to perform work in order to raise a body from one level to another so in the case of a generator it is necessary to supply work from some source in order to establish a difference of potential.

Energy may be stored up, and the energy thus stored may be measured in the same units as work, and is numerically equal to the work which will be performed. The energy stored in a certain body of water is the amount of work which it will produce in falling between two different levels, also the electrical energy stored in a storage battery may be measured by the amount of work which will be performed when connected to an electric circuit.

Electricity may be considered as a medium for the transmission of power or energy in a similar way as performed by belts and fluids. The unit of electrical work or energy is the Joule, which is the amount of work performed in causing one coulomb of electricity to flow thru a difference of potential of one volt. The coulomb is defined as the current flow of one ampere per second so that the equation for electrical work may be written: Joules = Volts × Amperes × Time (seconds.)

Work is independent of the time consumed, as it is necessary to exert the same amount of energy to raise a weight a given distance in one hour's time as would be required to accomplish the same result in one second. The unit of expressing mechanical work is the foot-pound, which is the energy required to raise a weight of one pound one foot distance.

Power is the rate at which energy is expended or the rate of doing work. The unit of electrical work is the product of the unit of work by the unit of time, or a joule per second, and is known as the watt (W). The following equation may thus be obtained: Electrical power = Electrical work/Time, or by substituting the equation of work, Electrical power = Volts × Amperes × Time/Time or W = E × I. Thus if we know two of the quantities of a circuit the third may easily be found from the derived equations I = W/E, and E = W/I.

The rate at which mechanical work is expended is designated by the horse-power, which is the energy necessary to raise a body weighing 33,000 pounds one foot in one minute. Thus the horse power developed by any machine is equal to the foot-pounds of work done per minute divided by 33,000 or the foot-pounds of work done per second divided by 550.

In order to compare electrical and mechanical work it is desirable to establish a relation between the watt and the horse-power so that the capacity of a generator or motor may be determined in horse-power. The following relation has been found by experiment to be true:

One watt equals .7375 foot-pound per second, and one foot-pound per second equals 1.356 watts

As has been already stated a mechanical horse-power is equal to 550 foot pounds per second, so that the horse-power in electrical energy is equal to 550 divided by .7375 or 746 watts. Thus the watts input when mechanical power is given may be obtained by multiplying by 746. Also the horse-power developed by an electrical machine may be found by dividing watts by 746.

In speaking of the capacity of the larger types of electrical machines the term kilowatt (k. w.) is generally used. The kilowatt is equal to 1000 watts or 1.34 h. p.

Since the energy represented a Joule is quite small, a more general term is the watt-hour, or the product of volts × amperes × hours, and a larger term the kilowatt-hour or 1000 watt-hours. The dials of instrument used in recording the amount of energy supplied to a customer for light and power are calibrated in watt-hours.

The following problems are given as examples of the power expended in electrical circuits:

Problem

An arc operating on a 110 volt circuit draws 50 amperes, find the power consumed.

If the drop around the rheostat in the circuit is 50 volts, find the per cent of useful energy.

If the cost of electrical energy is 6 cents per kilo-watt hour, find the cost of operation for 8 hours.

Solution

The power consumed in the above circuit is obtained by the equation W = E × I, or 110 × 50 = 5500 watts.

The line voltage is 110 and the drop around the rheostat 50 volts, giving 60 volts as the drop across the arc which with a current flow of 50 amperes gives 3,000 watts as the power consumed in the arc. The total consumption from the line was found to be 5,500 watts, so that the useful energy of that used by the arc is 3,000/5,500 or 54.5%.

The power consumed in 8 hours by the above circuit would be 5,500 × 8 = 44,000 watt-hours or 44 kilowatt hours, which at a price of 6 cents per k. w. h. would give the cost of operation as $2.64.

Problem

A hoist raises a weight of 2,000 lbs. a distance of 300 ft. in one minute. Find the work done and the power expended.

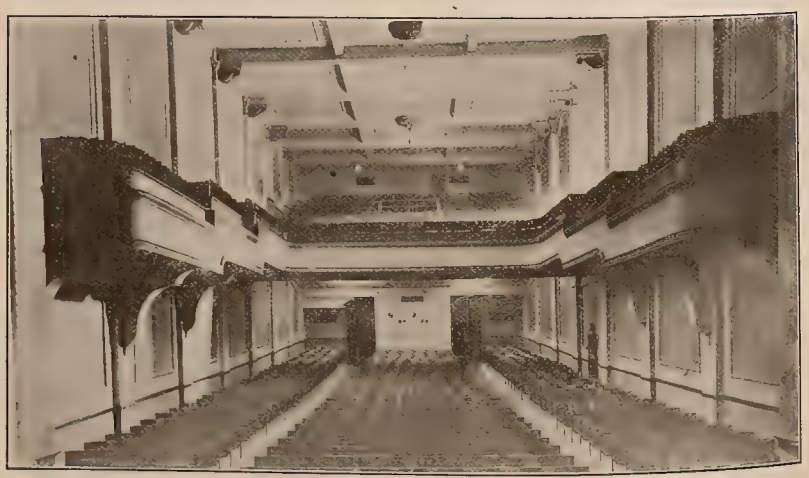
If the efficiency of the hoist is 75 per cent and that of the driving motor 90 per cent, find the horse-power of the motor and the current drawn from the line if the voltage is 110.

Solution

The work done is the product of the weight of the body and the distance thru which it is moved, or 2,000 × 300 = 600,000 foot-pounds.

The power expended in horse-power is equal to the foot-pounds of work performed per minute divided by 33,000. In this case 600,000/33,000 or 18.2 h.p.

With an efficiency of 75% the power input to the hoist would be 18.2/0.75 or 24.3 horse-power. This is equivalent to the output of the motor, which calculated in kilowatts would be 24.3 × 746/1,000 or 18.1 kw.



The motor has an efficiency of 90%, therefore the input in kilowatts would be 18.1/0.9 or 20 kw.

To obtain the current taken from the line we change the power consumed to watts and divide by the voltage, which gives 20,000 watts/110 volts or 182 amperes.

Problems to be Solved

29. A 32-candle power, 110-volts tungsten lamp requires 40 watts. What is the current taken by one lamp? Find the energy consumed for 15 lamps burning for an average time of 4 hours, and the cost of this energy if the rate is 6 cents per kw. hour.
30. A theatre is lighted by 50, 110-volt, 40-watt lamps, and the projection arc requires an average current of 50 amperes on the 110-volt circuit. Find the energy consumed and the cost per day at the rate of 7 cents per kw. hour, if the lights are used an average of 3 hours and the arc burning 7 hours.
31. The load on a 110-volt generator consists of two hundred 32-candle power, tungsten lamps, requiring 40 watts each, also a 10-h.p. motor which has an efficiency of 85 per cent.
    Find: The current taken by the load. The output of the generator in kw. The horsepower of the driving engine of the generator, the generator having an efficiency of 87 per cent.

Another point: the angle between the lines drawn from the filament to the edges of the condenser, constitutes the useful angle. The light that is shot outside of this angle does not fall on the condenser and hence cannot be utilized.

Thus, also, the mirror, which is placed behind the lamp to collect the rays shot in that direction, should be large enough in diameter to pick up this angle of light, as described above, and reflect it back.

Even though the mirror is made to cover more than this "useful angle" and even though it does reflect a larger angle of light, the amount of light in excess of this useful angle will not strike the condenser. It will be passed to the outside of the condenser, and consequently cannot be called useful light.

Howells Equipment Company Takes Larger Quarters

HOWELLS CINE EQUIPMENT COMPANY moved last week from the offices it has occupied with David P. Howells, Inc., into new and larger quarters in Suite 1110-1111 of the Godfrey Building, 729 Seventh avenue.

The spacious quarters which have been taken over by the Howells Cine Equipment Company have been remodelled, redecorated and refurnished, and the projection room in connection has been reconstructed and reequipped.

Howells Cine Equipment Company was organized but six months ago by David P. Howells and placed under the management of Joe C. Hornstein, widely known in the equipment trade. It was formed largely to handle equipment, supplies and accessories in connection with the Howells international film organization and it has grown and expanded far beyond original expectations.

The new quarters of the equipment company adjoin the executive offices of David P. Howells, Inc., on the 11th floor of the Godfrey Building, and the new arrangement provides the Howells export business with a private projection room as well as furnishing the equipment company with a demonstration room.

"The foreign demand for American equipment and American accessories has been almost as great as the foreign demand for American pictures," said Mr. Hornstein in duscussing the expansion of the company's business. "Theatres all over the world which as everybody knows are showing American films, are projecting them with American machines onto American screens, and in many instances the houses throughout are American equipped.

"We have been so able to organize our business since its inception that we are represented in every corner of the globe. A domestic business has been developed along with foreign trade until we simply outgrew the facilities and the space which we had in the Howells executive offices."

Mr. Hornstein is a pioneer in the film business. He has been projectionist and an exhibitor as well as an equipment specialist. He was one of the first to turn from the theatre to the equipment business.

Paper on Mazda Lamps in Portable Projectors

This paper by C. E. Egeler, to be read at the SMPE. Convention, takes up the extensive developments in the portable equipments for the projection of motion picture in places other than theatres have been dependent upon the improvements in the light projection, as well as on changes in the mechanism for handling the film. The principal efforts to obtain a maximum screen illumination have been:

(1) Use of the meniscus-convex combination of condenser lenses to utilize a maximum amount of the light emitted by the lamp.

(2) The use of higher speed objectives.

(3) The modification of the lamp bulb to permit placing the source close to the condensing lens.

(4) The determination of the best combination of lamp filament form and lens system.

The main types of machines are described. The main considerations affecting the performance of MAZDA lamps are enumerated, and their application in the design and the use of the machine in service are discussed.

White Light for Motion Picture Photography

THE foreign makers of white flame lamps have lagged consierably behind the American manufacturers. An English flame lamp called Truelight is interesting because four arcs are used in series on 220 volts, with the current reversing direction at each arc and carbons changing size to maintain a focusing effect. Some of the early German flame lamps are shown in Eders Handbuch der Photographie, page 452. They can be of no importance compared with the American lamps.

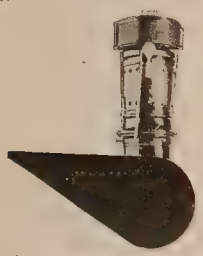

Fig. 13—Wohl Overhead

Another type of flame lamp is the spotlight lamps operated usually by hand. These are used in the same way as the ordinary theatre spotlight lamps, but unlike the theatre lamps the carbons used should be the white flame photographic carbons or the white flame searchlight carbons. Some movie directors have told the writer that using the white flame photographic carbons increased the photographic light about six times compared with ordinary projector carbons. The white A. C. Projector carbon is not as efficient for studio lighting, as the white flame photographic carbon. The flame searchlight has also entered the motion picture field with great success. It is often operated fifty feet away, and with currents of 120 to 150 amperes. We will next consider homemade flame lamps. Electricians in motion picture studios have to continually devise new effects for simulating lanterns, indoor lamps, fires, etc. In general, it is a great mistake to make an article if it can be found on the market, but there are times when it is an advantage to know how to make a flame out of other lamps. This we will next consider.

Fig. 14—Wohl Stand Lamp

Conversion of Enclosed Arcs to Flame Lamps

For some purpose a cheap lamp with adjustable current for changing the amount of light is convenient. In Fig. 15 and 16 are shown the electrical arrangements that the writer devised several years ago for doing this. The globes

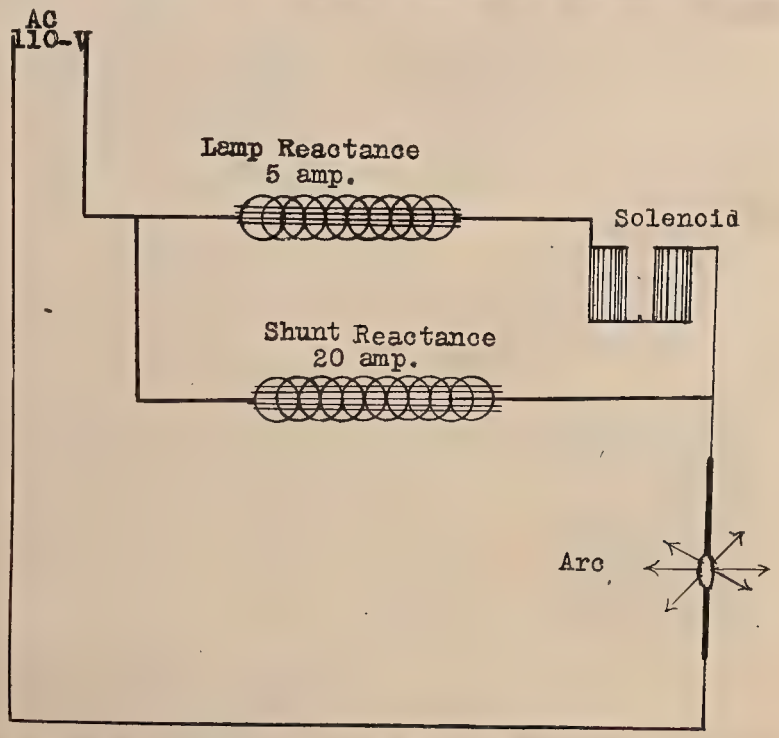

Fig. 16—Conversion diagram for changing alternating current enclosed arc lamps to high amperage flame arcs by reactance shunt should be removed from the lamps and where necessary the lower holders should be made rigid. All the electrical wiring should be arranged on one side of the arc, and then a resistance (or reactance can also be used on A C) is connected in

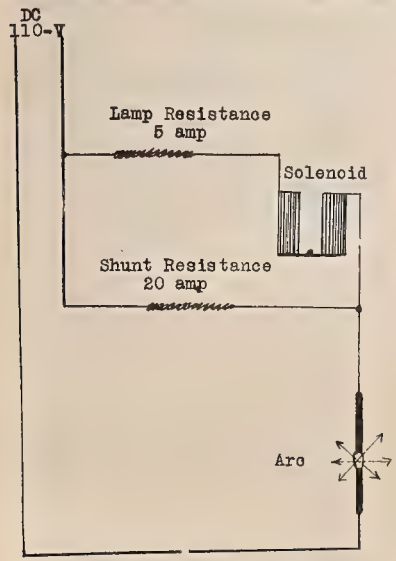

Fig. 15—Conversion diagram for Changing D. C. enclosed arc lamp to adjustable flame lamp

Long Life Multiple Trim Arrangement

A long life multiple trim arrangement for photographic white flame lamps is shown in Fig. 17 where a holder having ten trims was operated on a Macbeth photographic engraving lamp with its reflector detached. For many purposes doubling the trim would have great advantages and the writer believes a number of arc lamp companies will shortly put out lamps with multiple trims. They would be especially useful for overhead lighting and for blue printing.

We will turn to the consideration of the flame carbons which are the heart of the light production. A picture of the flaming arc is shown in Fig. 27.

Motion Picture Flame Carbons

The chief carbon used for photo-engraving and photography is the white flame carbon of which over a million a year are now being sold for this class of work. In the larger sizes a special star shaped core is used. The color of the light can, where necessary, be changed to suit the exact requirement without buying a new lamp or even a new screen, because the other flame carbons of different colors are available for these lamps when they are needed. The white flame is strictly a snowwhite light with a spectrum (Fig. 5) full of lines in its every part. This is most generally used. The pearl white is a light of little more suited for panchromatic and color photography. The color of its light is very close to that of ordinary sunshine. The yellow flame carbon gives a light rich in red and green, but having comparatively little spectrum yellow or blue. The sensation of yellow light is produced by the combination in the eye of the red and green light. The violet in this light is fairly strong. The red flame arc gives a light rich in red and in spectrum yellow, and has a fair amount of blue. The so-called "blue" flame carbons are designed to be especially rich in far ultra-violet beyond 3000° Angstrom units. This far ultra-violet is practically absent in sunshine and likewise the white flame arcs ordinarily used in photographic work. The near ultra-violet light is very important photographically with sunlight and skylight and with the white flame arcs. The ultra-violet of the white flame is largely in the region longer than 3500° Angstrom and it efficiently goes through ordinary glass.

An important improvement has been the use in photographic lamps of metal coated flame carbons especially on the holder end. This metal coating reduces the holder drop in voltage from about half a volt to 1/20 of a volt so that a holder designed for 5 amperes use can with metal coated carbons be used at 20 and 30 amperes with long excellent service.

American white flame carbons, both in our tests and those throughout the United States have shown 10 to 15 per cent better efficiency of light and longer life on the average than the foreign carbons. This is because of superior knowledge and skill that the American carbon manufacturers have as regards the making of these flame carbons. This condition of superiority has been manifested for several years.

Correction of a Kinematograph Lens

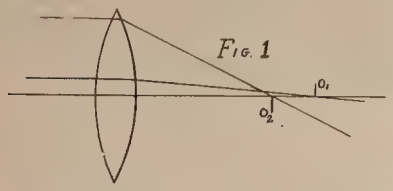
The seven conditions which must be as nearly fulfilled as possible are:

(1) Chromatic aberration; (2) Spherical aberration; (3) Sine condition; (4) Astigmatism; (5) Coma aberration; (6) Distortion; (7) The lens must have a certain aperture.

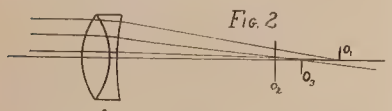
I will take the aberrations one by one, and shortly explain what they are, and how they affect the picture.



1. Chromatic aberration is due to the fact that blue light is more refrangible than red light. This effect shows itself by the various colored images being in various places along the axis, and of different sizes. This must be corrected as well as possible, at any rate the yellow image and blue image must be brought to the same place on the axis, since you focus your image with a mixture of colors in which the yellow orange is the strongest as far as visual effect is concerned, but you are taking your picture with the blue and violet light which is actinically much stronger than the visual rays.

The arrangement of the two images, blue and yellow, in this way disposes (if we do not take into account the correction required for apochromatic lenses such as are used for three-color work) of the chromatic aberration. I may here say that owing to a judicious selection of glasses for our Xpres, this lens is almost semi-apochromatic, as is shown by many examples of lenses we have supplied for taking pictures with three-color filters.

2. The spherical aberration has its seat in the spherical form at present employed for all surfaces of lenses, even the plane surface can be considered as a spherical surface with an infinitely long radius. There is no getting away from this aberration unless we were to use other than spherical curves for our lenses. Mathematically, this is quite possible, but practically—well, we are not there yet by a long way.



The effect of the aberration is plainly shown on the drawing, Fig. 1. A ray which passes through a lens near the center cuts the axis in O_1. One that goes through the margin of the lens will cut the axis at a point considerably nearer to the lens than the axial ray, namely, in O_2. In other words, if such a lens were required to give a picture, we could get one either by blacking out the margin and putting our plate in the position O_1, or by blacking out the center and putting our plate in the place O_2.

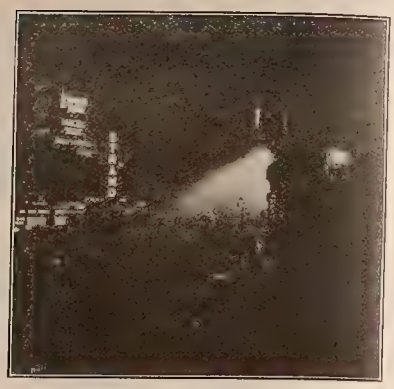
Fortunately for the designer the aberration goes in the inverse way when a negative lens is considered, and we have thereby the means of counteracting the spherical aberration of a positive lens. We combine a positive lens of low refractive index with a negative one of high refractive index, and in this way balance the aberration, but not quite. Some is left over, but in a peculiar form, as Fig. 2 will show. We have now brought the central and marginal rays together at O_1, but the rays falling into intermediate zones of the lens are still falling short of the desired point O_3. They meet somewhere between O_1 and O_3, according to what distance from the center ray they pass through the lens.

(To be concluded)

This residue of aberration cannot be got rid of entirely, and it behooves the designer to make it so small that it does not affect the picture. If the residual or zonal aberration (as it is called) is too large, the defect will show itself when focussing your picture with the full aperture, and taking it after having stopped the lens down. Lenses which have this defect must be focussed with the aperture with which the picture is going to be taken.

The zonal aberration is so small in the 3.5 Xpres that no precautions need be taken on this account.



3. Sine condition. The fulfilment of this condition is a sine qua non for photographic lenses of the highest quality. Its name is taken from certain points in the calculation; it means that the trigonometrical sines of certain angles should be in a certain ratio. What it all amounts to is this. All images produced by rays passing through the various zones of the lens aperture should be of the same size. In other words, if we get a certain size image on the plate when blacking out the margin of the lens, this same size image should be produced when blacking out the center of the lens and working with the margin.

Conquering the Night

A phenomenal motion picture in which the possibilities of photographic illumination were well demonstrated was made on the night of February 21st, during a howling blizzard.

This unusual feat was accomplished by the use of the Sun-light Arc. Lamps were placed on the top of Aeolian Hall, at the Bush Terminal Sales Building and the Capitol Theatre, at the opposite ends of the Great White Way at Times Square An area extending for more than ten city blocks was illuminated.

The men in charge of the lamps on the tops of these buildings report anything but an easy task. It was one of the worst storms of the winter and the combination of driven snow and terrific wind subjected the lights to one of the worst tests that could be conceived. But no trouble of any kind was evident during the hour and a half of continuous running.

To those who have been privileged to see the projection of the film the effect secured was marvelous. So successful was the lighting that it is possible to distinguish the familiar Black and White Taxis from those of other colors. Theatre goers were seen proceeding homeward in the sweeping snow and what was most astonishing was the fact that all their movements were normal. This was accomplished through the ability of the cameramen to secure adequate lighting and yet crank at normal speed.

The advantages of footage numbered negative film will immediately assert themselves in the final cutting and assembling of successive scenes.

Dan W. Barton, general manager of the Bartola Musical Instrument Co., Chicago

PROBABLY the only musical instrument designer today, who has had actual experience in playing pictures in theatre pits and who knows both the good and the bad conditions that have to be encountered in theatres as to climatic changes, dampness, etc., is Dan W. Barton, general manager of the Bartola Musical Instrument Company, who designed the Bartola and new Barton Pipe Organ. Likewise there are few men in the moving picture industry whose entire life has been spent in the show business, as has that of Dan Barton and few enjoy such a wide acquaintance in the trade.

The lure of the show called him so strongly that before he quit school he played in theatre orchestras and, at the age of sixteen, was "trooping" the cities of Wisconsin, Minnesota, North and South Dakota with an over-land Uncle Tom's Cabin Show and spent seventeen years playing "Uncle Tom's Cabin," "Ten Nights in a Bar-Room," carnivals, medicine shows, circuses and theatres.

He became interested in the picture end of the business when the industry started and was one of the first drummers that ever designed special sound effects to fit the picture We all remember the good old days when the stunt was to make every sound possible to accompany the reel and Dan Barton's trick was to create or invent the apparatus to produce the necessary sound. This probably was the start of the Bartola as this led him into the real musical end of the business, as the sound effect part of it soon passed away.

After trooping a long time on the road and diligently saving all he could, he spent it all in a short time experimenting with the Bartola. A company was organized to exploit the instrument but lasted only about a year and at the end Mr Barton found himself broke.

During this year, however, several Bartolas had been made, installed and were real successes and with this foundation, W. G Maxey was interested in the proposition and the present Bartola Musical Instrument Company, of which he is president, started and the necessary capital put into the organization, with the result that today it is one of America's leading makers of musical instruments for motion picture theatre use.

Most of our successful men have hobbies and Dan Barton finally acquired one, although in his early life he was so busy doing "two a day" with a parade every morning and resting up on Sundays, that he did not have time to acquire one then. During the last ten years, however, he had had two. One of them is Bartola, as, during that time he got up with it, worked all day with it, went to bed with it and then dreamed of it, and all theatre men are agreed that he has reason to be proud of his hobby and of his success with it. He started in by inventing the instrument, then organized the factory, trained the men how to build the special apparatus, then moved into the business management of the factory end of the enterprise and finally also took over the selling division Mr. Barton's second hobby and one which has made him one of the most popular men in the moving picture industry, is the point he makes of becoming personally acquainted with each purchaser of a Bartola or Barton Pipe Organ in order to see that his instrument is properly installed and kept in perfect condition, and that the association of the buyer with the Bartola Musical Instrument Company is as it should be.

In the past two years Mr. Barton's company has shown remarkable growth and the plant, although trebled in capacity, is kept working overtime to meet the demand for Bartolas and the new Barton Pipe Organ, which was recently put on the market, and already has become known as a splendid instrument.

Mr. William O. Dolan a Pioneer

EXHIBITORS throughout the country are today spending millions of dollars yearly for musical accompaniment to pictures. It is an indisputable fact that all expenditures must be justified from a practical and remunerative standpoint. Only five years ago money spent for music in the motion picture industry amounted to about 5 per cent of what is being spent today. Being aware of the above fact we believe we are entitled to ask one question? Who is responsible for the creation such continuous flow of money into the pockets of thousands of musicians and hundreds of music publishing houses. This prosperity if due to several aggressive men, "pioneer advocates of Better Music For The Film," Mr. William O. Dolan can justly be considered one of these "pioneers" who through constant and persistent aggressiveness has proved to certain exhibitors and to the public in general that music is not only an essential with the motion pictures, but a necessity.

Only a few years ago Mr. Dolan started as musical director in the Avenue Grand theatre, of Washington, D. C. His orchestra at that time was the typical nickeldom kind, piano, violin and drums. Today the Avenue Grand theatre has an orchestra of eleven men and as per information received from authentic sources we can say that this theatre is experiencing less difficulty in paying high wages to eleven men today that they did when they paid low wages to fewer men sever l years back. The above facts reveal a book, and to analyze the reasons why an eleven men orchestra is today replacing a three men orchestra would take too much space.

William A. Dolan

Mr. Dolan in most instances reviews the pictures for the purpose of setting musical accompaniments, or, he uses the various music cues issued by the film companies. Mr. Dolan has a music library of thousands of numbers and he is still constantly adding new material. In a recent conversation with Mr. Dolan, he admitted that every day brings forth conclusive proof that he has not as yet accumulated a library that could cover perfectly every conceivable angle of appropriately selecting music for pictures.

Persistency on the part of Mr. Dolan has developed the Avenue Grand theatre from a small house into a large house. This compelled the rival exhibitor to increase his orchestra. Whether he did this through his own realization or through competition makes absolutely no difference. Something was the cause for it. The reason we emphasize this point is to show that men of Mr. Dolan's calibre are of great value to the industry in general and are indirectly responsible for the fact that thousands and thousands of musicians are today employed in this particular phase of the industry and are deriving comfortable incomes.

The Complete Plan Book

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

"Vanishing Trails"

(Selig Serial - Fifteen Episodes Released by Canyon Pictures)

"VANISHING TRAILS" is a serial specializing in the mystery element, more than ghastly and terrorizing thrills. From the four episodes viewed we gather that almost the entire serial is laid in a western setting, where, while, the thrills are not as diversified in character as in some serials nevertheless lose none of their punch.

Franklyn Farnum plays the lead "Silent" Joe, the adventurer. He is going to satisfy most audiences, for in addition to his fulfilling all emotional requirements, he is well built and sufficiently athletic to accomplish some severe stunts. Mary Anderson plays opposite him and does very well, although we do not see overmuch of her in the first three episodes. Other members of the cast are thoroughly capable.

The mystery revolves around the murder of millionaire Stillwell, and the finding of the heir to his fortune. The action shifts from the metropolis to the wild west where the villain draws a dead line about the country of "vanishing trails." "Silent" Joe arrives in an effort to discover the murder and also to prove that he is the true heir. It is in these mountainous surroundings that Joe and the heroine meet with their adventures. They are aided by The Shadow, a demented scientist, with a cleverly trained dog, and some remarkable, death-dealing inventions. Excellent judgment has been shown in not making this character so impossible as to be absurd, as in the case of some "clutching hand" serial.

The sameness of the locale is the only objection possible, and this may be overcome by the fact that your audience will only see two reels at a sitting, instead of eight, as the reviewer did. It will be better received than most serials, we believe, because of the entertaining story. And it gets a good start, which is most important, not because of any supreme thrill in the opening episode, but because the mystery is well planted, and the interest thoroughly aroused. There are excellent riding scenes, fast action, and good scenery in the succeeding episodes. It is on the whole, as far in advance of the first serials, as the present day feature is of the five year old photoplay.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"Dangerous Eyes"

(Fox Sunshine Comedy—Two Reels)

CHESTER CONKLIN is a janitor in a department store in his latest Sunshine Comedy and, by his antics and several novel stunts, manages to draw some real good laughs. There is even less plot here than in the usual modern slapstick, which may be beneficial or detrimental, according to your own viewpoint.

This comedy is unique inasmuch as there is no bathing beach or swimming pool in evidence. But the bathing girls, transformed into manikins of a fashion show, make their appearance in a number of startling gowns. They are rather over emphasized, as there is a close up of each one. With clothing dummies galore, the director has managed to get some clever comedy. Only in the second half of the latter reel do the chases commence. The entire cast races off the roofs of half of Los Angeles, apparently, skipping lightly across the spaces between buildings.

In no way does the picture become vulgar, and there are only one or two scenes that might be objected to by some, as being a trifle suggestive. J. G. Blyston was the director and Hampton del Ruy supervised. MATTHEW A. TAYLOR

"An Eastern Westerner"

(Harold Lloyd Comedy—Rolin-Pathe - Two Reels)

REALIZING that most every rival comedian has had a fling at burlesquing the pioneer days of the West, Harold Lloyd has adjusted his horn-rimmed spectacles, looked over the landscape and said "I could do it too!" The result is "An Eastern Westerner." Now this comedy isn't as rich in incident or as spontaneous in its development as its immediate forerunner, "Haunted Spooks," but that isn't saying that the piece falls by the wayside. On the contrary it doles out a full quota of funny tricks and stunts which keep one in a mirthful attitude from the introductory flash. Now some of this business has been worked before not only by Lloyd, but by his rivals, yet somehow he injects so much of his individuality into his methods that he never appears old-fashioned.

His trick of sitting down in the bus and when it starts, finding him seated on a lumber pile is a Sennett invention. But Lloyd makes it look new. This time his father, tired of having him about the East, sends him to the wild and woolly country. During his sojourn back home he had been expelled from a jazz palace because of dancing the shimmy. He did his best to obey the rules but some crude gent had tossed some ice-cream down his back and it naturally made him shiver. The western action is hot off the griddle—the inevitable bad man and the outlaw furnishing the gun-play and Lloyd squeezing out the humor. His scene in the card game when he becomes the waiter in order to find out the hands of his opponents—is ludicrous. The girl's father is imprisoned by the bully but Lloyd effects his rescue. Which introduces the mad chase. The outlaws, dressed like Vigilantes make a wild effort to capture him but he eludes them through the employment of timely slapstick. Finely. Any bat or buck is timely when it comes in contact with one's "dome."

The West has been done so often in comedy that it has sort of lost its effectiveness. Yet Lloyd succeeds in giving it nourishment. At that it is more genuine than a lot of so called comic Westerns. His comedies have been so excellent that there is no question of their box office value. This one keeps up to the high standard. LAURENCE REID

(Sir Ernest Shackleton Scenic Robertson-Cole)

EXHIBITORS can catch the importance of this special scenic since it is given the favored position in all publicity matter at the Rivoli, New York. It certainly ranks high as one of the screen's masterpieces in scenic productions. And if some feature pictures do not measure up to your standards there is no reason why you cannot substitute with "The Bottom of the World." As far as we are able to recollect these are the first series of pictures taken in the frozen spaces of the earth, and they will stand as something to be remembered by everyone who sees them. Some may say that they present no peril, but the entire expedition by England's daring explorer was fraught with peril.

It has been said that the Antarctic regions are more dangerous to navigation than the reaches which surround the North Pole. Certainly Sir Ernest Shackleton has made history—the kind that goes down in the hall of fame and that which enriches the screen. The orchestra stopped playing during the unfolding of the scenes, which gives an idea of its death defying incident. Here is DRAMA the will to live—the law of self preservation. The conflict is between the hardy explorers and the vast forces of nature as presented in Titanic ice-bergs, impassable ice, and a temperature as ruthless as the ice itself.

The spectator is thrilled at Shackleton's departure on the good ship "Endurance." The dogs are drilled, the provisions are stowed away and the ship sails on. Slowly it navigates up the river of ice until it can go no further. Then all is made ready for the long winter months. The dogs are given daily exercise—the ice is cut and soundings made—a snow "tank" is used which proves a failure—a life line is stretched while research work is carried on. These are only a few of the scenic effects in the first part of the picture.

"The Bottom of the World" is being released in two parts.—LAURENCE REID

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for last twenty weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to January 3, 1920.

"THE DEEP PURPLE"
(R. A. Walsh-Realart)

Fine Adaptation of Famous Melodrama

A NOTABLE CAST, flawless direction and interesting incident, together with a good basic story, especially in the matter of contrast of characters, all contribute in making this one of the most entertaining pictures of the year.

In adapting the stage play to the screen Mr. Walsh has seen fit to enlarge the role of the ingenue played by Miss Cooper, and to subordinate that of "Kate," but in so doing he has provided opportunity for giving the production action and the shifting of locale sufficiently to present variety of scenes.

Mr. Walsh has been prodigal in securing performers whose names mean something from the exploitation angle. This fact excuses the injection of a slack wire performance which uses up several hundred feet film that has nothing to do with the story, since the artist is no other than Bird Millman, the Ringling Circus performer. William B. Mack, famous as the original "Joe Garson," is also in the cast, but rather disappoints since he seems unsuited to the role of the Westerners as picture audiences are taught to expect him to be.

One of the features of the production is the clever acting of W. J. Ferguson as "Pop," who, if we remember correctly also played the same role when "The Deep Purple" was first adapted to pictures some years ago. He makes the most of his "fat" part injecting much clean comedy that goes a long way to making the picture an unusual offering.

Miss Cooper is a likeable heroine. Helen Ware is adequate in what was originally the leading role, and Vincent Serrano gives his best picture performance to date as "Leland." -Length, 6 reels. J. S. Dickerson.

By Paul Armstrong and Wilson Mizner.
Directed by R. A. Walsh.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

"The Deep Purple," adapted from Paul Armstrong and Wilson Mizner's powerful play of the underworld, prepared and directed by R. A. Walsh, and enacted by a cast of prominent players, will be presented at the ———— theatre commencing ————. Of all the plays which have been written about New York's underworld, "The Deep Purple" is acknowledged to be the best in point of realistic detail and the manner in which its startling action is presented. The authors knew their material and were able to write about it in graphic terms. And Mr. Walsh has given it a faithful production. Among the players who round out the cast are Miriam Cooper, William B. Mack, Stuart Sage, Helen Ware, J. C. King, Bird Millman, Ethel Hallor, Lorraine Frost and Walter Lawrence.

The story concerns the struggle of a country girl who goes to New York and falls into the clutches of vicious denizens of the underworld. The action is sweeping in its development and measures out a world of incident and suspense. "The Deep Purple" is ideal screen material because of its wealth of incident and the fact that it keeps moving from inception to conclusion. The picture is adequately staged, the underworld scenes being absolutely genuine.

PROGRAM READER

Lovers of strong melodrama will be pleased to know that the screen version of Paul Armstrong and Wilson Mizner's gripping play, "The Deep Purple," will be presented at the ———— next ————. This play of New York's underworld is considered by impartial critics as the best thing of its kind ever conceived. And it comes to the screen with all its vigor and vitality intact. R. A. Walsh, one of the ablest directors in the business, has given it a production which is as interesting as it is dramatic. A cast of prominent players enact the several roles in a most capable manner. These parts are filled by Miriam Cooper, William B. Mack, Stuart Sage, Helen Ware, Vincent Serrano and others. We will not go into details concerning the plot but suffice to say that it is one of the most gripping photoplays which has ever appeared at the ————. See it and be convinced.

SUGGESTIONS

Exploit this feature as an adaptation of Paul Armstrong and Wilson Mizner's play of the same name. Bring out that on the stage it had a great success. Play it up as a gripping melodrama of New York's underworld. Bring out that it presents a wealth of tense action and powerful suspense. Play up the fact that it is an R. A. Walsh production. You might mention the excellent photoplays he has been responsible for in the past. Tell that it is a Mayflower production. This is the company responsible for "The Miracle Man." Tell of the cast and feature the players prominently. Dress up your lobby to suggest the atmosphere in the play. Treat your copy in a manner to arouse curiosity. Use purple lights and stage a prologue suggestive of the plot.

CATCH LINES

See "The Deep Purple," a picture of New York's underworld. The most gripping play that has ever been written of the seamy side of life. A picture of a hundred thrills.

"THE DEAD LINE"
(Fox)

George Walsh Will Please in Feud Story

THEY have given George Walsh the popular vocation of "moonshining" and mixed him up in a good old mountaineer feud in this production. The picture is quite satisfactory, for besides the usual good work of the star there is some really fine scenery as a background for the story, careful production, and very successfully created atmosphere of the Kentucky mountains. The unique part of the picture is that there are more bullets than fists flying through the air, and the star waits until the last reel to get over his big slugging match. This fight, incidentally, is with a man who offers little resistence, and resolves itself into a one-sided affair. For this reason there is a loss of sympathy for the star.

Some half a dozen men and a little baby are killed before the young Kentucky hero sees the folly of continuing the feud. He is alone in his opinion, for his sweetheart and everybody else involved wants to see all their enemies completely annihilated. But the villains, known by the very modern title of "the moonshine trust," begin fighting among themselves, and the star punishes them with his fist instead of a rifle.

Irene Boyle is the only one of the cast who does not quite fit her role. Such detail as making the "moonshine" water-like in appearance, instead of the complexion of the "real stuff," is commendable. There are fine exteriors and good mountaineer types among the extras. One or two illogical turns to the story may not escape notice. Three criminals break jail, and there is no effort to recapture them, even when they walk about the town. Also the feud ends in a rather abrupt manner, apparently because the picture has reached the fifth reel. But the action, the likeable star, the novel settings, titles and photography, ought to please practically everywhere. And the "moonshine" angle will not cause any loss of interest. Length, 5 reels. Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

George Walsh, the popular Fox star, will be seen in "The Dead Line," a thrilling photoplay laid in the Kentucky mountains, which will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ————.

This star long ago proved that he was as popular as any actor whom the American public have ever chosen to please them on the screen. His mighty physical strength, his pleasing, attractive manners, and his ability to portray the tender as well as the stronger emotions, have made him an idol whom the movie fans of the world will never cease to applaud.

In "The Dead Line" he has been given a part that provides plenty of opportunity for him to display all his talents. It is the old, old story of love and kindness finally conquering hate and anger. Of course there is plenty of action, and the locale is the picturesque Kentucky mountains where a family feud is being waged furiously, scores of men and women being involved in the meshes of hatred and revenge. The fight goes on ceaselessly until Clay Boone, played by George Walsh, swears that he will never again touch a gun. They call him a coward; his sweetheart deserts him, but he remains firm. But in the end he proves that he is no coward by providing one of the most realistic and fastest bits of action to reach the screen in many a day.

What made him give up the feud, and what caused him to attack his enemies once more, all goes to make up this highly interesting story.

PROGRAM READER

Here is a story of the Kentucky mountains, where men go armed with rifles, ready to shoot to kill! "The Dead Line" is the picture, and the star is George Walsh, who has a reputation of installing more action into his pictures than any star on the screen today.

It is a story of feuds and moonshiners! You will see how the mountaineers defy the eighteenth amendment and carry on their illicit work. And you will see the inbred hate of long years working havoc in the hearts of men, until it claims as its victim a golden-haired little child, who wandered across the path of a feudist's bullet. It is a story of hate—and love; with love triumphant.

SUGGESTIONS

Boost the star and story of this picture. Sprinkle George Walsh's name generously about in your copy, show photographs of him, tell of his previous work, and promise them some of the fastest action, and hardest-hitting fights they have ever seen. Then you have the "moonshine" angle. Don't state that your audience "will learn how to make whiskey," for you might get in trouble. But tell them enough of the story to get their interest aroused about the bootleggers and the moonshine trust. Use the sign in the picture, "Strangers, keep in midel of rode!" and place it in your lobby. This should be poorly printed by hand on a rough board.

CATCH LINES

"I makes it; I don't drink it," says Clay Boone, the moonshiner.
A story of family feud, and the toll of human lives it takes from year to year.

"HUMORESQUE"
(Cosmopolitan-Paramount-Artcraft)

Here Is an Undeniably Fine Entertainment

PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT has here, one of the soundest, most human and vital plays that has ever reached the screen and one acted quite flawlessly. Picturegoers who have read Fannie Hurst know the power and the truth and the humor with which she can seize, dramatize and analyze the values of everyday life as they are presented in that thickly populated section of New York known as the Ghetto. "Humoresque" is poignant and heartrending in its humanities so soundly expressed in mother love and the fine influence of family life. It is a story full of tears and laughter and these forces alternate in attracting and holding the attention.

Indeed it will move to the depths all who have imagination, feeling and sympathy no matter how repressed or neglected. There is no gripping drama in that sense of the term. No conflict is offered. What does grip is the deep well of pathos which furnishes the strength of the story. And yet this element is finely shaded so that mawkish sentiment is entirely absent. But every tug that comes at the heart is immediately followed by a twinkle that beams in the eye, for laughter succeeds sorrow and vice-versa just as it does in everyday life and in the melody which inspired the theme.

The key in which Frank Borzage has directed the play and the superb emotional acting of Vera Gordon, and the comedy relief of Dore Davidson are largely responsible for bringing out the shadows and sunshine, the tears and laughter of Fannie Hurst's story. Yet one must not forget the adaptation by Francis Marion, who has constructed her scenes with undeniable skill. Praises must be given her foe collecting much of the original dialogue and presenting it with all its lambent humor intact. The story itself with all its heart interest, its human appeal, its character analysis, humor and philosophy strikes a note which will surely be heard in box-office receipts. The theme of mother-love—the picture of the mother who prayed for a musical genius and whose prayer is answered, the while the father, commercial in his viewpoint, prayed for a child who could make "moosic" with a cash-register will react upon every spectator. The boy lifts his family from the Ghetto, makes his name famous, and hears the call of war and enlists to play in a greater symphony over there. Mr. Borzage deserves all the credit he is certain to receive. His work evidently was a labor of love and enthusiasm. His atmosphere is remarkably rich in detail and color. Yet there is glory enough in this picture for all. "Humoresque" is a picture with a soul. Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

An adaptation of Fannie Hurst's poignant and humorous story of New York's East Side in which mother love is given wonderful expression, will be presented at the _____ theatre beginning _____. The authoress has achieved a reputation as a gifted short story writer. Her skill at character analysis and drawing the lives of the people of the Ghetto has established her as a writer with the human touch. Her "Humoresque" comes to the _____ screen with a wonderful humanization. It is a story of tears and laughter, just as Dvorak's celebrated melody is a yject at life in which pathos is commingled with humor, and presents as its theme the dominant mother love.

Frank Borzage, who directed the picture, has turned in his finest production. His attention to the smallest detail—the skill in which he has measured out the humor and humanities are a credit to his directorial powers. He has built up his story so that sympathy and human appeal are ever dominant. A laugh follows a tug in the throat. The picture is enacted by players of genuine ability, the work of Vera Gordon as the mother being superb in its manifestation of heart-hunger. Dore Davidson as the father is a comedian of rare ability.

PROGRAM READER

Manager _____ of the _____ theatre has the pleasure in announcing that Fannie Hurst's wonderfully human story, "Humoresque" will be presented here on _____. This picture will certainly be remembered by all who see it as one of the finest contributions to the screen. It depicts the everyday shadows and sunshine of New York's East Side. It reveals the divine mother love. And for every shade of pathos there is presented a balancing note of humor. The action moves against a background remarkably lifelike in its atmosphere. The cast which interprets this soulful drama is appropriate as to type and is able to fulfil the demands of the various roles.

"RIDERS OF THE DAWN"
(Benj. Hampton-Hodkinson)

Colorful Action Compensates for Plot Shortcomings

THERE is one characteristic about a Zane Grey story and that is it serves up enough action to please any spectator in search of thrills. "Riders of the Dawn," an adaptation of "The Desert of Wheat," may be stereotyped in characterization and rather far-fetched in subject matter, but there is no denying that it carries a punch in the shape of colorful and fast-moving incident. The story takes up another indictment against the "I Won't Works," but instead of presenting them blowing up industrial plants it depicts them plotting to ruin the wheat crop of the West. There is no waiting for the action to begin. This precious ingredient is offered with a flying start and it maintains its activity to the conclusion.

The central character is a young farmer lately returned from France, the leader of the Vigilantes, whose purpose is to rid the community of the hoboes. The action presents battle after battle which are punctuated with scenes of sudden death. One incident is quite uncalled for since it bears no relation to the plot, showing as it does a degenerate's pursuit of a little girl and the inevitable tragedy which follows. Although the actual crime is not presented enough is left to the imagination of the spectator. With the scissors applied to this incident the picture is above criticism insofar as treatment of the characters and plot is concerned.

There will doubtless be some who will say that the action is too graphic because of the many killings. Yet such a course is necessary to keep its vitality intact. The picture is well contrasted, the disciples of right and wrong being differentiated to the utmost. The scenes of the night riders, the frustrated attempt to burn the wheat fields and the warehouse which stores the precious grain are events which will make anyone sit up and take notice. The hero has an overwhelming task in proving his innocence and routing the villains and the action which discloses him may be spelled with a capital A. Roy Stewart succeeds in being convincing despite the heroics which surround him and Robert McKim makes his villainy completely fascinating. The other members of the cast are up to requirements. There is no thought to "Riders of the Dawn," but it is interesting because of its unadulterated incident. Length 5 reels. Laurence Reid.

By Zane Grey.
Directed by Hugh Ryan Conway.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

An adaptation of Zane Grey's powerful story, "The Desert of Wheat," will be presented at the _____ theatre beginning _____ under the title of "Riders of the Dawn." Like many of the author's other novels, the subject is a tale of the Northwest and may be called a worthy successor to his other notable contributions. The picture is enacted by a prominent cast that includes Roy Stewart, Robert McKim, Claire Adams, Joseph J. Dowling, Frank Brownlee and others. Hugh Conway, directed the production.

The story concerns the conflict between the peaceful ranchers and a band of desperadoes. Among those upon whom they have preyed is Tom Anderson, father of Lenore, whose promise to marry Kurt Dorn on his return stirred him to brave deeds on the other side. During his absence, Henry Neuman, a young lawyer, had sought to win the hand of the girl. Kurt organizes a battery of night riders to capture the outlaws, but they succeed in frustrating the efforts of the upholders of the law. A time comes, however, when they are cornered and the scenes are punctuated with thrilling action and a wealth of suspense. The picture presents a beautiful romance which gives it an adequate balance. "Riders of the Dawn" is a typical Zane Grey story and as such it is calculated to interest the picturegoer.

PROGRAM READER

A Zane Grey story can always be depended upon to furnish the reader with plenty of excitement. It usually makes good screen entertainment because of its rich elements of action, suspense, adventure and thrills. And since a Grey story is laid in the Northwest at a time when it presented primitive passions you may rest assured that the action is vigorous and vital throughout. "Riders of the Dawn" is an adaptation of Zane Grey's thrilling novel, "The Desert of Wheat," and it comes to the _____ theatre in the near future with an all star cast which includes Joseph J. Dowling, Claire Adams, Roy Stewart and Robert McKim. The patrons of the _____ theatre will see a picture which contains all the requisites of perfect screen entertainment. Watch for the date.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is another Zane Grey picture and it would be a good plan to exploit the author's name for all that it is worth. Mention his other stories which have reached the screen, and bring out that he never fails to intrigue the imagination. Mention that the picture is an adaptation of "The Desert of Wheat" and that it is laid in the Northwest in the pioneer days. Bring out that the drama is enacted by a notable cast that includes Roy Stewart, Robert McKim Joseph J. Dowling and others. You can use a mailing campaign here and not lose money because a Grey story never falters in action and suspense. He has made a reputation and his readers are legion. You might go in for atmosphere here in lobby display and present something which represents the plains. Mention that it is a Benjamin Hampton production and play up the director's name.

"THE FALSE ROAD"
(Ince-Paramount-Artcraft)

Crook Story Is Too Tame and the Action is Mild

ACTION should be the keynote behind all crook melodramas no matter whether they are moulded from polite ingredients or not. When this vital element is missing or subordinated in any way the plot has all it can do to sustain itself. Which introduces Enid Bennett's latest photoplay, "The False Road." Garner Sullivan, the author, is usually reliable, but in this instance he has paid too much attention to a twist in characterization and too little to the vital punch. Scene after scene in the earlier reels is presented which carries no more melodrama than a bit of weak conversation between a band of polite crooks.

The twist is presented in the shape of the reformed hero who attempts and suceeds, eventually, in bringing about the regeneration of his sweetheart. Usually the idea works out in just the opposite way the hero being reformed through the influence of the girl who will not give up believing in him. There is some effort to touch upon a measure of "Turn to the Right" by using the bracing air and homespun atmosphere of the country as conducive to right thinking and living. The hero gives up his life of crime and settles down in a one-horse town, and soon sweetheart turns up and robs the village bank in which he is employed. This incident is one of the interesting moments in the picture the other when the girl-crook attempts to steal the money again, this time from the boss crook, because of the influence of the reformed fiance. Otherwise there is considerable talking and sitting around among the participants of this weak contribution.

The crooks are right-up-to-date, maintaining a lavish apartment, keeping books of their various exploits, and storing their loot in a safe. "The False Road" may be called just an average motion picture which hasn't enough moving moments to satisfy the spectator in search of a thrill. Enid Bennett is not adaptable for the part of the feminine crook. It is like putting a rose among a lot of dandelions she just doesn't belong. And, furthermore, she fails to bring out any suspense. In reality, there isn't any to bring out. The picture is always obvious from the start, there being really nothing novel in theme or treatment. It will please those who do not ask for much. Length, 5 reels. Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Betty Palmer	Enid Bennett
"Pickpocket" Roger Moran	Lloyd Hughes
"Sapphire" Mike Wilson	Wade Boteler
"Frisco" Minnie	Lucile Young
Joshua Starbuck	Charles Smily
Mother Starbuck	Edithe Yorke
Crook Chauffeur	Gordon Mullen

Directed by Fred Niblo.
Photographed by George Barnes.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Enid Bennett, the charming and talented Ince star, will appear at the ———— theatre beginning ———— in her latest photoplay entitled "The False Road." This feature demonstrates her versatility since she is cast as a crook instead of society characters. She has the role of Betty Palmer, a member of a band of New York crooks. Her sweetheart, Roger Moran, upon completing a two-year term at Sing Sing, surprises her by announcing that he is determined to go straight hereafter. She refuses to desert her pals, and he leaves her and finally obtains work with the local bank in a small town in New England.

Later, Betty and a confederate are sent by the crook leader to rob the bank Roger follows them to New York and, by posing as a backslider, succeeds through Betty, in recovering the money. She thereupon abandons the field of crime and marries the young man of her heart. C. Gardner Sullivan, who wrote this story, has invested it with plenty of appeal and heart interest. But the tale also carries a full quota of melodramatic action and suspense. Fred Niblo, the director, has worked out some adequate backgrounds and he has kept the picture moving from the start. Miss Bennett lends a great deal of charm to the offering through her personality and adaptability to the role and she is capably supported by Lloyd Hughes, Lucille Young, Wade Boteler and others.

PROGRAM READER

Some remarkably true-to-life scenes of New York's underworld are a feature of Enid Bennett's new photoplay, "The False Road," which comes to this theatre in the near future. The pretty Ince star has the role of a girl-crook, member of a notorious gang. One of the most colorful episodes shows the banquet given to her sweetheart upon the occasion of his release from Sing Sing. The picture abounds with tense melodramatic situations and through it runs an appealing love story. The star is conducted through a series of stirring adventures and the interest is well sustained to the finish. C. Gardner Sullivan is the author of this entertaining story which is guarantee enough of its excellence. Miss Bennett plays the part of the feminine crook with all her accustomed charm, and her support, which includes Lloyd Hughes, is entirely adequate. Watch for the date.

SUGGESTIONS

You can tell your patrons that this picture is a crook melodrama written by the famous C. Gardner Sullivan. The fact that he is the author is surely going to excite interest with the steady picturegoer. Play up the fact that the offering presents a world of exciting episodes which are well punctuated with romantic interest and heart appeal. Bring out that the picture also establishes a good moral. Use stills of the star. She is remarkably pretty and has a decided following. Take advantage of the title and use it for poster display through inventions of your artist. Tell of its startling twists. Make use of the idea that here is a picture which shows a heroine attempting to make a man go wrong instead of the usual scheme of working out his redemption. Mention that Lloyd Hughes plays opposite the star. Make it emphatic that this is a Thomas H. Ince production.

"THE HONEY BEE"
("Flying A"-at Pathe Exchanges)

Good Entertainment from Picturized Novel

THERE will be an appeal to almost every type of fan in this latest American "special" picture, starring Mme. Marguertia Sylva, and adapted from the novel by Samuel Merwin. The interest is sustained and there is an excellent supporting cast and evidence of splendid direction.

The story is of the "married-man-and-another-woman" variety, but is far from being a sex play and is perfectly clean. In fact they rather neglect the main theme, and bring in a number of irrelevent incidents. But as these incidents are truly appealing, performed by a mighty capable cast, and well directed, they do not detract from the interest. It would seem that it is truly a picturized novel, using the sub-plots and extraneous matter of the book. While it may therefore, be lacking in dramatic compactness, it will nevertheless give good entertainment. A prize fight, realistically enacted, is the highspot. The women will like the star's gowns and everybody will like Albert Ray and George Hernandez.

Marguerita Sylva may not have an unusual appeal to the fans, but the success of the picture does not rest upon her shoulders. Albert Ray is a revelation, giving us a splendid bit of characterization, and George Hernandez and Harvey Clark, are not far behind. The rest of the cast is also up to the standard. Kid McCoy helps out in the prize fight, which is shown at length. We go through four rounds with the heavyweights.

The story is simply that of a married man and a single woman in love, and separating by mutual consent. The woman played by the star, goes to Paris and the man disappears from sight until the final reel. They meet finally, and a messenger interrupts their love scene to bring news of the wife's death in America. It is the reels in the interim that supply the best bits in the picture. These are laid in Paris, but the characters are all Americans. They may have made the American pugilist far too noble and heroic to be true to life, but not too much so for your patrons. The sub-titles are good, but the extracts from Maeterlinck at the beginning and end will mean very little to an audience. Length, 6 reels. Matthew A. Taylor.

Carpentier, the French Champion (By special arrangement)	Kid McCoy

From the novel by Samuel Merwin
Directed by Rupert Julian.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

The picturization of one of the most popular novels of recent years will be the attraction at the ———— on ————. Thousands of Americans have read "The Honey Bee," by Samuel Merwin, which can now be seen in motion picture form, with Mme. Marguerita Sylva, the famous Belgian prima donna, in the stellar role.

The picture tells the tale of the woman worker, and likens her to the undeveloped female bee of the hive, who lives but to work, endlessly and uncomplainingly. But when once the little bee tastes of honey, it becomes demoralized. So it is with the woman in business. She labors for years, but when once her feminine instincts are aroused, she is no longer satisfied with her lot.

The director of this unusual picture was Rupert Julian, who has won for himself an enviable name among motion picture directors. Besides the renowned star, who is here making her debut in pictures, there is an excellent supporting cast, which includes Thomas Holding, Nigel Barrie, Albert Ray, George Hernandez, and Harvey Clark. Kid McCoy is also in the picture, and helps to make the thrilling prize fight scene thoroughly realistic.

PROGRAM READER

If you have read "The Honey Bee," by Samuel Merwin, not even hail and lightning will keep you home on the evening of ———— when the picturization of this famous novel will be shown at this theatre. And if you haven't read it, just take our tip that it is one of the most intensely human and poignantly appealing stories that has ever found its way to the screen. For it tells the tale of the woman you all know so well—the modern American business woman, denied of all opportunity to gratify the love that is in her feminine heart, and with never a chance to satisfy her great mother love. It is a story that has the nail on the head, and the hammer is the keen insight and imagination of one of America's foremost novelists. And for you who want thrilling action, there is a realistic prize fight that it would be hard to equal in real life. And Kid McCoy is one of the pugilists.

SUGGESTIONS

A lot depends upon your location in selecting which angle of this picture to boost. Use the author's name, of course, but it would be a good idea to find out from your local library, if you are in a small city, just how popular his books are. Boost accordingly. A tie up with a book store would be profitable. If you are in a suburban commuting neighborhood, tell enough of the plot to get all of your business women interested. Dwell on the star also, showing her photograph, if possible. Tell of the fight scenes, and show a still or two. For a teaser use the question "When is a woman like a bee?" Finally put underneath it "The answer is at the ———— theatre. See 'The Honey Bee' and find out." A tie up with a store selling honey, if you can arrange it, will aid.

"THE DANCIN' FOOL"
(Paramount-Artcraft)

Some Interesting Moments in This Frail Wallace Reid Picture

THERE are times when even a Saturday Evening Post story may falter as good screen entertainment. Wallace Reid's latest contribution to the screen, "The Dancin' Fool," may be rattling clever reading between the covers of the magazine, but deprived of its dialogue, considerable of its humor and humanities, and not exceptionally well interpreted, it may be considered as just an average document in its screen version. It looks to us as if Sam Wood, the director, had attempted to be too serious since the plot doesn't carry enough weight for such a course. There are a number of times when the action becomes considerably draggy because there is no variety, to speak of, in the development. And too much of the story is told through the medium of subtitles.

Had the director paid more attention to its humorous values instead of elaborating the romance, the picture could be placed alongside of its immediate forerunners. The star plays a country yokel—a remarkably sophisticated looking yokel, incidentally, who comes to the metropolis gifted with a pair of syncopated feet. He enters his uncle's jug business at six dollars a week, the while he earns a princely sum on the side dancing in a cabaret. The dance emporium and the store furnish the situations which do not offer enough incident to maintain the interest throughout. Romance is introduced by presenting his dancing partner and the scenes of their Apache dance are the only compelling ones in the entire picture. The hero makes a success of his uncle's jug business by introducing up-to-date methods.

The action seems interminably long before the conclusion is reached, principally because it is labored and not achieved spontaneously. Wallace Reid is not entirely at home in his characterization. There is nothing of the homespun about him. To compensate for this the title editor has attempted to make him a son of the soil by having him speak in terms of "B'Gosh." The outstanding humorous scene is presented when uncle goes to the cabaret and discovers that the dancer is his nephew. The arbitrary villain has his inning in plotting to control the business. Bebe Daniels makes an attractive dancing partner. Length, 5 reels. Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The popular Paramount-Artcraft star, Wallace Reid, will come to the ———— theatre the week of ———— in his latest photoplay entitled "The Dancin' Fool," an adaptation of Henry Payson Dowst's Saturday Evening Post story of the same name. Mr. Reid has had a number of entertaining pieces but it may be said that his newest photoplay will rank with the best. "The Dancin' Fool" presents him as a cabaret dancer and an up-to-date business man. He appears as Sylvester Tibble, who comes to New York to work for his uncle, Enoch, in the jug business for six dollars a week.

Junie Budd, a cabaret dancer, discovers that his fortune lies in his feet, and "Ves" blossoms forth as her partner in New York's finest jazz palace. He makes such a success as a dancer that it automatically reacts favorably toward his jug business. The picture uncovers a series of highly interesting twists and turns which are lambent with humor. And Wallace Reid makes the most of his opportunities. Bebe Daniels, who plays opposite the star, shows new powers as an appealing screen comedienne in the role of Junie. Others in the cast are Tully Marshall, Raymond Hatton and Lillian Leighton. Clara G. Kennedy adapted the story while Sam Wood attended to the direction.

PROGRAM READER

Wallace Reid in a new screen comedy, "The Dancin' Fool," will be the attraction at the ———— theatre for ————. The photoplay is said to present the popular star in a role that is unusual and that ideally suits his buoyant personality. Mr. Reid plays the part of a country youth who goes to New York to enter his uncle's jug business. But he puts pleasure before business and the result is he becomes famous as a cabaret dancer. How he makes a success of his various adventures is told in five reels of highly entertaining comedy—the kind of comedy which has established the popularity of the star. The picture is a screen version of Henry Payson Dowst's Saturday Evening Post story of the same name and was scenarioized by Clara G. Kennedy and directed by Sam Wood.

CATCH LINES

He came from Hicksville, but Oh, Boy—how he could dance. He made New York sit up and take notice. See Wallace Reid in his most captivating picture. See "The Dancin' Fool."

He won success through his syncopated feet. They called him the dancin' fool, but he was wise enough to put jazz in his business and win. See Wallace Reid in "The Dancin' Fool."

A Pleasing Picture with Many Good Points

IF this picture were cut to five reels it now runs six and some of the unnecessary scenes "chopped out," and many of the sub-titles changed so as to give more expression to their meaning, Realart would have a pleasing Mary Miles Minter feature which should interest and amuse the patrons and bring satisfactory results to the box-office.

As the production stands there are too many scenes introduced, many of which could easily be eliminated, as they are not of vital importance and tend rather to detract than add to the interest of the story.

And again these scenes are introduced in a way that might cause confusion to the average patron, for they seem to jump ahead of the story and then back to it again, instead of finishing with one sequence before going into the other.

The star is her usual self in appearance and action and the direction is up to standard and shows a carefulness in the handling of the star and attention to detail especially in regard to the sets, some of which were lavish, and the exteriors, many of which were beautiful, that could not be excelled.

She eloped and was secretly married. His parents, rich and social climbers, learn of the secret marriage and send him away on a yachting trip. Then they tell our heroine that her husband has fled from her and induce her to have the marriage annulled. He marries another, the choice of his parents, and later finds that she is addicted to the use of drugs.

After many trials and tribulations our heroine meets her former husband at a musical where she is to make her debut and there are explanations in which all doubts are cleared. He now sees that he can never forget her. When an accident occurs which ends in his wife's death, he turns to his "first love" and their tangle is straightened out.—Length, 6 reels.- Frank Leonard.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

Mary Miles Minter in her latest Realart feature, "Jenny Be Good," will appear at the ———— theatre on ———— of next ————

This is considered Miss Minter's best feature to date and gives the star an opportunity of displaying her talents in a way that is sure to interest her many admirers. Special attention has been given in this production to detail, the interior sets being sumptuous in many instances and the exteriors containing some beautiful landscape shots.

Jenny Riano, a simple country girl, falls in love with and secretly marries Royal Renshaw, a wealthy young man. His parents learn of the marriage and send him away on a yachting trip. They tell Jenny that he has fled from her and persuade her to have the marriage annulled. Royal later marries a society girl, the choice of his parents, but learns to dislike her because she is addicted to drugs. At a musicale, Jenny meets Royal and there are explanations in which all doubts are cleared. But the young man cannot forget his first love. For his wife he has only hatred as he cannot forgive her for the terrible habit she has contracted.

One day while automobiling with his wife, an accident happens which kills the latter and results in severe injuries to Royal. While in the hospital with his life in the balance, the young man continually calls for "his Jenny" and his father is advised to send for her that she may save his life. She comes and restores him to health again, after which the tangle is straightened out.

SUGGESTIONS

When you book this picture, feature Mary Miles Minter in your advertising. It would not be a bad idea to run a few short stories telling about some of the incidents of her life which you may obtain from the press sheet which accompanies the feature.

The story while not of the strongest is a rather interesting one and stress could be laid on this fact without any fear of a "get back" from the patrons

You might also "play up" the cast which is a splendid one both for types and for acting ability, mentioning at the same time the work of Jay Belasco who does a very fine piece of acting as Miss Minter's leading man.

Harry Price of Toronto has been appointed special representative in Eastern Canada for the Famous Players' Film Service.

Crown Features, a new Toronto, Ontario, distributing organization, has secured the rights for Comedyart productions, which are made by the Special Pictures Corporation of Los Angeles.

L. E. Ouimet of Montreal, president and general manager of the Specialty Film Import, Limited, has secured the Canadian distribution of the 1,000-foot picture of the British Grand National Steeplechase Race of 1920.

DETROIT

The State Board of Health has begun a campaign to prevent any showing of "The Solitary Sin" in Michigan. The picture was banned by the Detroit police department some time ago.

Lew Barnes has resigned as manager of the Elite and Fuller theatres in Kalamazoo and has left for California to rest. W. C. Hoffman, of Chicago, succeeded him.

The new Richards theatre, Flint, was opened last week, with a Fox program. The house seats 450. A Eisman is the manager.

It is reported the Drury Lane theatre will be closed on July 1st to make room for a department store.

Practically every projected theatre in Detroit has been dropped by its promoters because of building costs.

Dow Thompson has been appointed manager of the new Linwood LaSalle theatre which is scheduled to open April 22nd with "The Confession." The house seats 1,400 and is in a rapidly growing residential neighborhood.

So successful were the showings of "Why Change Your Wife?" at the Broadway Strand and "The Idol Dancer" at the Madison, that the engagements were continued Sunday for a second week.

Charles H. Miles has again taken possession of the Miles theatre which gives him four houses in Detroit, the Orpheum, Regent, Majestic and Miles.

It is reported that Marcus Loew will build a vaudeville and picture house in Windsor, Ont., across the river from Detroit. Windsor has a population of about 40,000, and two new picture houses are now being built there.

Phil Gleichman has begun suit against David Scott, owner of the building in which the Broadway Strand theatre is located, to secure possession of the capital stock of the Broadway Strand Theatre Co.

The Goldwyn exchange has taken over the quarters held by the Republic in the film building, the later moving in with Select. Equity and other state right exchanges will move into the former Goldwyn quarters.

OKLAHOMA CITY

A company is reported to have been formed to build a new $75,000 theatre at Fergus Falls, Minn., in the near future.

The Empire theatre at McHenry, Ill., has been completed and is opened for business. It is owned by J. W. Smith, and seats more than 500.

The Fraternal theatre at Poplar Bluffs, Mo., which has been closed for the past four years, has been reopened.

There will be no more Sunday shows for Perry, Iowa. The Council recently passed a law imposing a fine of $100 and 30 days in jail for a violation of the Sunday law.

The Cozy theatre at Bushnell, Ill., has been opened under the management of Jackson Bros.

On April 11th the Overholster theatre at Oklahoma City, showed its last picture. It is to be torn down to make room for a new motion picture house.

INDIANAPOLIS

C. W. Tyler, state manager for Robertson-Cole, is making a big drive to put over the Georges Carpentier film solid in Indiana. A publicity director is to be added to Mr. Tyler's staff soon, it is said.

More or less mystery shrouds the purposes of the United Exhibitors' Productions Corporation, which was incorporated at the secretary of state's office April 14 with capital of $1,000,000. The articles state the corporation's business will be to maintain and operate theatres, but local motion picture men say they understand the new outfit will conduct a booking agency for exhibitors.

CINCINNATI

Arthur Lucas, of Atlanta, Goldwyn division manager, is visiting resident Manager Oscar F. Bower this week. Mr. Lucas is enthusiastic about "The Silver Horde," and declares that it is the best picture Goldwyn has ever turned out.

S. T. Gray, of the Royal theatre, Greenfield, Ohio, opened his remodeled house last week. Many of the Cincinnati film salesmen and managers attended the opening.

Stanley Jacques, Pathe manager, is in New York this week on business.

C. B. Adams, formerly editor of the Cincinnati Photoplay Journal, has taken over the "Silent Drama" column of the Cincinnati Enquirer.

J. C. Steenrod, who operates the Opera House, Nelsonville, Ohio, has installed a new $10,000 Hope-Jones organ in his house.

The Phoenix Amusement Company, of Lexington, Kentucky, has secured a ninety-nine-year lease on the Leonard Hotel property at the corner of Main and Limestone streets, Lexington, for a figure reported to be approximately $1,500,000. Mr. J. B. Elliot, of the company, stated that a $250,000 house will be erected on the site.

I. Libson has booked Pathe's "Bringing Up Father" series for the Walnut theatre, Cincinnati; Strand theatre, Dayton, and the Colonial, Columbus.

L. E. Blumenfeld, traveling auditor for Goldwyn, is a visitor at the local office. He expects to remain in town for several weeks.

H. H. Hurn, Hodkinson manager, announces that the story of "The Sagebrusher" will be run by the Cincinnati Post and the Columbus Citizen in serial form.

BUFFALO

Daniel J. Savage has come back. He is Buffalo manager for the Empire State Film company, of which Arthur J. White of New York is president. Mr. Savage is one of the pioneers in the film game.

A. R. Sherry will resign his position as manager of the Star theatre on Saturday, April 17th, to enter into a private business enterprise until August 1st, when he will take over the Broadway theatre, owned by the Sherry Amusement company.

Henry W. Wilkinson, manager of Realart here, had a private screening of Constance Binney in "Erstwhile Susan," for the members of the Zonta club in the Hotel Statler prior to the showing of the production at Shea's Hippodrome the last part of the week of April 5th.

Marshall W. Peterson and Michael L. Woods, owners of the Winter Garden in Jamestown, N. Y., have purchased the J. B. Fisher and Gron blocks on East Third and Spring streets and will erect thereon a large house with a seating capacity of 2,400.

The Majestic theatre, East Ferry street, has been purchased by Jay Parmelee, owner of the Try-It theatre on Grant street.

J. E. Kimberly, former manager of the World and Republic exchanges, is now representing a Kansas City oil concern in Buffalo.

Arthur Heacock has resigned the management of the Ellen Terry theatre to accept a position as chief test pilot with a western air transportation company. J. Wallingford will succeed him.

PROVIDENCE

Daniel Farrell O'Brien, who six years ago was an usher in the Emery theatre, has been appointed general supervisor of the distribution of the product of the Universal Film Company in South America.

The Sunday moving picture bill which has passed the House of Representatives, reached the Senate this week

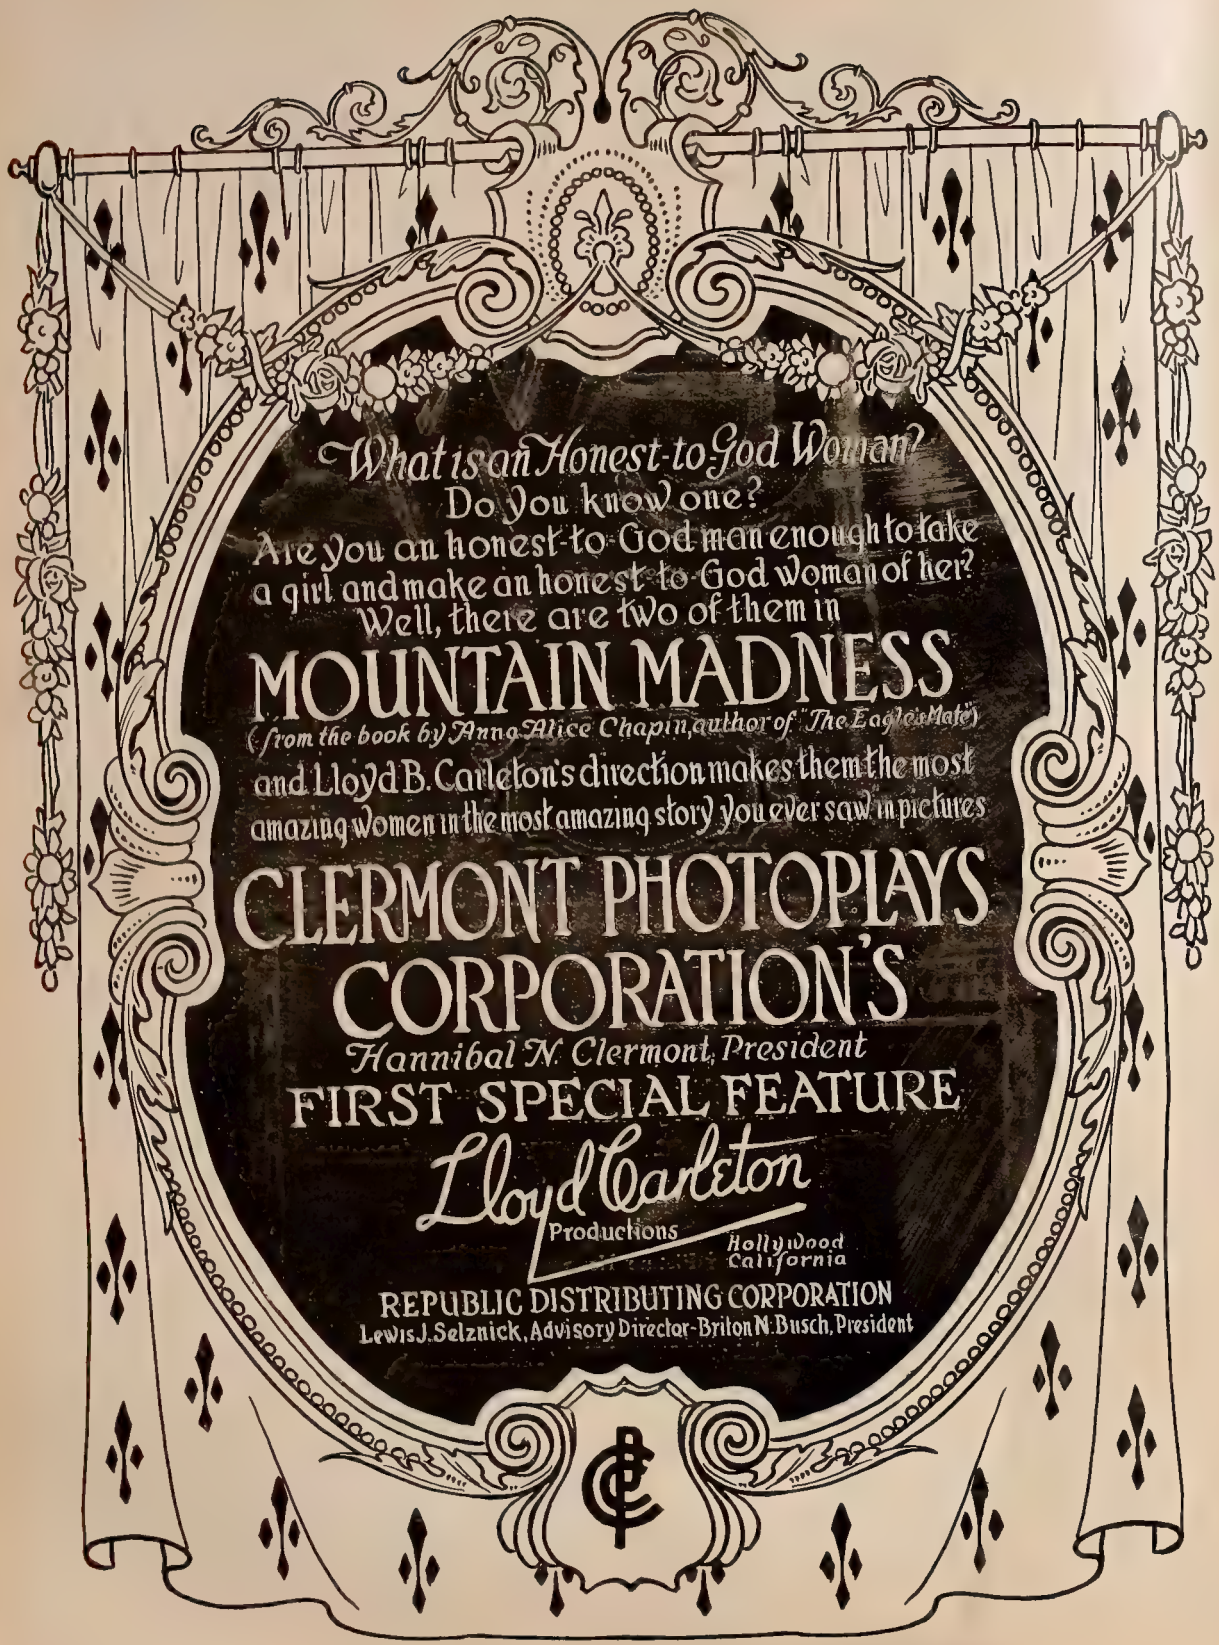
Reviews

MOTION PICTURE DIVISION MAY 17

¶ Do exhibitors want trade paper reviews of the forthcoming pictures?

¶ There are those in New York who would seek to convince you that the day of reviews is past—that exhibitors do not follow them nor desire them.

¶ Motion Picture News recently had occasion to investigate the sentiment of its readers on the question. The answer is emphatic to us—"We want your reviews at any cost!"



¶ Starting next week we shall publish the results of this survey. Exhibitor opinions on the question of reviews and the occasion of our investigation make interesting reading. Watch for them.

PRESENTS

CECIL B. DE MILLE'S PRODUCTION

"Why Change Your Wife?"

Photoplay by William De Mille.

A Paramount Artcraft Picture

And Now New York!

OVER twelve thousand people paid a dollar a seat to see Cecil B. DeMille's "Why Change Your Wife?" at the Criterion, New York, during the first nine days of its showing.

The Criterion seats only 670. This means that the house has been crowded at both performances every day.

And it's still going strong!

"Why Change Your Wife?" has broken records in every city in which it has been shown.

Its New York success confirms the judgment of the exhibitors and public of the entire country—

The Best Picture DeMille Ever Made!

An Appeal They Can't Resist!

"A LADY in Love" is one of those irresistible pictures that pull on the heart strings and make people start to laugh and then sob—one of those appealing pictures that send people out of the theatre with eyes glistening and lips smiling.

ONE of those pictures that you only get once in a while and that you always clean up on. Like "Young Mrs. Winthrop" in heart appeal and like "The 13th Commandment" in dramatic strength—with something more than both!

By Harriet Ford and Caroline Duer. Directed by Walter Edwards. Scenario by Alice Eyton.

"Strong Appeal, Full of Heart Throbs and Melodramatic Punch"

That's What They All Say of

King W. Vidor's "The Family Honor"

STRONG POPULAR APPEAL

"'The Family Honor,' a King Vidor romance of the South, has the popular quality to put it across. It is woven around an ever popular and appealing theme. It is strong in heart interest and with its home-like atmosphere of the Southland and its melodramatic story it makes a strong appeal to popular favor. A tale of Dixie always pulls whether or not the spectator has ever journeyed below Baltimore and the fact that the action lends itself to Southern melodies is another point in its favor from the box office angle. A human note which has made King Vidor famous as the maker of this brand of pictures. Immensely interesting because it is well told and real. The action is of quick tempo with constantly increasing suspense." — Exhibitor's Trade Review.

THEME THAT'S DIFFERENT

"'The Family Honor' is another of King Vidor's intensely human adaptations of a theme that is different. Taking a story of Dixie, the young producer has surrounded it with realistic atmosphere and has given it the punch that will sustain interest." — Exhibitor's Herald.

HUMAN AND APPEALING

"You have a picture here that certainly is going to make an impression on everyone. Offered in the same artistic taste as it has been produced it will be profoundly moving. An opportunity to cater to the thrill loving crowds as well. Highly pleasing. Should strike a responsive chord in every audience. A melodramatic story that is made human and appealing."—Wid's.

GREAT HEART INTEREST

"Nothing missing to emphasize the pathos and the note of heart interest. Entertaining, and saturated with atmosphere of the South. Emphasizes the human note." Motion Picture News.

IT'S A SAFE BET

"An excellent example of what a picture ought to be. Contains deep heart interest. The picture is a safe bet; its appeal is wholesome."—Moving Picture World.

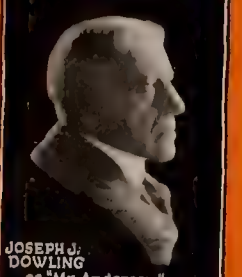
A PRONOUNCED BOX-OFFICE FAVORITE

All the money-making screen values are to be found in this picture in rare abundance.

A REAL STORY OF PUNCH AND PEP written by Zane Grey, America's greatest living novelist.

A CAST OF EVEN EXCELLENCE, not one star and the other actors of doubtful value, but a constellation of stars working together harmoniously to visualize the story and not to glorify themselves: Roy Stewart, Joseph J. Dowling, Claire Adams, Robert McKim, Frederick Starr.

THE THEME IS THE TALK OF THE HOUR AND THE TALK OF THE WORLD.



IT'S A BENJAMIN B. HAMPTON PRODUCTION, greater than his "Desert Gold," "The Sagebrusher," and "The Westerners."

CLEAN, WHOLESOME, THRILLING, SENSATIONAL, A COMPELLING COMBINATION. Nothing draws the crowds like a celebrated novel translated into the language of the screen. It is sure fire every time.

HAS had a wonderful "press," as they say on the other side. Comments of the New York papers were unanimously favorable. This is the first time in many months that the New York papers were a unit in their praise of a picture. Neither the "World" nor the "American" offered any comment whatever on either the "Riders of the Dawn" or the program at the Strand. The other papers commented as follows:

TELEGRAPH

"An exciting and vivid story."

TRIBUNE

SUN-HERALD

"This photo play deals with the North West grain region, vividly and thrillingly, without overstating its case."

TIMES

"The story might be called 'Action, Unlimited.'"

These comments were given by experienced writers and in no way influenced by advertising. They were fully indorsed by the

"Nipoo-win Ooyoo!"

If you knew what that meant in Indian it would make you shiver—make your teeth chatter. When David Raine, just into the North and mushing along the frozen Arctic trail heard Mukoki, the Indian guide, mutter it, he was puzzled.

"The dogs—they are giving the death howl"—that is the way Mukoki explained it. And David found later that the old Indian guide was right!

Death was near. That night they camped in the old deserted cabin of Tavish—the mystery man of the North. Then came that damnable devilish noise against the cabin wall—thud—thud!

thud—thud!

Like a ghostly tattoo it sounded. David's dreams of Marge were interrupted—he decided to investigate—and he found—swinging gently in the wind tap-tapping against the logs—the body of a man.

The cold moon shone on the pale bearded face, the gaping mouth was shaped in a frozen grin of agony. It was Tavish—the man whose villainy causes all the pangs, the mystery, the complications, adventure and stirring romance in—

"The Courage of Marge O'Doone"

CORINNE GRIFFITH in

The Garter Girl

Five-part Drama; Vitagraph
Directed by EDWARD H. GRIFFITH
Published in May

OPINION: Ordinarily, when a scenario writer has a stage girl refuse her vaudeville partner's proposal of marriage and fall in love with a handsome young clergyman, he has the heroine marry the minister. But in the "Garter Girl" the heroine is lifelike and in the end decides that her teammate in vaudeville shall be her teammate in matrimony.

It's different. Every tradition as to "how to write a scenario" is thrown into the discard. After running along in the familiar channel for 3,000 feet, the story starts to turn just the way no one suspects it will. There is one surprise after another.

There will be few people who see "The Garter Girl" that will not talk about it. It is the type of picture which should increase attendance every day during its run. It is guaranteed the cheapest and most effective exploitation pictures can be given—word of mouth advertising.

Vitagraph has made several splendid productions with Corinne Griffith, but her latest offering sets a new standard for her series. She is given everything a star could ask, a capable cast, intelligently chosen settings and exteriors, and careful editing of the completed negative. Her interpretation of the title role more than warrants the lavish expenditure.

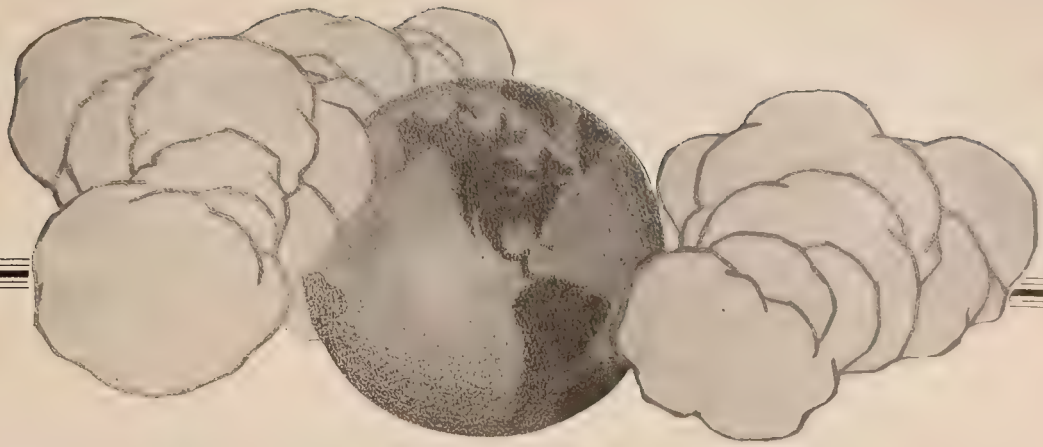
BILLIE RHODES IN His Pajama Girl

Its Success'll Be Record-Breaking

It has the goods from main title to "finis."

It will long be remembered by state right buyer and exhibitors as one of the biggest money making productions ever put out in the independent market.



It has every element to qualify it as a big money maker; star, story, title and novelty.

—and it has that big possibility of putting it on in connection with a chorus of Pajama Girls.

Its Exploitation Angles are innumerable.

The mails are too slow for some state right buyers, they're wiring and both foreign and domestic territories are going fast.

TO THE ENTIRE INDUSTRY

THE SOCIETY OF MOTION PICTURE ENGINEERS at their semi-annual meeting held in Rochester in April, 1918, adopted a "SAFETY STANDARD" film for use in portable projectors. This differs slightly from the "Professional" standard being in the same proportions but somewhat smaller. It is made only on slow burning or non-inflammable stock.

This "SAFETY STANDARD" was based entirely on an ABSOLUTE NEED OF SAFETY outside the theatres and other places adequately protected by law with fireproof booths.

Further it gives any manufacturer of portable projectors a film standard in which there is an available and growing supply of film which is safe for non-theatrical use.

The "SAFETY STANDARD" has made it possible for pictures to be shown in the home, in the class room of the school, in the church, in the lodge and other places, where, if it was not for the "SAFETY STANDARD," fire hazard would be unavoidable because of the necessary handling of inflammable film in the open.

The handling of the "PROFESSIONAL STANDARD" printed on inflammable stock, in anything but a protected fireproof booth built for the purpose (as prescribed by law) was thoroughly recognized by the SOCIETY OF MOTION PICTURE ENGINEERS when discussing and finally adopting this "SAFETY STANDARD."

This "SAFETY STANDARD" in no way competes with the THEATRE INTERESTS, in fact it is a distinct "feeder" to the theatre. It usually brings pictures to a non-theatrical audience and the new interest which is aroused by them induces an element in the community who have previously looked down on the "movies" to go further. The result is a direct benefit to the theatre man and through them to the producer.

"Don't base your ideas of picture audiences upon present ones. Think of your potential audience. That audience includes almost all the public."—Wm. A. Johnston, MOTION PICTURE NEWS, March 20, 1920.

This potential audience lives in no small part among those who are being educated by the "SAFETY STANDARD" to the broader and bigger possibilities of the motion picture.

Industrial Unrest!

ALL over the country there is so much discontent, with wild rumors of revolution flying about, that it becomes a great pleasure to contemplate something with which the American People are entirely satisfied.

Of course we refer to the RITCHEY poster.

And contemplating it we wonder if it doesn't, in a way, suggest a possible cure for the political and economic evils that beset us. It's our job to make posters. We are spending all our time and our energy and our intelligence in making the RITCHEY poster as perfect a poster as it is possible to make. We are interested absolutely and wholeheartedly in that job. It keeps us occupied and prosperous. Its contemplation keeps us happy.

So we think that if everybody else put into their job the same complete interest that we put into ours, the whole country might be a deal better off. Certainly its inhabitants would be a good bit happier—for there is no joy quite so great as that which comes from hard work excellently well done. Which accounts for our happiness and optimism and our exceeding great joy in life—for the RITCHEY poster is certainly a work most excellently well done!

Odds and Ends of Thought

New Sources for Big Pictures

AN exhibitor who observes conditions closely told us the other day, "There is a real definite scarcity of good pictures right now. We are in one of the slump periods that come every once in a while."

Whether or not this view is correct is probably to a great extent a matter of opinion. Also, if it is true that a dearth exists it might be an artificial condition fostered by a desire to hold back sure-fire winners for the Fall market.

We have been prompted to quote this exhibitor's view by the companion thought of our own that never before did the future loom up with such glowing promises of big pictures. Cultivation of the genius and individuality of producers, authors and stars seems destined to bear its reward in bounteous measure when the bell rings for the Fall getaway.

Another encouraging thought is found in the fact that this Fall we must not look to a few selected sources for the bigger production efforts. Old-line organizations and youthful independents seem alike to possess the formula, the capital and the ambition to aim at the top-quality special.

Visions of a closed, monopolized market would seem to have little effect on the humming activities of the Los Angeles studios. "Good pictures will always find their market," sums up the philosophy.

Theatres for the Pictures

WHEN we view column after column recording the construction of new theatres in the section of MOTION PICTURE NEWS devoted to that important field it is encouraging to come back to the thought that there will be plenty of good pictures to meet the quality patronage that these new palaces must have.

We are so busy in this field with a multiplicity of current minor activities that it is not always possible to get a true perspective on major developments. But it has seemed for a period of many months that there has not been a week when MOTION PICTURE NEWS could not record over a hundred important construction operations—either complete overhauling and enlarging of old theatres or the first steps in the building of new ones.

And it is our own opinion that the newer picture palaces can go just as far—if not further—toward selling the screen to new patronage as good pictures can. Theatres built expressly for the screen, refined in atmosphere, complete in accommodations for comfort, have an intimate direct selling force that hits home to that class of the public which has waited this long to be converted to the screen.

Plenty of Room Yet

IT is a cheerful thought, in view of the unprecedented construction boom, that no experienced theatre man we have met expresses a fear that we are "over-building." Indeed, the exact reverse would be indicated by any passing conversation with an exhibitor.

A trip around the suburbs of any big city would give additional proof that there is still plenty of room for new theatres. The country is in the midst of an "Own Your Own Home" movement. Residential districts of the better class are developing overnight in practically all suburbs—and the picture theatre has not yet followed the procession.

Some of these suburban sections will be found that are practically ripe now for development; others will require a year or so for growth. But here, surely, is a wide field for the exercise of the most optimistic thoughts, complete assurance of a rosy immediate future.

Associated Exhibitors Name General Counsel

M. L. Malevinsky, of the law firm of O'Brien, Malevinsky & Driscoll, has been appointed general counsel for Associated Exhibitors, Inc., as well as having been elected secretary of the organization. H. H. Wellenbrink, who previously held the offices of secretary and treasurer, retains his office as treasurer. The election of Mr. Malevinsky was one of the important occurrences at the recent meeting of the board of directors of Associated, which was held in the offices of the association, 25 West Forty-fifth street, New York.

Many matters pertinent to the progress of the Associated Exhibitors were disposed of during the course of the meeting, and it is expected that Associated soon will make announcements of considerable interest. Much of the time of the two-day meeting was consumed in whipping into shape the Associated Exhibitors' sub-franchise proposition.

Among those who attended the meeting were Harry Crandall, of Washington, D. C.; H. H. Wellenbrink, of Newark; Samuel Harding, of Kansas City; Harold B. Franklin, of Buffalo; Dr. Hugo C. Lambach, of Portland, Ore.; Harry M. Lubliner, of Chicago; Dennis Harris, of Pittsburg; I. Libson, of Cincinnati; Paul Brunet and General Manager F. C. Quimby.

Stanley Theatre Cornerstone Laid in "Philly"

On Saturday, May 8th, the corner-stone of the new Stanley theatre at Nineteenth and Market streets, Philadelphia, was laid in the presence of a large gathering of prominent persons and a great crowd of spectators, who braved the stormy weather to watch the ceremonies, which were shortened because of the rain. The actual laying of the corner-stone was done by Mrs. Fanny Mastbaum, mother of the late Stanley Mastbaum and Jules E. Mastbaum, president of the Stanley Company. Governor Sproul of Pennsylvania made a brief address.

Preceding the laying of the corner-stone a luncheon was given at the Bellevue-Stratford at which were present many well-known motion picture producers, exhibitors and newspapermen. The new theatre will cost two million dollars, it is estimated, and will be used for the exhibition of first-run pictures. It will seat 4,000 persons. The interior decorations are expected to be of an unusually artistic order. The latest facilities for the comfort and accommodation of the patrons are to be installed.

Pioneer Pennsylvania Exhibitor Dies

Claude L. Carr, of the firm of Carr & Schad, one of the pioneers in the picture theatres in Reading, Pa., died suddenly on April 28 at his home in Reading. He controlled six theatres in his home city.

Twenty Incorporations in New York State

DURING the past week about twenty concerns have incorporated in New York State for the purpose of entering the motion picture business. The total amount of capitalization represented is $2,006,000. These firms include the Premier Amusement Corporation, capitalized at $1,000,000, and naming as its directors Robert Mintz, Samuel Lesselbaum, Samuel Hellinger, New York; the Nu-Art Corporation, capitalized at $25,000, Jacob S. List, Freda Freeman and Jeannette Herzfeld, Brooklyn; the Fresh Pond Amusement Co., $30,000, Joseph Rubin, Herman Ginsberg and Morris Klepeck, Brooklyn; Gold Star Producing Co., $10,000, Laura W. Maverick, Frank Lloyd, Herman Blumenfeld, New York City; Mount Vernon Playhouse, Inc., $25,000, Ira Knobel, William Stein, Hyman Dominitz, New York City; the Associated Screen News, Inc., $500,000, Louis Russell, Ernest Angell, L. Henry Scully Opens Own New Haven Exchange

Henry Scully for the past ten years associated with the Famous Players-Lasky interests in New England, has resigned his position as manager of the New Haven exchange to open his own exchange in that city. Mr. Scully is a poineer in the film business in New England, being the first man to represent Famous Players in that section. Mr. Scully has acquired the distribution rights to the newly formed Federated Exchanges, as well as the output of Federal Feature Film Company of Boston.

Consider Taking Part of Sunday Receipts

The question of whether or not motion picture theatre owners in Troy, N. Y., will be compelled to turn over a portion of their Sunday night receipts to the Police and Firemen's Pension Fund, is still under discussion. The matter has been brought before the common council, but after a lengthy discussion at a meeting last week, it was again referred to one of the committees. According to a letter from Mayor Lunn, of Schenectady, read at last week's meeting in Troy, motion picture theatre owners in that city are compelled to give five per cent of their receipts on Sunday night to the Child Welfare fund.

Baltimore Fights for Referendum Vote

Another twist was given to the legal battle for Sunday moving pictures in Baltimore when the Board of Election Supervisors filed in Superior Court on Monday an answer to the request of the Lord's Day Alliance for a writ of mandamus prohibiting the Board from submitting the matter to a vote of the people. The reply was filed by Max Ways, William Curran and R. Frank Smith, members of the Board, through Attorney General Armstrong.

Starting with the statement that the Board, as such, can neither sue nor be sued, the answer specifically denies every charge made by the reformers. It admits that the Board intends to print the moving picture proposition on the ballots and denies that such action would be wrong, illegal or in violation of the Maryland State Constitution. It denies that showing of pictures on Sunday would work harm to the morals of the community and in the end denies that the court has acquired jurisdiction in the case inasmuch as the proceeding is against the Board of Supervisors and not against the individuals comprising it.

Catherine Curtis Directors Dine at Ritz

The directors of the Catherine Curtis Corporation gave a dinner on Tuesday evening of this week at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel at which Arthur S. Kane and David P. Howells were welcomed into the directorial board of the Curtis organization. David P. Howells occupies the post of foreign representative for First National, and Arthur S. Kane is Charles Ray's business manager in First National. The following directors were present: William Dewey Loucks, Malcolm McClellan, Albert Spalding, Albert Judson, William Mitchell, George M. Taylor, A. B. Gwathway and Frederick J. Ward. George J. Whalen, who is also a director of the Curtis Corporation as well as president of the United Cigar Stores Company, is at present in England. A cablegram of felicitation was received from Mr. Whalen. John C. Ragland, Arthur S. Kane's general manager, was also present.

Hodkinson Denies Report of Read's Releases

W. W. Hodkinson desires to make the most emphatic denial possible of a statement printed in a recent issue of one of the trade papers. The statement to which Mr. Hodkinson takes exception was to the effect that the First National Circuit of Exhibitors have J. Parker Read, Jr.'s, two forthcoming Glaum and Bosworth productions.

"I cannot make it too emphatic," said Mr. Hodkinson, "that no such state of affairs exists. The two forthcoming Glaum and Bosworth releases will be handled by this organization. Please make the contradiction on the false rumor as strong as you can."

First National Survey Full of Interesting Data

Exclusive Publication of an Exhaustive Report on Theatre Conditions

FIRST NATIONAL EXHIBITORS' CIRCUIT completed on May 1 a survey of the entire exhibiting field of the United States. While the survey was made primarily to provide First National Exchanges with reliable data about the probable reclassification of theatres for next season, a great mass of information reflecting conditions in the exhibitor field as a whole resulted from the survey. It is a resume of these facts which MOTION PICTURE NEWS has obtained for exclusive publication, and the first in the series of articles which will cover the entire country is presented here.

In the publication of these articles MOTION PICTURE NEWS feels that it is laying before its readers an authentic guide to the spirit which exists among exhibitors. The material upon which the articles are based was gathered by First National as an important factor in its advices and recommendations to stars and producers for whose output it has contracts about changes in the theatre market during the summer. Data obtained from exhibitors was checked against real estate transfers, building plans filed, and alteration permits.

In the following articles, the first in the series, is given a resume of the projected developments in the eastern states. This will be followed by resumes of summer activities in the New England States, the Middle Western States, the Western States and the Southern States, in the order named.

Forebodings and pessimism which held sway this spring among the exhibitors in the Eastern States have been dissipated by the most prosperous season they have ever enjoyed. Throughout Pennsylvania, New York, New Jersey and other nearby states the man with the theatre is preparing for even a greater season, beginning next fall. Belief in the future prosperity is evidenced by the general decision to remain open all summer, and not to suspend at all except where needed alterations and refurnishings make it necessary. A large number of third and fourth class houses are planning improvements that will move them up a grade toward their first run brethren.

New York and Pennsylvania will be alive with the erection of new buildings and the enlargement of present theatres, this being especially true in the larger cities. It was inevitable that general building would take place after the demands that were made upon all theatres during the past season. The theatre end of the industry has advanced as rapidly as any other part of the motion picture business and houses that were up to date prior to the war are antiquated and too small now. The congested sections of the larger cities also caused the construction of theatres to supply the demand as it existed at the time they were erected, and although the need for rectification has been felt for some time it took the all too frequent turnaway business of last winter to give impetus to the movement of bringing things up to new standards.

In New Jersey the survey indicates a 4.2 per cent increase in the number of theatres in the 1920-21 season over that of 1919-20; an increase of 11 per cent in seating capacity, a reclassification of 14 per cent, and minor alterations including installations of various devices of 34.8 per cent.

New York State must be considered in two separate sections, for conditions in New York City and in the state outside the greater city, while apparently along the same lines, show a wide divergence in methods and results. Building and enlargements will be rampant all over the state, in and out of the greater city. The greater part of the building within the city is being done by newcomers in the exhibitors' field, while that in the other places is being done by the established exhibitor.

Loew's State theatre, in the heart of the theatrical district of New York, need not be taken into consideration for the purpose of this survey. Its status is well known. A recent development in Brooklyn, however, is not as easy of analysis. It is announced that the Orpheum theatre, directly opposite the new Mark Strand there, and long the home of vaudeville, is to be made an exclusive picture house, as soon as the Keith Circuit can erect a new theatre on a plot of ground it purchased. The Orpheum seats about 1,800 and is one of the best known theatres in Brooklyn.

In practically every well populated residential section of New York City, theatres seating 2,000 to 2,500 are either under construction or have been announced. The contractors are wary about divulging the lessees of these theatres, and in most cases the builders are given as real estate concerns. The completion and opening of many of these theatres, if they are run on a basis warranted by their size, will create many first run territories where second and third class houses now compete for the patronage.

Outside of New York City the most active places in New York State are Buffalo, Olean and Tonawanda. Buffalo is in the midst of the biggest theatrical building boom in its history. In the downtown section ground has already been broken for the new Loew house, Shea's Metropolitan, and before the end of the month the contractors will be busy on the erection of a big theatre for the Olympic Amusement Company on Washington street. On the north side of the city the Hertel Theatre Construction Co. will have a beautiful large neighborhood house ready the early part of June. The new Rivoli, seating 1,800, the erection of which will cost $150,000, is nearing completion on Broadway near Fillmore street, and Manager Harry Dixon expects to be able to open during the first week in July. The twelve hundred seat Capitol on Triangle street, near South Park avenue, has been opened, and the same interests that own this theatre have double the seating capacity of the Maxine on Seneca street, so that it will now accommodate 800. The old Garden theatre has been remodeled and opened as a picture house under the name of the Empire. Extensive alteration plans to be done through the summer have been filed by the General Theatres Corporation for the Ellen Terry, the Marlowe and the Allendale. None of the theatres in the city have announced any intermissions for the summer months except for the purpose of renovating and redecorating or alterations.

From Tonawanda, N. Y., is reported one of the most extensive alteration plans which have developed in the East. This has to do with the remodelling of the Star theatre to change it from a 700-seat house to one which will accommodate 2,000. Contracts have been let and preliminary work has already been started. A horseshoe balcony, with boxes, and an extension of the main floor will provide space for

Pathe Announces Officers for Ensuing Year

AT the annual meeting of Pathe Exchange, Inc., held in New York recently, the following officers were named for the ensuing year.

Charles Pathe, president; Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager; Bernhard Benson, second vice-president; Lewis Innerarity, secretary; Leon Madieu, treasurer; W. C. Smith, assistant treasurer.

The progress made by Pathe Exchange under the direction of Mr. Brunet, for two years vice-president and general manager, made it a foregone conclusion that he woulde be re-elected to his commanding position, the scope of which, in its varied activities, is being steadily increased.

the additional seats. All the houses here will also remain open during the summer.

The Havens theatre on West State street, in Olean, has been sold by James Havens to N. Dipson, of Batavia, N. Y., and Marces James of Buffalo. Mr. Havens has also transferred a lease on the New Gem in the same city to the two men, and they are said to be negotiating, also, for the purchase of the Palace theatre, on North Union street. The new management will take possession of the Havens on June 1, and will begin immediately the running of continuous shows from 11 A. M. to 11 P. M. Messrs. Dipson and James own a string of theatres, including the Family and Grand theatres at Batavia, N. Y.

Many other new theatres are spoken of in various other parts of the state, but plans for them except in three or four instances, are still nebulous and it is doubtful if they will materialize unless there is a big change in the cost of construction work. Verified intentions for new buildings will increase the number of theatres over last season by nearly nine per cent in the whole state, with an increased seating capacity of 11 per cent. Reclassifications, it is indicated, will total slightly less than five per cent.

Pennsylvania is also well up in the lists of states which will show an increase in the number of theatres and of seating capacity at the opening of next season. Harrisburg is the leader in the state, in the scope of projected improvements, and it is doubtful if any city in the country will show a greater advance in the exhibiting field. Wilmer and Vincent, and allied interests, have announced a plan which will call for the outlay of upward of $1,000,000 in the theatrical field in Harrisburg, and the major portion will go into the motion picture field. The plan calls for the extensive remodelling of the two picture theatres already owned by Wilmer and Vincent, the purchase and construction of six additional motion picture theatres, the erection of a legitimate theatre to succeed the present Orpheum, and the reconstruction of the Majestic, which is a combination program of vaudeville and pictures.

The Colonial and Victoria are the two theatres to be remodelled. Work on the Colonial had progressed so far at the time of the survey that it should be finished at this writing, and the alterations to the Victoria were to begin upon the completion of the work on the Colonial. Sites for all three of the new neighborhood theatres to be erected have been procured, and negotiations are nearly completed for the acquisition of the other three by purchase. It is announced that every one of the houses will be put on a first run basis during the coming season, and if this is done, it will raise Harrisburg many notches above a great many larger cities in its general booking classification.

At Uniontown the Penn Amusement Company is erecting a $350,000 theatre which will be completed before winter. The new theatre will occupy the site of the old Lyric and will seat 2,200. It will be devoted exclusively to pictures, but the Fayette theatre, now running only pictures, under the same management, will be altered to accommodate legitimate shows during the season of 1920-21. The alterations will not interrupt the continual showing of pictures throughout the summer, it is said.

Shippensburg will also have a new theatre in the fall. Frank E. Hollar has already filed plans for the building, to be erected on Penn street, on a plot 57x130 feet.

Gettysburg furnishes an example of what is taking place in practically every city and town in the state. Here the Lincoln Way theatre, seating 500, is to expend $4,000 in putting an artistic front on the theatre and in redecorating the interior. The Photo Play theatre, in the same place, will install a ventilating device, and other improvements which are deemed necessary for the comfort of patrons during the summer months.

In Pennsylvania the number of theatres will be increased about 6.4 per cent by next season over the one just closing by the erection of new structures, and the seating capacity about 8.1 per cent. The number of reclassifications is hard to determine but reports indicate that it will amount to approximately 10 per cent.

Conditions in other eastern states are progressive in the line of remodelling, installations of up-to-date equipment, the desire for better shows and the willingness to spend more money for better pictures, but there are no other particularly shining examples of the progress which is contemplated. Generally conditions are good and point to another prosperous season with the exhibitor more confident than he was a year ago that the public will pay the cost of better entertainment.

The whole survey in the eastern states indicate an increase of 8.2 per cent in the number of theatres, an increase of 10.7 in the combined seating capacity, and a probable reclassification of 9.8 per cent.

Convention Arrangements Are Started

Sam Bullock Busy in New York; Cleveland Exhibitor Advises Reservations

SAM BULLOCK, of Cleveland, Ohio, the temporary secretary of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, arrived in New York recently to consult with exhibitor friends on various matters relating to the coming Cleveland convention, June 8, 9 and 10.

Mr. Bullock said that Cleveland would see a real exhibitors' convention next month. "It will be big and real both," he stated. "I am not going into the whole subject because that would keep me from attending to important and pressing business, but I will say this. One of the vital questions that we will take up at Cleveland will be the control of all advertising that seeks the publicity of our screens. Cleveland and other cities have demonstrated beyond all doubt that the revenue from legitimate screen advertising is more than ample to finance exhibitor organizations. The convention at Cleveland will nationalize the plan which originated in Cleveland and Pittsburg. We do not ask members to display slides or reels if they prefer to pay cash dues.

"By capitalizing the publicity value of our screens, either by means of slides or reels, we will build up a national organization which will do things. This Cleveland convention is being called on the biggest and most democratic basis conceivable. Every bona fide exhibitor in the country is welcome. We want to make it plain that exhibitors in the country are welcome. We want to make it plain that exhibitors with open or secret producer affiliations will not be welcome. The convention will make it its business to exclude a producers' lobby no matter how it may disguise itself."

According to Henry H. Lustig, president of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, it will be the part of wisdom for every motion picture theatre owner who intends to come to the convention at Cleveland, June 8 to 11, to wire in his request for reservations without delay. Mr. Lustig, who is an ex-officio member of the committee entrusted with securing accommodations for the visiting delegates, says that they are doing all they can to get comfortable and reasonable quarters for every exhibitor. In view of the increasing number of applications, exhibitors will avoid much inconvenience and annoyance by getting in touch with the Cleveland committee by mail, or preferably by wire.

"We want every delegate to enjoy the hospitality of Cleveland," said Mr. Lustig, "and take away the most pleasant recollections. Therefore, I say let the boys hurry up and we will do our share."

The enthusiasm which pervades all exhibiting ranks everywhere for the Cleveland convention broke out in demonstrative fashion at a meeting of exhibitors held last Friday in Philadqelphia. The meeting had been called by the officials of the Philadelphia organization of which Albert J. Fisher is president and C. H. Goodwin secretary. The meeting was held in the forenoon in the Chamber of Commerce rooms in the Widener Building. A special invitation was issued to Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the State of New York, to address the gathering. There were close to one hundred exhibitors present.

De Mille Remains With Famous-Players

Director Re-Signs with Company for Five Years; Talks on Play-producing

CECIL B. DE MILLE, the noted motion picture director, recently signed a contract for five years with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Mr. DeMille, who, for more than five years has been director general and a member of the board of directors of the Paramount organization, and whose old contract is about to expire, is said to have made a flying trip from Los Angeles to New York to consider offers from several independent producers. Mr. De Mille, after thorough investigation decided not to accept these offers and agreed to remain with Adolph Zukor and Jesse L. Lasky for five years longer.

After completing his arrangements, Mr. De Mille left New York at once for Los Angeles to begin work on a new production in which he will introduce to moving picture patrons a new leading woman who, he believes, will out-rival Wanda Hawley, Bebe Daniels, or Gloria Swanson.

The announcement of the signing of Mr. DeMille's contract was made by Adolph Zukor, president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

"In signing this new contract, Mr. De Mille paid a great tribute to Famous Players-Lasky Corporation," said Mr. Zukor. "He had received offers of immense salaries from actually every other organization of any consequence. He decided to remain with us solely because he felt that in our organization he could produce finer pictures than in any other, and that these pictures would obtain wider distribution and better presentation. He had the entire industry to choose from, and, after thorough investigation, made as a business man as well as a director, selected Famous Players-Lasky Corporation."

Mr. De Mille, just before leaving for Los Angeles, confirmed the report that he had signed with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for five years and that he had rejected other offers after thorough investigation.

"I made my decision," he said, "after investigating thoroughly the efficiency of all the other distributing organizations, as compared with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

"I chose to remain with Famous Players-Lasky because this organization is so splendidly capable of getting wide distribution of its product, not only in America but throughout the entire world. No other company is getting even one-third as great a distribution. I have looked at the books of the other companies and I know.

"Several of my friends have thought it strange that I did not join some 'independent' organization and accept one of the big guarantees offered me. The only thing strange to me, after my thorough investigation of the various advantages of the different offers, is that I ever even considered for a moment the acceptance of any other offer.

Regarding the financing of plays on Broadway by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Mr. De Mille said: "The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, recognized as the leading producers and distributors of the best type of photoplays, acquired, nearly a year ago, control of Charles Frohman, Inc. Since then, through the Frohman offices, as well as in association with other legitimate producers, this company has staged several plays on Broadway. These productions, without exception, have been received with marked favor by critics and public.

"Now, certain gentlemen connected with the theatre assert that the entrance of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation into legitimate production constitutes a peril to the future of the drama.

"I disagree with them. On the contrary, I believe that our entrance into the legitimate field constitutes a genuine, healthy, sincere competition which can only prove of greatest benefit to American dramatic literature.

"The assertions that we wish to produce meretricious or inartistic plays, merely as a feeder to motion pictures, is the most arrant nonsense. And those legitimate producers who have been loudest know it. They know it because they know that, more than any other art of expression, the success of a play depends wholly on the approval of the public. You cannot force on people entertainment that they do not like.

Goldwyn Not to Enter Exhibitors' Field

F. V. Godsel's Statement Denies That Producing Company Plans Theatre Buying

THAT Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has no intention of invading the exhibitor's end of the motion picture business, was clearly emphasized in a statement issued yesterday by F. J. Godsel, chairman of the Executive Committee of Goldwyn. It should set at rest any rumors that this producing and distributing organization is planning to become a factor in the exhibiting field. Mr. Godsel declared emphatically that the Goldwyn policy is opposed to acquiring theatres, except where conditions force such purchases in order to assure a proper showing of Goldwyn pictures.

The statement from Mr. Godsel follows:

"I want to make our position clear in view of all this talk about the way exhibitors feel toward producing companies owning theatres. Months ago, Mr. Goldwyn told where we stood and later I issued a similar statement. Now I want to repeat it. The only place where we will buy or build is where we are shut out of a town. Goldwyn productions must be shown, and if any conditions exist where our pictures cannot be shown in important communities, then we will have to build.

"Goldwyn is averse to buying theatres. We always have been and are today. Make that plain. We are interested in production and production only, and except when unusual conditions confront us, we shall not buy theatres.

"By this I mean that situations arise that do not seem consistent with our general policy. There are exhibitors who feel that they must become allied with a strong producing organization to assure themselves of a proper program, and they approach us to purchase an interest in their houses with that end in view. They, on occasions, intimate and even insist that they will sell to our competitors unless we buy. We therefore at times feel compelled to do this in order to protect ourselves.

"Here is an example: in a certain western city an exhibitor came to me and said that he wanted us to buy an interest in his house. I asked him why. He said it was only a question of time before he would have to sell to one of the big companies to make sure of being able to show good pictures. I told him to go ahead and not worry; that we would assure him of having our pictures, and he was happy. The fear of opposition might have caused another type of exhibitor to sell out. But this exhibitor will remain in business with our product as one of his chief assets.

"That is all there is to it, and so far as we are concerned, that is all there will be. No exhibitor need worry about Goldwyn buying theatres. It is not our business. We are producers."

First National Invades the Southwest

Office Opened in Dallas, Tex., After Hearing of Conditions Prevailing

MOVED by declarations of a special committee representing three hundred independent exhibitors in Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas, officials of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., this week invaded the Southwest in force, established a new First National exchange in Dallas, and started the machinery which will ally the independent theatre owners of that territory in open opposition to the Hulsey Lynch interests.

This action, it is said, was decided upon after the committee of exhibitors from Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas had appeared before First National members at their convention in Chicago two weeks ago and explained there the conditions alleged to exist, and which, they declared, made immediate action by Associated First National necessary if the independence of the tri-state exhibitors were to be preserved. The present status of affairs, these exhibitors said, was particularly threatening to the theatre owners they represented as a committee, because of the Lynch ownership of the Hulsey theatres, the control he had of the Paramount-Artcraft program for that territory, and the fact that Mr. Hulsey, as the holder of the original First National franchise in that district, had not joined his fellow First National members in signing the agreements which would sub-franchise the entire territory to independent exhibitors through Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

Mr. Hulsey's refusal to sign the new agreements wherein he would be obligated to extend the protective and defensive benefits of his First National interests through sub-franchises to the independent exhibitors in the Southwest is said to have been made after he sold his theatre properties to the S. A. Lynch Enterprises. It was this decision, the committee said, which convinced the independent exhibitors that radical measures were essential to avoid a costly and protracted war between themselves, as individuals and independents, and the merged interests which entirely controlled one source of film supply and directed, in part, the disposition of another.

First National members in Chicago requested the Southwestern exhibitor committee to report back to their three hundred associates that prompt steps would be taken to establish Associated First National in Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas without any entangling alliances, and on a basis which would be devoid of any personal element seeking to use its advantages in production sources to establish competing theatres that could not be classed as independent.

Fulfillment of this promise began on Monday of this week when Robert Lieber, president of Associated First National Pictures; H. O. Schwalbe, secretary-treasurer; J. D. Williams, manager; N. H. Gordon of Boston and Moe Mark of New York, who, with Mr. Schwalbe, compose the Executive Committee, and Sol Lesser arrived in Dallas and established headquarters at the Hotel Adelphus, preliminary to establishing a local office for Associated First National.

This branch will be administered from the Home Office in New York, and will function exactly as do the other First National exchanges throughout the country in awarding sub-franchises to the independent theatre owners of the three states. This will automatically guarantee to each sub-franchise holder the exhibition rights to all releases made by Associated First National, and make the proposition of negotiations between theatre owners in the territory and the circuit one of direct application instead of going through the local exhibitor owner of the original First National franchise.

Better Pictures Movement Is Taking Form

The M. P. T. Association of the World is Formed to Support Campaign for Better Films

THE better pictures movement, started by J. A. Quinn several months ago, has taken very definite and concrete form, it is stated, under the direction of the M. P. T. Association of the World, Incorporated, a membership corporation formed under the New York State Board of Trade Article applying to such corporations. In order to carry out its work and enlist the co-operation of the public, the Association has organized the M. P. T. League for Better Pictures, membership in which is announced to be open to the public without dues.

The following statement has been issued by the M. P. T. Association of the World in connection with interests reported to have lent their co-operation with this new organization:

"The M. P. T. movement has been growing in leaps and bounds and has the strong support of the press and public as well as a large number of leaders in the motion picture industry.

"The M. P. T. Association and League memberships include representatives from practically every prominent civic, social, and business organization in the country, and nearly one hundred of the most prominent magazine and newspaper editors, as well as many leaders in the motion picture industry.

"Among the organizations which have recently joined are the Woman's Club of Orange, with a thousand prominent people as members; The American Pen Women, New York Chapter, which includes many of the best known writers of the country; The New York Women's League for Animals, which is composed of many of New York's most prominent and influential men and women.

"Among the members of the industry to enroll recently are Hiram Abrams, head of the United Artists Corporation; E. J. Bowes, Managing Director of the Capitol theatre; Messmore Kendall, President, and Robert W. Chambers, Director, of the Moreland Realty Company which controls the Capitol theatre; Joe Brandt, Director-General of the National Film Corporation; Hugo Reisenfeld, Managing Director of the Rivoli, Rialto, and Criterion; Hugh Dierker, of The Hugh Dierker Productions, of Los Angeles, who is now in New York with his most recent production; and Robert G. Drady.

"The M. P. T. Membership Committee, which is calling on various leading members of the industry and explaining the plan, is meeting with a decidedly encouraging response.

"Any information desired by members of the industry, or others, in regard to the M. P. T. plan, will gladly be given by the Association from its headquarters, 32 West 47th street."

Operator's License Law Changed in Canada

American motion picture operators and photographers are not to be excluded from the Province of Ontario, and will not have to be Canadian subjects according to the information that was received by the Washington Bureau of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry from the State Department.

This announcement is the result of the request of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry made last August for the Candian authorities to reverse their ruling in this matter. At that time the Canadian authorities promulgated certain regulations which required persons engaged as operators or photographers in Ontario to obtain a license. Applications to such licenses were to be issued only to British subjects.

Coming Convention May Split Industry

Independent Exhibitors to Line Up Forces at Meeting in Cleveland June 7

THE national convention of theatre owners at Cleveland, on June 7, is expected, according to current announcement, to openly split the motion picture industry into two distinct and opposing factions. These will be a solidly organized body of several thousand independent exhibitors pledged to support only independent producers who are non-exhibitors, and producer-exhibitors, who are said to be competing and who plan further theatre competition against independent exhibitors, using the productions they control as the chief source of film supply for their own houses.

It is estimated that the total number of exhibitors who will subscribe in Cleveland to an open declaration of organized opposition to producer-exhibitor competition will be approximately five thousand, present in person or represented by proxy through their memberships in state and city leagues.

The prime objective of the Cleveland convention, following the general trend and openly voiced exhibitor sentment of the Chicago mass meeting, will be to take up, with national exhibitor strength, the enlargement of the present membership of the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, organized in Chicago as a semi-temporary body to aid in formulating plans for the June assembly, and which shall have, for its first official performance, the creation and adoption of defensive measures against the patronage seeking opposition of theatres financed, controlled and booked by producers.

It is recalled that the Chicago meeting was particularly pronounced in its spoken demand for a national body of independent exhibitors which will function with complete freedom from personal and political ambitions by its sponsors. That the Cleveland gathering will adopt so-called "steam roller" tactics, if necessary, to keep its sessions free from intrusions of this character was apparent in the expressed determination of many important independent exhibitors who responded to W. C. Patterson's call.

"Politics in Cleveland," declares Frank J. Rembusch, chairman of the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, "will be entirely out of order. Ohio's leading city will witness industrial fireworks of an entirely different character. It is the conviction of every enterprising independent exhibitor in the country that a serious menace confronts him, and not one of them with whom I have talked, or whom I heard address the Chicago meeting, has any intention of paying his personal expenses to Cleveland to aid in the political ambitions of any individual, in or out of any state or national organization."

The opening gun in the campaign of exhibitor defense endorsed in Chicago was sounded in New York late last week, when definite and official declarations of intentions were obtained from seven out of eleven producing organizations questioned by a sub-committee from the Patterson meeting. This group, which was an advance guard for the Committee of seventeen of the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, was headed by Frank Rembusch. The Committee of Seventeen will meet in New York on June 3 and 4.

The Committee of Seventeen, during its two days' sessions in New York, will expect to receive, in that time, a statement from every producer in the business which will put each individual and organization engaged in the production of pictures formally on record for or against producer ownership and producer operation of theatres.

The report of this committee, with the originals of the signed declarations of intentions from all producers, is scheduled to provide the guiding facts for the action the independent exhibitors will take in Cleveland. Supplementing this will be a summarized account of the important information revealed by exhibitors in Chicago, substantiating the claims of Mr. Patterson and others that organized invasion of the independent exhibitor field is being fostered and financed by producing groups.

Mr. Rembusch, as chairman of the Committee of Seventeen, as well as national chairman of the Chicago convention, will submit the committee's report of its New York meeting, thereby putting every producer definitely on record before the convention.

Proctor Joins Associated Exhibitors

Former United Artists Manager Becomes Assistant to F. C. Quimby

RALPH O. PROCTOR, who resigned as assistant general manager of United Artists a few days ago, has become connected in an executive capacity with Associated Exhibitors, Inc. Mr. Proctor will act as general assistant to F. C. Quimby, general manager. His duties will keep him in intimate touch with exhibitors throughout the country, as well as giving him opportunity to broaden the scope of his activities in the executive offices.

Mr. Proctor is a trail-blazer in the motion picture industry. He has been an executive in various capacities with various organizations for more than ten years. He has a broad and deep knowledge of the film rental end of the business, as well as a wide acquaintance with motion picture men in every section of the country.

The new assistant general manager of Associated is said to be particularly adapted to cope with problems peculiar to certain territories. His experience has brought him into close contact with conditions that are existent in individual sections, and his knowledge and experience along these lines is considered authoritative throughout the trade.

Mr. Proctor's connection with the world of the cinema dates back a little further than 1910, when he began his film career as film inspector in the Wabash, Chicago, branch of the General Film Company. From the position of inspector he advanced, having held every position in the branch. He was branch manager for one year, when P. L. Waters appointed him special representative, having charge of Des Moines, Omaha, Kansas City and Oklahoma City. After he had held this position for a while he was made manager of the General Film at Kansas City.

Mr. Proctor resigned from General Film to take a position as branch manager for Metro at Chicago. After holding this important post for a year Mr. Proctor organized the Standard Film Company of Chicago, an independent state rights proposition. This successful venture was operated by Mr. Proctor for two years, when he severed his connection with Standard and became Pathe's manager at Chicago.

From the post of branch manager for Pathe Mr. Proctor was advanced to the position of division manager, having under his supervision Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Omaha, Des Moines, Kansas City, Detroit, Cleveland and Buffalo. Later he was appointed district manager for the Western Division, which included Los Angeles, Denver, San Francisco, Portland, Seattle, Spokane and Butte.

Leaving Pathe, Mr. Proctor was made assistant general manager of United Artists Corporation, joining the organization at its inception. With United Artists Mr. Proctor had charge of the entire organization of the field force. He was also in charge of distribution, covering every distributing territory in the United States.

Chicago and the Mid-West

Covered By L. H. MASON

Harry Rice, of Universal, went to La Salle to direct the big exploitation and advertising campaign which put over "The Virgin of Stamboul" to capacity crowds at the La Salle theatre in that city.

Harry Weiss, of Superior Screen Service, Incorporated, has bought the Illinois and Indiana territorial rights on "Neglected Wives," featuring Ann Luther, Clare Whitney and Charles Girard. Harry is wearing a big smile these days, as his picture, "The Confession," broke all records at the Playhouse on the opening day, despite the temperature being close to 80 degrees. His salesmen also are making heavy bookings for the picture throughout Indiana and Illinois.

Citizens of Benld, Ill., will have to worry along without seeing any moving pictures for a while as the Gem theatre, the only place of entertainment in that town, was struck by lightning and burned to the ground last week, and plans for rebuilding have not been made as yet.

Harry Spanuth, president of the Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, departed for New York this week with a print of the second of the Billy Whiskers' Comedies under his arm. The first of these comedies was a real laugh getter, but Mr. Spanuth declares that the second is a hundred per cent stronger, and he expects to close some pending state right contracts on the entire series while in New York.

Manager Max Levy, of Robertson-Cole's Chicago Exchange added three live wires to his sales staff within the last few days. They are: Charles Miller, formerly with Universal and known as one of the star salesmen of Chicago; I. Natkin, who has spent twelve years in the motion picture business, seven as an exhibitor and five as a salesman, and M. F. Maher, who also has been in the motion picture game for twelve years as an exhibitor and a salesman. Mr. Miller and Mr. Maher will sell to Chicago exhibitors, and Mr. Natkin will cover country territory.

Harry Berman arrived from New York Tuesday, to discuss plans for the erection of an Universal Exchange Building in Chicago, with Manager Lesserman.

Banks Winter has resigned as District Publicity Manager for Universal's southern territory, and has arrived in Chicago from Charlotte, N. C. Mr. Winter has not, as yet, announced his future plans, but it is understood he has an excellent connection in view.

Publicity Director George De Kruief, of Robertson-Cole's Chicago office, already is at work on advance publicity for the coming Carpentier releases, and this week placed three life-sized paintings of the battling Frenchman in the windows of the Owl Drugstore at Quincy and State. The interest the public takes in Carpentier was evidenced by the fact that the traffic police had difficulty in keeping the crowds moving, so great was the throng which stopped to look at the pictures. Mr. De Kruief has arranged tie-ups with a number of other stores in the Chicago loop where pictures of Carpentier will be shown.

Fred Linick and H. O. Martin were in St. Louis this week for the opening of Mack Sennett's Bathing Girls at the American theatre. The show was produced by Mr. Martin and Fred Linick owns the rights for Missouri and Kansas. Mr. Martin later will visit several cities in the interest of "The Woman He Chose," which he is putting on the state right market for the Mickey Film Company of Chicago. Paul Neusies was in charge of Linick's Chicago office during the absence of Messrs. Linick and Martin.

Contracts recently closed by the Chicago office of the Typhoon Fan Company for the installation of ventilation systems in the moving picture houses include those made with the D. Robinson's Apollo theatre, Peoria; Rex Lawhead's Lincoln Square theatre at Decatur; John Marlow's Hippodrome theatre, Herron, Ill.; Billy Mueller's Jefferson theatre, Jefferson, Mo., and the Paramount theatre at Logansport, Ill., owned by W. H. Lindsay. Installation of the Typhoon System in these theatres is expected to be completed before the hot weather sets in, so that patrons will enjoy cool breezes while in the theatre, even when the mercury is hitting the top of the tube outside. A large installation is also being put into the lobby of Chicago's northside theatre de luxe, the Riviera, so that patrons waiting for the show may be kept cool and comfortable.

Cecile B. De Mille spent a few hours in Chicago Monday conferring with the managers of the local office of his company. Mr. De Mille was en route from Los Angeles to New York.

Famous Players-Lasky's two publicity experts, Messrs. Roche and Cassidy, are busy men these days, as exhibitors, booking Paramount-Artcraft super specials, appreciate the value of their exploitation services and are asking them to come to the various cities and towns in the territory and take personal charge of the advertising and exploitation campaigns. Mr. Roche just returned from Rock Island where he helped the Colonial theatre put over a week's run of "Everywoman," and Mr. Cassidy this week is doing publicity work at Fond du Lac, Green Bay and Oshkosh.

A highly successful four weeks' run of "Why Change Your Wife?"" at the Randolph theatre, Chicago, has acted as a stimulus to exhibitors of nearby cities to make extended bookings of this money-making De Mille feature, and Manager Blackford, of Famous Players-Lasky Chicago office reports many contracts signed up for runs of a week or longer from houses ordinarily booking for three and four days.

Ludwig Schindler spent last week in New York making further plans for the exploitation of "The Woman He Chose," which recently had a very successful three weeks' downtown showing in Chicago.

E. E. Fulton is recovering from the illness which has confined him to his home for two weeks, and expects to be back at the big desk in the E. E. Fulton Company's plant before the end of the month.

O. F. Spahr, of the Enterprise Optical Company, has returned to Chicago after a visit to New Orleans, Dallas, and other cities of the Southwest. He reports that the demand for Motiographs in that territory is threatening to swamp the Enterprise Optical Company's plant, despite its largely increased output. While in Dallas, Mr. Spahr took up the matter of the big demand for Motiographs, with H. K. Barnet, of the Theatre Supply Company, distributors for Motiographs in that territory, and plans were made to facilitate shipments and give purchasers the very best of service.

Carl Harthill, manager of Reelcraft's Chicago Exchange, also has been given charge of that company's Milwaukee office. Mr. Harthill was in Milwaukee last week, looking over the field there, and reports that the exchange at that place is making an excellent record.

Century Films, Inc., is the latest independent exchange to enter the Chicago field. It was organized by Maurice A. Salkin and Henry Ellman, who are well known to exhibitors and exchangemen of this district, and offices have been opened in the Film Exchange Building, 207 South Wabash Avenue. The first feature which will be released through Century Films is the Leonard Myberg production, "Are You Legally Married?" featuring Lew Cody, for which Messrs. Salkin and Ellman have secured the rights for Illinois and Indiana.

Alice Howell, working under the direction of Frederick J. Ireland, is putting the finishing touches on "Cinderella Cinders," the fifth of her comedies produced for Reelcraft, and work is also under way on the sixth of the series at the Emerald Studio.

Manager Vandawalker reports that Hallmark's Chicago office broke all records for business during the week ending May 1.

Manager Deneen, of the Alcazar, has booked "School Days," the laugh-getting Larry Semon comedy, for a second week, as he declares it is one of the biggest money-getters ever shown at that house.

M. J. Mintz, who is representing the Celebrated Players Film Corporation in the sale of the state rights for the famous cartoon films, "The Gumps," is back in Chicago after a trip to Cleveland and Pittsburgh. At Cleveland he sold the state rights for Ohio and Kentucky to the Warner Film Attractions, of that city, and in Pittsburgh he closed a contract with the Apex Pictures, Incorporated, to take over the state rights for Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia. While in Cleveland, acting as representative for the Chicago Tribune, Mr. Mintz also contracted with the Cleveland News to publish "The Gump" cartoon daily.

Practically all the territory in the East and Central West now has been disposed of, and Mr. Mintz is expecting to leave for the West Coast within a few days to dispose of the Gumps Animated cartoons in that territory.

H. J. Aldous, treasurer of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, has left for Los Angeles where he will give personal supervision to the placing of contracts for the construction of the Rothacker Laboratory on the West Coast.

Frank Lorsch has come from St. Louis to take charge of the publicity department of Goldwyn's Chicago Exchange made vacant by the resignation of S. G. Sladdin.

R. C. Seery, general manager for the First National Exhibitors' Exchange for Illinois, following a strenuous but very successful season for First National Exhibitors' Exchange, is enjoying a two weeks' rest at Excelsior Springs, Mo., and incidentally preparing himself for the new franchise campaign for First National.

F. M. Booth, formerly with Fox, has joined the Metro sales-staff, working out of the Chicago office, and will cover the smaller cities in Eastern Illinois and Indiana.

Stillman Theatre, Cleveland, Stages Big Fashion Show

New Song Contest Idea Originated

As exploitation for "Alias Jimmy Valentine" the New Olympia theatre of New Haven, Conn., held a song writing contest which received a lot of attention. The New Olympia published the verse and music for the song and held its contest for the words of a chorus suitable for the music supplied.

As an incentive for the patrons of the theatre to compete, the announcement was made that the song would be published by a responsible firm on a royalty basis and that the writer of the chorus selected by the judges would share in the royalties the composition would earn.

The musical director of the Olympia selected the best chorus written during the contest.

Bruce Scenic Decided Novelty

ALMOST unusual scenic is the Bruce offering at the Rialto this week under the title of "The Hope of Adventure," not so much because of its exceptional artistic value but as a novelty in that quite a large portion of it was shot while the cameraman was roosting on the top of a jolting narrow gauge railroad train as it puffed its way upgrade between mountains towering on each side, over spindle legged wooden trestles, through low and narrow tunnels where, if Mr. Cameraman and Mr. Bruce stayed on top, as evidently they did, the going must have been bad for the time being on account of the smoke.

The titling is also excellent, a thread of a story being chronicled in which a man goes in search of adventure, selecting the route shown by the picture as the path over which he hopes to obtain a thrill.

A practical calendar which will advertise the attractions coming to his theatre and specify the dates they will be shown has been originated by T. R. Wright, manager of the Bluebird theatre, Dallas, Texas. The calendar does not attempt to be artistic, which is where most theatres fail when they go in for this sort of advertising, but it does tell the patrons of the Bluebird what is coming to the theatre, which is the main object of a calendar.

Description of this calendar detailed enough to be of use to those who wished to copy it would take more space than we can spare. If you are interested in getting up a calendar, write Mr. Wright for a copy.

Stillman, Cleveland, Presents Style Show

Historical Event in Flower City Tied-up with Theatre's Program

FOR the first time in the four years since it was built, Loew's Stillman theatre has deviated from the straight and narrow path of showing pictures, all pictures and nothing but pictures, and featured the most elaborate style show that Cleveland has ever seen. The occasion was linked up with the golden anniversary of The Wm. Taylor Sons Company, a local department store that has been catering to the public of Cleveland continuously for fifty years. Manager Jack Kuhn of the Stillman appreciated the civic pride connected with the event, and entering into the spirit of the jubilee, inserted in his program a one-reel commercial film made for the Taylor store. This film, called "FIFTY GOLDEN YEARS," was of historical interest. It went back to the early days of 1870; it showed the principal points of Cleveland at that time. It showed the main streets, the public places, costumes in vogue at that time. And then it went on to show the Cleveland of today. Anne Luther played the leading role in the picture. Following this reel came the style show. Half a dozen girls participated in it, and, with the coöperation of those connected with the Stillman theatre, especially Mr. Kuhn and resident manager Mr. Klein, it was put on so as to be the talk of the town.

Heavy green velvet curtains hid the stage from view. A dainty little maid, in black, with white apron, and white cap, came out before the curtain, displaying a neat card on which was the announcement of the costume to be shown. Musical Director Spitalny supplied special musical themes for the occasion. The theme for this little announcing maid was especially attractive. When she had made her last curtsy before retiring, the curtains were slowly drawn back, and there stood the model, with another green velvet drop as a background. It was extremely elaborate and classy and didn't savor in the least of an advertisement. To themes suitable to the gowns, the mannikins walked or danced or posed as the occasion demanded, until the whole gamut had been shown.

The whole thing took about an hour. Nowhere, in the style parade, did the name of the department store appear.

Did the novelty attract the public? Well, rather. To begin with, there were two exhibitions a day, one in the afternoon and one in the evening. After Wednesday, Manager Kuhn announced that thereafter there would be two exhibitions every evening—one for the early show, and one for the second performance. Crowds packed into the theatre to see it. They stood, a solid mass from the railing to the entrance doors, a distance of about twenty feet.

The Stillman theatre made a big hit with the residents of Cleveland by celebrating with them a tangible evidence of the city's growth. He has made the Stillman a part of Cleveland by associating it with the old as well as the new regime. He has made a lot of friends for the theatre by his departure from his regular straight picture policy, and he has boosted the city that is boosting the Stillman theatre.

Exploitation of Merit From Three Western Cities

The billing last week at the Rosemary theatre, Ocean Park, Cal., was as shown by the cut at the left, comedy and feature each getting an equal share. All records for attendance were broken according to Manager James Sams.

Proving That Small Town Exhibitors Can Do Things

THAT the small town exhibitor is not able to put over a picture along the lines followed in the cities, is proven pure bunk by relating the manner in which Mrs. Clendon, manager of the one and only theatre of Avant, Okla., staged a prologue for "Eyes of Youth."

Mrs. McClendon hired ten local people from the town and dressed them up in simply made costumes representing Hindoos, dancing girls, etc. These were arranged in a group around the stage. On a slow curtain with the house darkened, a double quartette rendered a beautiful solo after which the house was gradually lighted and when brought to full illumination, revealing pretty and effective grouping, an elocutionist stepped to the center of the stage while the spot light was played on him and recited a dramatic poem of love. The light effect and the group held the riveted attention of the audience while the elocutionist recited the poem. Instantly after he had finished, the double quartette sang another number with full light effect and as the song and music gradually died out lower and lower, the stage lights were correspondingly lowered until the house was again entirely darkened and chimes were sounded back stage. As the chimes ceased the picture was running, the whole being blended together into one harmonious whole, making a splendid effect.

"The people were hired at very low cost, as the enterprising woman manager of the theatre selected those who were eager to help out in the staging, it being quite an honor in Avant, to appear on the stage in any manner. The double quartette were from two local churches and as they worked only a few minutes at the night performances the cost was negligible, thus the entire cost was small while the effect was magical."

Here we have an example of enterprise and brains well mixed with a little shrewd showmanship thrown in, giving the theatre a splendid prestige and the picture a cracking fine send-off. The prologue was enthusiastically applauded and was the "talk of the town" which advertising, though invaluable, cost the theatre nothing and the news of the novel presentation packed the house at every performance.

Good Twist to Free Ticket Idea

Using a motion picture to promote attendance in the public schools is the unique twist given the old exploitation stunt of free children's matinees by the Tivoli theatre in Beaumont, Texas.

The stunt was put over in coöperation with the Beaumont, Texas, Journal, when "Anne of Green Gables" was shown in that city.

The free matinee for children was announced for the morning of Saturday, April 17th. Every school child in the city's public schools who arrived at his or her desk on time during the entire week was promised a free ticket for the matinee.

In addition to stirring up competition among the youngsters to show a perfect attendance record, rivalry was stimulated between the various rooms in a school and between different schools as to which would produce the best record.

The plan also had the hearty coöperation of parents and was most favorably commented upon as a means of establishing regular school attendance and habits. Losing out on the show by failing to get to school on time regularly was considered to be a more effective chastisement and form of discipline than could be administered at home.

A Problem for the Wise Guys

AT 7.00 P. M. Sunday evening, or rather the middle of the afternoon, New York time, the Capitol theatre was playing to S. R. O. for all of the balcony and the lower priced seats down stairs.

This was in spite of the fact that New York was experiencing its first real warm sunshiny day and that the Capitol seats 5,400 people.

What was the reason? One of two things, or both. "The Silver Horde" is the principal film attraction at this house for this week. We sat in the middle of the house and from all sides could hear at intervals sentences which intimated that a considerable number of the audience were familiar with the novel from which the feature is adapted, and had undoubtedly been influenced in attending by this fact. "Hans and Gretel" is the opera being sung, an engagement extended from a week some month or so ago. We noticed an unusual number of children and women in the audience, especially in the balcony. Does the fairy story which is told in this composition appeal to women and children?

Waiting lines are not new to Broadway, but waiting lines under the conditions we have described are. There is another possible reason. An unusual amount of exploitation for New York has been given the feature picture.

Puts Picture in Bank Vault

As exploitation for "The Virgin of Stamboul," at the Ansonia theatre, Butte, Montana, a tie-up with the Silver Bow National Bank of that city was effected that produced good results.

When the print of the picture arrived in Butte it was placed under the guard of two patrolmen with due ceremonies and then locked up in the silver chest of the bank's safety deposit vault.

In connection with the idea to impress the public with the value, intrinsic as well as in entertainment qualities, a tie-up was secured with a Butte bonding company, whereby all the persons handling the film during the Ansonia showing were placed under bond. The novelty of the ideas was instrumental in securing some good newspaper stories and started people talking about the attraction.

Atmosphere More Important Than Music

FRANK COSTELLO, manager of the Tivoli theatre, San Francisco, and entitled to credit for the many prologues that have spread the fame of this house, believes that creation of the proper atmosphere before starting the run of the feature is far more important than incidental music or any other aid to the showing. He declares that so popular have the prologues become that the most frequent telephone inquiry received at the theatre is in regard to the time of the beginning of the speaking introduction which he uses for all feature pictures.

While prejudiced in favor of prologues he declares that a "hit or miss" speaking act preceding a picture is worse than nothing at all. He bases his prologues upon the most impressive part of the feature and builds up the dialogue for the actors so that the sub-titles in the picture fit into the talking by the characters in a natural manner.

His method of deciding upon the most impressive part of the feature is unique. As soon as he has booked a feature he arranges for a run of it during the morning hours so that his entire house staff, including the ushers, ticket-takers and box office people can be present. They are provided with a list of the sub-titles in the picture and as the feature is run they make their own notations as to the titles which take place in the part of the picture which most impresses them. At the conclusion of the run all the annotated title lists are collected and a prologue built up on the titles which have been selected by the majority of the staff.

With the showing of "The Beauty Market," the part of the picture where the husband's patience departs and he wrathfully calls by telephone the house where he knows his wife is a guest was selected as being the most impressive. The prologue setting was that of a ballroom in a private house. Sixteen people took part, four of them comprising an orchestra. A program of dancing interspersed with singing and instrumental solos was given and then as the couples started dancing again the lights faded out, showing two transparencies in the rear set. The one on the left was that of a boudoir, that on the right of a man's study. A maid is seated reading in the boudoir. The study is occupied by a man perplexed. Suddenly the man, registering that he had reached a decision, takes up the telephone and calls a number. The maid answers and then goes and calls to the telephone one of the gayest of the dancers. Then ensued a dialogue based upon the titles carried in the picture. As it ends the two transparencies fade out, and a third in the center, showing her lover awaiting in the garden, was lighted. This one faded out to the beginning of the run of the picture.

According to Mr. Costello the prologue more than paid its cost by the added interest in the picture.

Shea Designs Prologue for "Why Change Your Wife"

When the Palace theatre of Little Rock, Ark., managed by J. Frank Shea, played "Why Change Your Wife?" a prologue and stage setting was featured.

On this page is shown the stage setting provided for the number. The prologue proved a great success and was instrumental in attracting a great deal of extra business for the engagement.

Original Prologue Staged by Shea

J. Frank Shea, manager of the Palace theatre, Little Rock, Arkansas, was responsible for one of the most pretentious presentations of a motion picture ever staged in his city when he originated and put over a stage setting and prologue number for "Why Change Your Wife?" during its engagement at the Palace.

The stage setting originated for the event may be seen by inspection of the cuts on the opposite page.

The door to the "room" where the actress, who was secured for the role in the prologue, was discovered when the curtain rose, was screened with transparent gauze and had lights attached to a dimmer on both sides and top. As the curtain rose a sardonic masculine laugh was heard off stage. As the lights were gradually raised the laughing was taken up by the actress, who could now be seen sitting at her dressing table with hair disheveled and clothes unkempt.

After a moment, she began reciting lines from Kipling's "A Fool There Was," while posing before a hand mirror, touching her lips with grease paint, placing a garter and generally interpreting the role interposed with laughter until she finally appeared a radiant young woman perfectly dressed.

As an epilogue another verse was added to the lines used in the opening and as the performer finished them the lights were dimmed out. Throughout the recitation the orchestra assisted with the rendition of appropriate music.

As exploitation the Palace used a lobby display, window displays and mirror decorating throughout the city. The telephones were used to call up everybody in town, advising them to see the picture. Two girls were especially employed for this purpose.

The Palace has an orchestra and an organ and specializes in presenting a good musical program.

The Illustrated Song Coming Back

In spite of the fact that ten years ago the exhibitors found out that the illustrated song was something that the average movie fan of the day endured rather than enjoyed, the use of the song slide is again coming into favor.

Recently at the Pershing theatre, St. Louis, Mo., the old song slide was brought back. Get the situation correctly! The Pershing is a magnificent first-run house, twenty-two piece orchestra, organ, and the complete furnishings of an up-to-date theatre. Be that as it may, Tom Terry, the organist, played a solo called "Love Me." Slides were then thrown on the screen and the ladies were requested to sing. They did. The slides were thrown back and the men were requested to beat the ladies. They did. Once more the slides flashed and the entire assemblage rendered the song.

Flour City Exploitation Campaign Stirs Up Dust

FINKELSTEIN and Ruben, the well known twin city exhibitors, recently staged a smashing exploitation campaign in introducing Mary Miles Minter to Minneapolis a campaign that shook up the flour city in a way it is likely to remember for some time to come.

They enlisted the aid of prominent society people of the city to boost five free morning matinees for several thousand poor children. Five thousand calling cards were dropped from an aeroplane over the city. Twenty thousand post cards were mailed to a select list and thousands of novel throwaways distributed from house to house. A record amount of newspaper and billboard advertising nailed down the lid of this strenuous effort.

All of which went to indicate that the mill owners are not the only ones who can stir up dust in Minneapolis. Following the advice of one of its leading concerns the populace of the city did it then and there. According to the returns from the Finkelstein and Ruben boxoffice, it appeared that the city had declared an unofficial holiday in response to the campaign.

The campaign extended over a period of ten days and was noteworthy not only for its size and scope but for its effective copy matter which it has developed. On the Friday preceding the opening, a 100-inch (five columns twenty inches deep) advertisement was carried in all three of the Minneapolis newspapers. The Tribune, News and Journal.

One two-column advertisement ten inches deep was carried in each of the three newspapers on the next day and on the opening day two three-column advertisements ten inches deep were inserted in each one of the papers and a three-column advertisement fifteen inches deep was carried in addition in two of them. All the advertising featured the star prominently.

During the week of showing the firm used its regular advertising space and in addition engaged a three-column ten-inch deep space in each one of the three newspapers for a solid week. All the advertising used in this large campaign was different and specially prepared by Finkelstein and Ruben. They represent not only a good consistent average, but several stood out for their artistic effectiveness.

The series of five morning matinees arranged for poor children in the city during the showing brought very satisfactory publicity results. A pass to the theatre and two street car tickets were mailed to each child with an invitation to come, in coöperation with the Associated Charities organization of Minneapolis.

Prominent society people gave their time to act as patronesses for the children at these matinees. This angle of the stunt was seized upon by the newspapers in giving publicity. The names of the society people were used as a basis for featured stories for each one of the matinees.

Novelty Post Cards Get Attention at Lorain

The Opera House, Lorain, Ohio, involved pretty nearly the whole town in its recent exploitation campaign for "WHY CHANGE YOUR WIFE?." and incidentally made the picture the sole topic of conversation both at afternoon teas and in barber shops—meaning that the men and the women were both talking about it.

Manager Theopolis of the Opera House got up a list of a thousand married men in Lorain. To each of these thousand men he mailed a set of four post cards. The first one read: "Darling: What if you do like jazz and she's keen for the classics—Why Change Your Wife?

(Signed) "BETH."

The second one read: "Honey: Even though she would improve your soul, Why Change Your Wife?

(Signed) "BETH."

The third one read: "Dear: Suppose she does want to be hooked up while you're shaving, Why Change Your Wife?

(Signed) "BETH."

And the last one: "Sweetie: A banana skin can shape your destiny—so Why Change Your Wife?

(Signed) "SALLIE."

These appeared the four days preceding the opening of the play. At first, the wives were inquisitive. Then they became interested. The third one made them suspicious and the fourth one cleared up all the mystery and put Mr. Husband back in good standing.

But they talked. Everybody talked about it.

Allens Take Advantage of Circumstances

A series of unusual incidents occurred in connection with the presentation of "The Partners of the Night," at the Allen theatre, Toronto, Ontario. It happened that two players who appeared in the picture were present in Toronto as members of a theatrical company which was playing at another local house. These were Emmett Corrigan and Vincent Coleman and their stage vehicle was "Martinique," which was the attraction at the Princess theatre. Coleman made personal appearances at every performance in the Allen theatre during the local engagement. Corrigan also attended several shows at the Allen theatre in company with friends in order to see the picture.

During the presentation of "Partners of the Night," a mystery woman stunt was pulled off. Announcements were made that "Mysterious Mae Regan" was at large in Toronto and a reward of $10 was offered for her capture. Twice during the week she was apprehended, once on Monday and again on Wednesday. A Toronto young lady essayed the role and it was another young lady who captured her in the downtown section of Toronto at Monday noon. "Mae Regan" was also caught by four children outside of Allen's Bloor theatre on the Wednesday night.

Best Presentation to Date of "Virgin of Stamboul"

Some of the lobby decorations and house employes in harem costumes which were a notable feature of the presentation of "The Virgin of Stamboul" at the Superba theatre, Los Angeles. Also (top cut) a scene from the atmospheric prologue staged for the showing, in which some of the best talent Los Angeles afforded took part.

Kashin Wins Bet and Obtains Much Publicity With Clever Idea

Montreal Exhibitor Refused Cooperation by Newspapers Pulls New Stunt

ONE recent Saturday night about eight o'clock the principal shopping and amusement streets of Montreal were suddenly enlivened by the raucous shouts of a number of excited newsboys announcing "Extree Spechul Herald"—"Great Air Robbery—Great Air Robbery."

"Great Air Robbery.—Officer Makes Daring Attempt to Rob Aerial Mail" the people read. "My God!" said one man, "what will they do next?" "Goodness me!" said a woman, going pale with apprehension, "they will be getting in at our bedroom windows next." "What were the police doing?" said the groucher who always knows where to put the blame.

Then, as under the electric light standards, store windows and the aid of matches, this barefaced attack upon the rights and peace of the community was eagerly read in cold print, it dawned upon the people that they had been "spoofed" and "spoofed good." The whole thing was an advertisement for the Holman theatre, carefully thought out and splendidly engineered. Morris Kashin, manager of the Holman theatre, hates to be balked in any of his desires. He had booked "The Great Air Robbery" and the cooperation he had anticipated from the papers had been denied him. He had suggested several stunts to the different papers, but instead of being received with open arms, he received the cold shoulder. "No, no, Mr. Kashin," they said, "that sort of thing might do for Broadway but not here—besides we are too wide awake to have things put over us like that." This aroused Mr. Kashin and in the end he had bet one of these big men a ten dollar hat that in his very own paper he would pull over a stunt that would open his eyes.

And this is what Mr. Kashin did. He quietly took a page advertisement, marked it extra special and gave it the authority of "The Aero Publishing Service," if such a service may exist. The upper half of the page with its newspaper headlines appeared as a genuine announcement of a sensational news scoop—for it simply read "Great Air Robbery. Officer Makes Daring Attempt to Rob Aerial Mail Only Fifty Feet Away." The other part of the page—an exact half—contained the advertisement part. Now when the latter half was folded back underneath the top, there was nothing apparent at first sight—nothing before the reader had assimilated the fact that there had been an attempt at robbery—to show that it was nothing but a genuine newspaper sensation. Mr. Kashin bought 10,000 extra papers, had then folded with the upper half of his announcement showing, and started out his boys on probably the most ingenious advertising stunt ever pulled off in Montreal.

The newspapers took their defeat very cheerfully and are now waiting for the next stunt that Kashin will pull off. In the meantime Mr. Kashin is wearing a new hat and a well-known newspaper man is being mercilessly chaffed.

Advertise This Big: It's Worth It

ONE of the most unusual bits of film ever released is to be found in a part of the Pathe News strip under the title of "With the Pacific Fleet," being shown as a part of the weeklies at at least four Broadway theares this week.

The much talked about "smoke screen" as applied to the navy is given practical demonstration and the picture secured is a revelation both in beauty and in proving just what a "smoke screen" really is.

As the big battleships of the Pacific fleet steam past the camera, on the far side of the vessel is shown the smoke boat's slim four funnels, swift moving craft keep a little before them, the funnels pouring out a black fog of extreme density that mounts slowly in great dark banks, completely obscuring anything which lies beyond and naturally acting vice versa to anyone situated on the other side of the smoke cloud.

The strip is well worth featuring on any program. The fact that it has been selected for a part of all the Broadway house's news weeklies is evidence that it is of unusual merit.

Brown Improves 'Plane Advertising Idea

Takes Circus Joe Martin With Him for Aerial Flight

THERE'S been monkey business in Memphis recently. The Memphis we refer to is Memphis, Tenn., down in Dixie on the banks of the turbid Mississippi, and the instigator of the monkey business is none other than G. E. Brown, director of publicity and advertising of the Memphis Enterprises, Inc., which operates six motion picture theatres in that southern metropolis.

The monkey business in this instance, however, had a motive behind it. The motive was the exploitation of "What's Your Husband Doing?"

The stunt is decidedly out of the usual line insofar as the monkey part is concerned. Mr. Brown took advantage of the fact that the Sanger circus was wintering in Memphis and through negotations with the management, obtained permission to use Patsy, the largest trained monkey the circus boasts, for an airplane ride over Memphis.

Two trips were made to the aviation grounds, the first being on a Sunday prior to the showing of "What's Your Husband Doing?" at which time one of the leading afternoon papers ran several front page feature stories on Patsy's ascent into the clouds.

The paper carried these feature stories two days prior to Patsy's first visit to the field. When Sunday came, there were more than 1,000 persons on the grounds to get a close-up view of the daring Simian aviatrix and the kids, of whom there were several hundred, had the time of their lives ogling Patsy while the camera man snapped her aboard the plane.

All attempts to have Patsy arrayed in the customary aviation garb proved futile but she was not averse to going aloft.

The flight proper was made on Tuesday morning during the showing of the picture at the Strand theatre where it ran the week. One hundred free passes to the Strand were distributed from the clouds as the plane soared over the business district of the city. Everyone in Memphis was on the lookout for the plane and as the bits of cardboard fluttered in the wind, small boys started on a wide goose chase for it was as difficult to run down one of the cards in the high wind as it is to chase the end of the rainbow. However a goodly number of the pasteboards were turned in at the boxoffice during the week.

As the result of the stunt, front page publicity was obtained for five days with illustrations accompanying the story for three days.

The cost to the Memphis Enterprises, Inc., was the cost of the cards, the plane being donated by the Memphis Aerial Co. That the stunt paid well at the boxoffice and should do well elsewhere where planes are available, is evidenced by the fact that the opening day records set a new mark and the Strand played to capacity during the entire engagement.

Universal To Install New Comedy Brand

Beginning early next fall, Universal will release only one brand of two-reel comedies, it was announced recently, upon Mr. Carl Laemmle's return from the Coast. With the projected concentration on one brand, Universal asserts it will strive to turn out a series of comedy releases second to none. They will all be called Century Comedies, and the Century bathing girls will figure largely and pleasingly in most of them.

Fred Fishback, the leading director for the L-Ko comedies, recently arrived in New York and sold the Universal on the idea of a new style of clever comedy. He brought one print with him to prove his point. It is called "A Movie Hero" and is a laughable satire on screen idols. It will be one of the first pictures released under the new one-brand schedule.

Educational Has New Brand of Comedies

With the opening of the new Educational Films Corporation exchanges a new series of two-reel comedies will make their appearance. These will be known as the Mermaid Comedies and will be released monthly.

Mermaid Comedies will be divided between male and women stars, Lloyd Hamilton, of "Ham and Bud" fame and more recently appearing in Sunshine productions, will be starred in six of these while in six others a noted woman player will be seen. In the initial release, "A Fresh Start," Marvel Rea, the beauty who was featured by Mack Sennett, will have the stellar part. Jack White, who won such distinction for his directorial work with Mack Sennett and for the Fox Sunshine brand will have charge of these comedies.

Addition of this series provides Educational with three series, each of which will appear once a month the Chester and the Torchy Comedies having already been announced.

E. J. Ratcliffe Is Cast In Metro Special

E. J. Ratcliffe, who has been engaged to play Holbury, the "heavy," in the S-L all-star production of "Love, Honor and Obey," a picturization by Eugene Walter of Charles Neville Buck's novel, "The Tyranny of Weakness," at Metro's New York studios in West Sixty-first street, is a veteran of the stage, remembered by New Yorkers as a member of Daniel Frohman's stock company at the old Lyceum theatre.

Mildred Davis To Stay In Lloyd Comedies

Mildred Davis, who jumped into fame by her performances opposite Harold Lloyd in his series of $100,000 two-reel comedies distributed by Pathe, has renewed her contract with the Rolin Film Company. This insures her appearance with Lloyd in his second series of two-reelers, the first of which is now under way in the new Rolin Studio at Culver City.

Live News From The Producers

Fox Signs Emile Chautard

Famous French Director to Produce Popular Detective Stories

ONE of the most important announcements coming from the executive offices of William Fox, president of the Fox Film Corporation, during the present spring season is that issued this week regarding the engagement of M. Emile Chautard, the French director. M. Chautard, whose skill in the staging of many of the most successful screen productions has brought him an international reputation, has been signed by William Fox to produce a series of superspecial films.

Decision has already been reached by Mr. Fox as to the productions which first will go into work. They will be a series of the celebrated detective stories "Fantomas," the mystical tales by Pierre Souvestre and Marcel Allain. While small portions of these successful stories are already known to the screen, having been produced in Europe several years ago in a crude manner—it is announced by Fox that all the material which will be utilized for this series will be brand-new and will number twenty-six stories in all. It is planned by the Fox organization, however, with the greater possibilities offered by facilities today, to make this a superspecial series in every sense of the word, and to dress the productions most lavishly as to settings and property detail.

Not only has William Fox engaged M. Chautard, but in bringing this eminent Frenchman under his trademark the organization is further augmented by the addition of the director's entire staff of cameramen, art and technical experts, cutters, property men, and assistant directors.

"Little Cafe" a Warm Weather Picture

"The Little Cafe," scheduled for release by Pathe on June 6, is described as an ideal production for entertainment in the warm months. It is one of the livest, lightest comedies of the year, full of the sparkling activity of the French comedian, Max Linder, and replete with summer scenes in the gardens of outdoor restaurants of Paris.

It is the first hint of the mad, gay Paris of old that has been screened since the outbreak of the war in 1914. All the splendor of the night life there, the life of the cabarets, the theatres, the revues, and the music halls has been filmed.

Mayflower Officials See "The Scoffer"

A critical jury of twelve Mayflower Photoplay Corporation officials witnessed a pro-release view of Allan Dwan's latest picture production, "The Scoffer," recently and the verdict of the twelve was unanimous. It was their belief that it will undoubtedly create a sensation such as that aroused by the "Miracle Man," which is still doing a spectacular business.

The cast of "The Scoffer" includes James Kirkwood, Rhea Mitchell and Philo McCullough. According to tentative plans "The Scoffer" will be First National's second release under the new contract with Mayflower.

Argus Stores To Handle All Fulco Products

Carl Fulton, sales manager of E. E. Fulton & Company, announces that he has just completed an arrangement with the Argus Lamp & Appliance Company for Argus to handle the entire line of Fulco products at the Argus company's chain of supply stores, and shipments already are going forward from the big Fulton plant in Chicago to Argus stores in Cleveland and Boston. What is probably the biggest lot of accessories ever shipped out of Chicago at one time, is also being prepared to go forward to the Argus Los Angeles store, it is announced.

The first of the "super rewind tables" for projection rooms, which Mr. Fulton says contain many features far in advance of anything now on the market, are being completed at the Fulton plant and will be put on sale through the various distributors of Fulco products at an early date.

Vote of Thanks Given First National

After but one year in the film business, the officers and directors of Canadian Photoplays, Ltd., celebrated its first birthday by a joint vote of thanks to the First National Exhibitors' Circuit and to Ernest Shipman for the splendid exploitation of their first production "Back to God's Country," by James Oliver Curwood.

The treasurers' report showed that contracts for bookings ahead would soon reach the half-million dollar mark. This first venture has proven so successful under Ernest Shipman's experienced guidance, that the big men of affairs who are interested in this Canadian producing unit, have decided to throw unlimited capital and the vast resources of the Dominion into further productions which they claim will surpass their first effort.

Atlanta Exchange for Educational Soon

For the first time the Southern States are to have film exchanges handling only short subjects. Henry Ginsberg, of the New York offices of Educational Films Corporation, is in Atlanta where he will open the first of these branches. The second will be established in either Dallas or New Orleans. Opening of these offices will complete Educational's own exchange system which will be devoted to short subjects exclusively..

Mr. Ginsberg has been authorized to offer acceptable motion picture men a percentage of interest in the Southern exchanges, the control of each to remain in Educational.

Jane Novak to Play in "The Trail's End"

Jane Novak, one of the best known leading women of filmdom, is to appear with House Peters and a notable cast in "The Trail's End," an Edwin Carewe-directed picture to be presented to the public by Louis B. Mayer. This production is Carewe's own adaptation of James Oliver Curwood's novel, "Isobel."

Laemmle Pleased By Conditions on Coast

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, has returned to New York from Universal City, Cal., highly delighted over affairs at the Universal's west coast studio.

"The situation at Universal City never was better," he said in a recent interview. "The morale of players, directors, and working staff is at a high pitch which augurs well for forthcoming Universal productions. "I do not expect to have any more trouble at Universal City. With the advent of Isadore Bernstein as general manager, there was a decided clearing of the atmosphere. There is not a man nor woman out there who will not put a shoulder to the wheel for him.

"I am confident that the new form of Commission government for Universal City, with Mr. Bernstein at its head, will eliminate the administrative difficulties we have had previously. It seems to be an ideal solution of a vexing problem and I am looking forward to a productivity for the plant that will greatly eclipse anything that has been done there in the past."

Aubrey Re-Signs With Vitagraph Company

The amusing antics of Jimmy Aubrey in Big V Comedies are now guaranteed exhibitors for some time to come. The veteran comedy star this week signed a new contract with Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph for a term of two years.

With Aubrey's new contract goes a new producing unit, organized with Director Jess Robbins at the head. Evelyn Nelson is the new blonde beauty to appear opposite Jimmy in his new series. "Babe" Hardy, who doesn't weigh an ounce over one-sixth of a ton, continues as his "heavy." Irvin Ries, who has been grinding Aubrey comedies for some time past, will still be at the camera for the new series.

Goldwyn Head Returning from Europe

Samuel Goldwyn, president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, who has been in London for the past six weeks arranging for the distribution of Goldwyn Pictures in England and on the Continent, sailed for New York on the Mauretania last Saturday. Gabriel L. Hess, secretary of the company, also is returning. An interesting announcement concerning the handling of the Goldwyn product in the foreign market, is expected to follow the arrival of the Goldwyn executives in New York.

Charles Ray Sells Two Hoyt Comedies

Charles Ray has completed the sale in Los Angeles of "A Contented Woman," the second of the Hoyt comedies to be disposed of by the First National star. Joseph Schenck has acquired the screen rights to this farce-comedy as a vehicle for Constance Talmadge. Mr. Ray disposed of "A Texas Steer" a week ago to Samuel E. Rork.

Georges Carpentier, the French pugilist, who will star in "The Wonder Man" for Robertson-Cole release, being entertained at the Fort Lee studio

To Exploit "The Wonder Man"

Extensive Campaign for Carpentier Picture Is Being Planned

ALTHOUGH fully cognizant of the tremendous free publicity which has been received, and which will continue to be received by Georges Carpentier, "The Idol of France," who is starred by Robertson-Cole in "The Wonder Man" to be released Memorial Day, the distributing company has by no means overlooked plans for a highly organized exploitation campaign, it is declared by Robertson-Cole in a statement just issued. The statement follows:

"This has been placed in the hands of a corps of experts who will start the production off with a big smash in the larger cities where the picture will be shown first run. After that time the campaign will be taken up and pushed vigorously by the Robertson-Cole publicity men in the branch offices aided by the main publicity force in the executive office, who will correlate and assemble the current news matter, so as to constantly give the picture fresh material for exploitation.

"The personality of Georges Carpentier coupled with the remarkable story of 'The Wonder Man' has the greatest exploitation possibilities of any attraction which has been given to the trade in recent years. In the first place the man is one of the most picturesque war heroes produced by the allies. Next he is a pugilist, the champion of Europe, having won this title through one of the most sensational ring contests which ever took place. These two elements are of irresistible interest to the male patrons of theatres, which represents the sex that is more difficult to interest in a motion picture attraction.

"Starting with these two big selling points from the standpoint of interest to the male sex, Carpentier's personality and the nature of his picture also has many points of interest to women. In the first place the man is young, very handsome and has a most winning smile which is capitalized continuously in the motion picture. Besides his charm, Carpentier's culture, which includes a knowledge of music, literature and art, constantly shine through in his winning ways. To these points of his personality are added the drawing powers of "The Wonder Man" as a dramatic production.

"Treating of a theme which deals in a vivid way with the high society and with international affairs 'The Wonder Man' carries all the elements of love, interest and mystery. The love story is a very pretty one, with Faire Binney opposite Mr. Carpentier and Robert Barrat as second man.

"The motion picture world is due for a positive surprise when it sees the dramatic work of Carpentier, who is an actor as well as a pugilist, a soldier, scholar and gentleman. Exploitation of the picture also will not overlook the elaborateness of the settings. These include scenes in an exclusive club, in the exquisite tank room of a millionaire's home, at the ringside where a dramatic boxing bout takes place, and in and about beautiful homes of the rich.

"With these points of exploitation, it will be seen that the exhibitor in 'The Wonder Man' has a production which cannot fail to make him money. Robertson-Cole has taken care that no point be missed in presenting to the exhibitor complete exploitation plans for the picture. The entire writing, advertising and art forces of Robertson-Cole have been busy for the past two months on the press book and campaign scheme for exploiting the famous Frenchman."

M. Carpentier received a rousing welcome on his first invasion of Canada, when he reached Toronto on May 8. When the train pulled in, early in the morning, Mayor Church, of Toronto, and the city officials, were on hand and escorted him into the city and entertained him at a breakfast that amounted to a banquet, at the King Edward Hotel.

In Washington, D. C., arrangements had been made for President Wilson to be on hand at the circus, but owing to the Chief Executive's illness he did not attend

In Boston a big delegation of exhibitors met the star.

Found: A Business Woman

Eleanor Fried Managed Walpole Expedition to Orient Most Capably

HERE'S another story that tends to discredit that theory about the inequality of the sexes and the inferior business instinct of the female of the species. Eleanor L. Fried managed the recent Universal serial expedition to the Orient, during which she had under her charge Marie Walcamp and her company and the great mass of baggage, necessary for an overseas' campaign of this sort. According to Universal, the business management of this expedition represented a $200,000 job, but Miss Fried, states Universal, acquitted herself in most satisfactory style.

In Japan Miss Fried's main task was to keep informed of the red tape of Japanese officialdom and to keep the company out of trouble by the infraction of any of these numerous regulations. It was in China, according to Universal, that Miss Fried's business sagacity was most clearly demonstrated. Following is Universal's statement of how the young woman bested the problem of the fluctuating exchange rates:

"She found that the American dollar was not worth a dollar in that country. It varied from 78 to 79 cents up to 85 or 90 cents, due to the peculiar exchange. She also found that its exchange rate varied considerably from day to day, sometimes as much as four or five cents on the dollar.

"Miss Fried, who handled the purse-strings of the expedition, so realized that her official bank account would not last long if she had to pay out one dollar for every 79 cents worth of service. That's when her Yankee wit started to work.

"She watched the exchange rates keenly. When they went down, she put off paying bills until the rate went up again, which generally would be in three or four days. When she could not wait, she would borrow money at the local banks, pay her bills from this, and then reimburse the local banks when the value of the American dollar would jump up again."

"Human Stuff" Completed

Harry Carey's New Role Presents Him as Clubman and Ranch Owner

REEVES EASON has just reported the completion of "Human Stuff," Harry Carey's latest Universal photodrama. The story, by Tarkington Baker, differs in many ways from the accustomed Carey feature, it is stated, as it first introduces the popular star as an eastern college man, in the conventional garb of the clubman and as a guest at a pink tea table.

Of course, before muy thousand feet of film have been unrolled the locale of the story changes and Carey finds himself in the great west, doing things the audience always expects him to do. The fact that Harry Carey was a star on the legitimate stage before he acted before the camera makes the actor feel at home in any sort of a role, although of late years he has specialized in the "rough diamond" type of western character.

In "Human Stuff" Harry Carey appears as the son of a wealthy manufacturer who, upon graduating from college, goes on a globe trotting tour. Australia and its sheep ranches interest him and he remains there for several years. Returning to America his father expects him to take charge of his vast business interests, but the narrow city life, with its social obligations and business ethics, makes him uncomfortable and he longs for the open stretches. An opportunity to buy a ranch in the west decides him to leave the city and the life he has grown to dislike. In the west he is hailed as a tenderfoot and meets with many adventures.

Elaborate settings ranging from the multi-millionaire's mansion in New York to the vast sheep ranch in the west, many hundreds of people and the capable direction of Reeves Eason add to the strength of the story. Principals in Mr. Carey's support are Mary Charleston, Fontaine La Rue, Ruth Fuller Golden, Charles LeMoyne, Rudolph Christians, Bobby Mack, Joe Harris and others.

Promotion at Pathe's St. Louis Exchange

Robert F. Werth has been appointed branch feature sales manager at St. Louis, Mo., of Pathe Exchange, Inc. Mr. Werth is a pioneer in the motion picture industry.

Pathe Has New Male Star

Herbert Rawlinson Makes Debut in Blackton Picture, "Passers By"

HERBERT RAWLINSON makes his debut under the Pathe banner, as star of J. Stuart Blackton's screen version of the stage success, "Passers By," by C. Haddon Chambers. Mr. Rawlinson was engaged by Mr. Blackton especially for this production, because of the ideal requirements he possessed for the character of "Peter Waverton."

Mr. Rawlinson heads a cast that compares with the best seen in any production this year, says Pathe, and one which faultlessly interprets the keen characterization drawn by Mr. Chambers.

Tom Lewis, Dick Lee, and W. J. Ferguson are seen as the male support of Mr. Rawlinson, and for their various characters they could not have been surpassed. Tom Lewis portrays "Cabby," the lovable, human London cab driver who is one of the "passers by" prominent in the Chambers play. Dick Lee has for years been rated with the foremost character actors of stage and screen, while Mr. Ferguson, for nearly forty years, has held a prominent position in theatricals.

Commode Blackton has transferred the fogs of London to the screen, in all their natural density. Fog effects have been attempted many times by directors, with one noteworthy recent instance, yet in naturalness all these efforts are said to be surpassed by Mr. Blackton's efforts in "Passers By."

"Clothes" Stars Olive Tell

Metro Special to Be a Galaxy of Costly Gowns; Work to Start Soon

METRO announces the engagement of Olive Tell to play the leading role in "Clothes," an all-star picturization of the Avery Hopwood-Channing Pollock drama, which is to be the next production made at Metro's New York studios, No. 3 West Sixty-first Street. Miss Tell is already busy preparing an elaborate wardrobe for the picture, which Metro expects to make one of the most memorable fashion displays ever put on the screen. All of the latest costly designs are to be represented, it is stated, and for this reason Metro production officials are reported to be in consultation with a number of the most advanced artists in designing women's clothes and millinery.

Work on the continuity of "Clothes" has been started by Arthur Zellner, of Metro's scenario staff. In the production Olive Tell will play the role of Olivia Sherwood, the part created on the legitimate stage by Grace George, in the production in which she had associated with her Frank Worthing, Robert T. Haines and Selene Johnson.

Miss Tell first became a star under Metro auspices in Kate Jordan's picture, "Secret Strings," after the actress had made a sensational success in "To Hell With the Kaiser," a Metro special.

Actual production on "Clothes" will be started in a couple of weeks. In the meantime, the New York studios are actively busy every day with production of "Love, Honor and Obey," the picturization by Eugene Walter of Charles Neville Buck's novel, "The Tyranny of Weakness," which is being directed by Leander de Cordova, and of "The Marriages of Mayfair," a screen version by Julia Burnham of Cecil Raleigh's Drury Lane melodrama, directed by George W. Terwilliger.

Says Italy Boycotts American Pictures

A. J. Xydias, a well-known exhibitor of the South, recently returned from a trip abroad during which he studied picture conditions in Italy and the Balkan states at close quarters. He declares that after searching vainly for an American picture in Venice and Trieste, he came to Rome and again finding no American productions being screened, he inquired of an exhibitor where he might find an American motion picture. "The exhibitor informed me," says Mr. Xydias, "that American films were being boycotted in Italy and could not be found on the screen anywhere. When I inquired the reason for the boycott, the exhibitor told me he did not know the reason."

"In the Balkan states," continued Mr. Xydias, "the people want American pictures. The exhibitors are anxious to secure American supplies. This demand, however, is being but poorly met. Moreover, Americans, selling abroad, must realize that in Europe they will not receive the same big prices for pictures that they are getting here. That is one mistake that has been frequently made."

Two Characters Played by the Originals

The current William D. Taylor production for Paramount Artcraft, which is temporarily titled "The Boy," will present two characters played by the persons who were responsible for their creation in the story. These two characters are Judge Ben B. Lindsey of Denver and his wife. The author of the story is Julia Crawford Ivers. The story centers around an American boy—one who is saved from the evil influences of bad companionship and crime-breeding surroundings and who becomes a useful member of society.

Judge Lindsey, founder of the Juvenile Court of Denver, is regarded as one of the foremost authorities on the problem of the American boy reared in evil environment. Mrs. Ivers gave the character of the Judge and his helpmate places in the story, and following negotiations, the Judge and Mrs. Lindsay at Mrs. Ivers' urging agreed to "play themselves" in the cast.

E. R. Pearson Completes Tour

AFTER a tour of three weeks during which he visited the principal key cities in the central part of the country, Elmer R. Pearson, director of exchanges of Pathe Exchange, Inc., has returned to the Home Office, filled with enthusiasm for future prospects and deeply impressed by the evidence everywhere displayed of the determination of exhibitors to resist threatened coercive competition. The Chicago Meeting of Independent Exhibitors has aroused exhibitors to a literal tornado of discussion, he states, and everywhere he went the hope was expressed that something in the way of an effective protest would be arranged.

Mr. Pearson points out that economic conditions of the moment are decidedly in favor of the exhibitors, and most of them realize this fact. They are all enjoying box-office receipts such as they have never had before, and the building situation and, more particularly, the reluctance of bankers in the matter of loans, is keeping down the construction of theatres to a minimum. Competition is, therefore, avoided except producer or distributor-controlled competition. The reason for this sort of competition, according to exhibitors, is to control key cities so as to shut out competing producers from the opportunities of presentation and exploitation.

"The Chicago Meeting of Independent Exhibitors seems to have let loose a hurricane," Mr. Pearson said. "Wherever I went there seemed to be earnest hopes that something might come of this movement for thereby their cooperation would really voice an effective protest against what they term unwarranted coercion by threatened competition.

Mrs. Sidney Drew and John Cumberland in a scene from "The Emotional Miss Vaughn," a Pathe release

"One very hopeful sign is noted in the fact that smaller town exhibitors are rapidly getting away from the notion that he must play only the pictures that get big exploitation in the key cities as he finds out that many such key city theatres are producer or distributor-controlled and would not, of course, exploit a competitive picture no matter how meritorious.

"There still remains over 15,000 independent exhibitors, so many of whom are giving the independent producer and distributor splendid support that plenty of good productions should be available. Every exhibitor seemed exceptionally pleased to learn of Pathe's elaborate plans to spend whatever was necessary in promoting productions for its program that would meet their most fastidious requirements, which, together with the Associated Exhibitors' ambitious plans and arrangements will provide one dependable source of independent open market supply.

"Throughout the entire central part of the country exhibitors are enjoying unparalleled box office receipts.

"Every branch visited found the entire sales force in high glee at the splendid business they were enjoying, practically all having broken all previous records in March and some again in April. And with the wonderful subjects being released and planned all seemed certain of a continuation of record-breaking months which, under Pathe's commission and bonus plan, are of especial interest to its entire field forces.

"Among the recent features that seemed to find a special favor in that section were the 'Rio Grande,' 'Other Men's Shoes,' 'The Deadlier Sex,' 'Passers By,' 'My Husband's Other Wife,' 'Simple Souls,' 'Sherry' and 'Dollar for Dollar.'"

A. J. Callaghan Seeking Stories

Arrives in New York to Buy Vehicles for His Star

ANDREW J. CALLAGHAN arrived in New York City this week for an indefinite period which he will devote to the purchase of additional big vehicles for Bessie Love, star of the Andrew J. Callaghan Productions, Inc. Mr. Callaghan announced that "The Old Curiosity Shop," the Charles Dickens classic, had been definitely decided upon for future screening by Miss Love, and that a director of prominence was being negotiated for to undertake supervision of the picture.

Mr. Callaghan came on to New York from Chicago where he conferred with the group of capitalists, who are sponsoring the organization of which he is the head. So gratifying are said to be the first results of Miss Love's initial production, "The Midlanders," which is being adapted from the famous novel by Charles Tenney Jackson under the direction of Ida May Park and Joseph De Grasse, that Mr. Callaghan and his associates are reiterating their original announcement of backing this youthful star to the limit in every detail of production.

With this end in view, Mr. Callaghan will remain in New York until he has accumulated a sufficient number of well-known novels and plays to satisfy the star's needs in the immediate future. Such has been the satisfaction of Directors Ida May Park and Joseph De Grasse and the Callaghan organization with the quality of "The Midlanders" that Mr. Callaghan declares his producing company is considering only works with titles of reputation and is definitely not in the market for original scenarios.

Mr. Callaghan has already established himself in the eastern headquarters of the Callaghan concern at 25 West 43rd Street where he will carry on the activities in the interests of which he made the trip across the continent.

Regarding the decision of Miss Love to undertake the adaptation of Dickens' "Old Curiosity Shop" for the screen, Mr. Callaghan says that an adequate production of this literary masterpiece, such as his organization contemplates, will be the means of bringing to the wider attention of the American public, the rare talents of this charming young actress.

"Bessie Love will virtually sweep into the affections of the country in the beloved character of Little Nell," said the Los Angeles film executive. "We believe with the same profound faith that caused us to tie up our destinies with this star, that 'The Old Curiosity Shop' will be Miss Love's vehicle to a greater and more glorious fame than any one of us imagined. It is obvious that Miss Love has all the appealing physical qualities of Dickens' immortal character creation and it is her own special talent for roles of this type that will make her interpretation famous among the really big contributions to the screen.

"We are at present negotiating for the services of a well-known director whose previous successes in this type of story will insure for Miss Love and her production of 'The Old Curiosity Shop' the very best of supervision on every detail of the picture. The value of the title of this story is self-evident, for it is a novel for all times and for all people. The news of its future production in a high class way will be a source of joy to countless humans who recollect the absorbing narrative with tender memory. Bernard McConnville who has demonstrated his profound understanding of this type of film study by his important continuity work for Mary Pickford in 'The Hoodlum' and 'Heart of the Hills' will adapt 'The Old Curiosity Shop' to the screen for Miss Love."

Cohn Reports Sales On

Jack Cohn, producer of "Screen Snapshots" which is announced for early release, reports that exchange men are becoming interested in this new bi-monthly release and much territory has already been sold.

Morey in Outdoor Story

Vitagraph Star Finishing "The Gauntlet," a Story of the Hills

HARRY T. MOREY'S forthcoming Vitagraph feature will be called "The Gauntlet." The star and his supporting company recently returned from the mountains of Tennessee where many of the exteriors were filmed and now has gone with his director, Edwin Hollywood, to Saugerties, N. Y., where the picture will be completed.

"The Gauntlet" is based on a magazine story by Lillian Bennett-Thompson and George Hubbard, and was put into picture form by Fred Schaefer. Louiszita Valentine, who appeared with Mr. Morey in "The Sea Rider" has the leading feminine role. The locale is among the mountaineers and moonshiners of the Tennessee mountains.

In selecting "The Gauntlet" for Mr. Morey, Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, is fulfilling his promise to provide the star with outdoor life so far as possible. Mr. Morey recently completed "The Sea Rider" a rugged story of strenuous life on the deep, and previously to that he was seen in two pictures dealing with mountain life. Edwin Hollywood directed all these features.

"The Gauntlet" presents Mr. Morey in just the type in which he is seen at his best—a stalwart, manly, city-bred chap, surrounded by rugged, hot-tempered mountaineers.

Ready for "Tarzan" Picture

Director Harry Ravier Has Everything Set for Beginning Production

JOE BRANDT, director general of the National Film Corporation of America, who was to have left for the Coast this week, has postponed his trip indefinitely and will remain in the East temporarily, to make preliminary arrangements for the marketing of the new National serial, "The Son of Tarzan," on which that company is about to start production.

While no cast has as yet been announced for this picture, Director Harry Ravier and Photo Dramatist Roy Somerville have everything in readiness for the filming of the first three episodes, and it is likely that the leading man will be selected this week.

Joe Brandt is very emphatic in his promises of big things for this serial. "I want everyone to know," says Brandt, "that they may expect something very unusual in photoplay art when this picture comes to market. There is no gainsaying the popularity of Edgar Rice Burroughs' works. The two previous Tarzan pictures which National filmed, met with unqualified popularity. I am confident that 'The Son of Tarzan' is going to break all serial records.

"We have many surprises to spring as the story offers exceptional possibilities for a serial. Revier is enthused with his work and promises he is going to show the industry something new in serial production. Somerville has injected into his continuity a prologue and a modern tale which will surpass anything that has ever been done in chapter-pictures.

"National will concentrate every available resource to make this their greatest effort to date. 'The Son of Tarzan' will be ready for distribution in the early fall. When it is released, I can promise that it will be peerless among serials."

ZaSu Pitt's Next Due Soon

"The Heart of Twenty" Presents Star in Pleasing Role, Is Report

EXHIBITORS will be interested in the Robertson-Cole announcement that another Brentwood production, "The Heart of Twenty," featuring ZaSu Pitts, will be released for distribution soon. The new picture in which Miss Pitts is featured will be welcomed by the trade, it is expected, because of the position in the film world which these productions have come to hold.

The following statement has been issued by Robertson-Cole in connection with "The Heart of Twenty":

"Without reaching the unnatural effects made by some stories which overdo sentiment and what might be termed "sweetness," Brentwood productions for Robertson-Cole have come to represent a fine optimism, which is decidedly agreeable to audiences in these days of economic stress; and a definite financial value to the exhibitor, who finds them eagerly awaited."

"The Heart of Twenty," the second of a series of four in which Miss Pitts will be directed by Henry Kolker, although following somewhat the lines laid down by Miss Pitt's last success, "Bright Skies," deals with an entirely new theme.

Miss Pitts is given efficient support by a cast which includes as leading man Tom Gallery, who played opposite Miss Pitts in "Bright Skies." Others in the cast include such performers as Jack Pratt, Percy Challenger, Hugh Saxon, Ailleen Manning and Pearl Lindner.

"The Heart of Twenty" is one of those delightful characterizations of a cross-section of American life," says Robertson-Cole, "which recalls vividly one's youth, were one lucky enough to have been reared in a small town. As the quaint, ungainly girl, who finds love and contentment through her desire to bring happiness to others, Miss Pitts scores another success."

"Suds" Has Splendid Cast

Well Known Players Surround Mary Pickford in New Picture

MARY PICKFORD, in her forthcoming production for United Artists, "Suds," has surrounded herself with a cast of unusual talent and spared no time nor money in securing players exactly suited to the roles.

Prominent in her support is Mme. Rose Dione, for a long time one of the leading members of Sarah Bernhardt's company in Paris and who, since the outbreak of the war, has appeared in French dramas at the French Theatre in New York, and more recently came to California to appear in the silent art.

The principal lead is Albert Austin, an English comedian of note, who for the past four years has been prominent in all of Charlie Chaplin's productions, and was loaned by the world famous comedian to Miss Pickford for this production.

Harold Goodwin, who scored such a success in support of Miss Pickford in "The Heart of the Hills," is also seen in "Suds" and Nadyne Montgomery, the English character actress who has played in a number of Eastern productions, but who more recently has appeared at the Little Theatre in Los Angeles, also has a splendid part.

The scenario of "Suds" was adapted from Charles Frohman's production of Frederick Fenn and Richard Pryce's play, "'Op o' Me Thumb," in which Maude Adams scored such a triumph. The production was made under the direction of Jack Dillon and Charles Rosher presides over the camera.

"Flying A" Race Ends

Results in Many New Bookings; Winners to Be Announced Soon

THE "S. S. Hutchinson Tribute Month" of the American Film Company came to a glorious close on April 30th. The last few days, valuable as a final opportunity to make a good record man a winner in the contest, capped the climax of a month of victorious pep. "It will take at least two weeks," says C. A. Stimson, general sales manager, "to find out just how each salesman stands and decide who the winners are." Each week has superseded the one preceding it with the result that the American has been booking the cumulative enthusiasm in big results.

"Exhibitors who were never on our books before," says S. S. Hutchinson, president of the "Flying A," "have been booking all of our specials, beginning with "Six Feet Four" and going right through the list to the last feature included in the competition, 'The Thirtieth Piece of Silver.' We have been listing any number of new theatres, some of which I did not know were on the map. It all goes to show the universal appeal the movies are making, and the wide range of 'Flying A' subjects and presentation insure a welcome for them in all localities."

De Luxe

EVERY theatre in the land, particularly every first run theatre, knows oftimes before a picture is released, whether it is a big winner or not. There is an unspoken "something" in the trade that prompts first run theatres to book and play such a picture without even reading a line of advertising or without any selling persuasion on the part of the Producers.

Such was "Eyes of Youth." Such also was "The Forbidden Woman" and such also is "FOR THE SOUL OF RAFAEL," unquestionably Clara Kimball Young's most elaborate production to date.

At Grauman's magnificent Rialto Theatre in Los Angeles, where none but one certain Producer's pictures have ever been played, the rule was broken for the first time by the presentation of Clara Kimball Young in "FOR THE SOUL OF RAFAEL."

In Los Angeles, the very heart of the industry, "FOR THE SOUL OF RAFAEL" was hailed by press, public and critics as the picture DE LUXE, exactly as it will be hailed in every city, town, village and hamlet in the land. Just as a fine painting by a master needs no eulogy so neither does Clara Kimball Young in "FOR THE SOUL OF RAFAEL" need descriptive adjectives One needs but to witness an exhibition to be impressed with the character of this production.

In keeping with the character of the picture we have produced a press and advertising brochure that surpasses in practical helps and exploitation possibilities, anything ever prepared. A copy of this book will be forwarded on request to any theatre by any Equity Franchise Holder. Blondes of Many Types Besiege Eddie Polo

Eddie Polo, the Universal serial star, having completed his latest serial, "The Vanishing Dagger," arrived in New York recently and immediately started a search for a young woman to pose as the heroine of his next chapter-picture. He advertised in the dailies, specifying that only ladies of the blonde type would qualify. No motion picture experience, it was explained, was necessary. Mr. Polo has since been swamped by applicants. A convention of blondes was called for session recently in the grand ball room of the Hotel Majestic. Polo selected several and made tests of them. He has not decided which one he will choose. Meanwhile, the siege continues. In person, by telegram and by letter, aspirants for screen honors—some genuine blondes, others not so genuine—besiege Mr. Polo, until that gentleman has become blonde-shy, even on the street.

J. Warren Kerrigan Has Competent Support

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation points out as one of the strong features of the new Kerrigan starring vehicles, "No. 99," the cast which supports the star. Fritzi Brunette, who played opposite J. Warren Kerrigan in "The Luck of the Irish," again adds another victory to her score as the charming little debutante. Lila Leslie, a former Belasco actress, has the part of a wealthy widow out to obtain a husband by fair means or foul.

Emmett King, John Steppling and Thomas Guise are seen in strong character roles: William V. Mong gives a masterful performance as "Jake Trebs," the crafty Czar of the underworld, and Charles Arling is artistically villainous as the pernicious political grafter.

"TheDangerousTalent" Proving Success

According to a statement of the American Film Company, "The Dangerous Talent" is proving to be an unusual success and has been the object of much favorable comment from various sources. The emotional acting of the star, Margarita Fisher, has come in for a special round of praise according to the American Film's report, which submits the following verdicts for attention:

"'A real picture,' says the Chicago exhibs; 'A model of dramatic construction,' write the critics; 'A money maker' affirm the Flying A' producers of 'The Dangerous Talent.' 'The Golden Gift' was the original name of the novel by Daniel F. Whitcomb, and the name will prove right in line with the returns on it."

Power Takes Over Big Building

Projection Concern Takes Over Building in New York

THE New York Sun, Tribune and other metropolitan dailies gave considerable attention during the past week to the new lease just signed by the Nicholas Power Company. This lease of the building now occupied by the Nicholas Power Company signed by President Earl, was described by the New York Press as "one of the largest ever made in the 'Old Swamp' District," involving as it does a sum amounting to $1,200,000. The newspapers also speak of the Nicholas Power Company as one of the large manufacturing concerns of this country.

The "Swamp" district, one of the oldest and most important business sections in New York is close to the City Hall, Brooklyn Bridge, Woolworth Building, Municipal Building and other noted civic and commercial structures. Nearby are printed and published the Tribune, Sun, World, American and hundreds of daily, weekly and monthly publications. Most important, however, for the needs of the Nicholas Power Company is the proximity of the "Swamp" district to the Maiden Lane manufacturing jewelers and to the hundreds of machine, tool and pattern making shops which dot this locality. It is a veritable Mecca in New York for high grade toolmakers, machinists and other skilled metal workers of the kind required by the Power Company to manufacture the complicated and delicate mechanism of the Power's projector.

The building just taken over by the Nicholas Power Company will be used for its executive offices and more important manufacturing departments. Two other buildings in the vicinity are also used by this company for storage and operations requiring ample space, but the building just leased will be the main part of the Power's plant. The Nicholas Power Company had seriously considered erecting its own factory in one of the outlying portions of the city, but its present location is so excellent, for some of the reasons already mentioned, the building situation is so bad and the demand for the Power's product so great, it was decided it would be unwise to risk the possibility of delay and inconvenience to exhibitors, by making a change at this time. It may be of interest to many in the film industry to learn that it was estimated it would cost over $75,000 to move the machinery of the Nicholas Power Company.

The vast array of machinery in the Power's plant is the development of the little business started twenty years ago in a tiny shop on Nassau street—a shop started to manufacture a toy intended to "satisfy the passing whim and curiosity" of a small and easily pleased public. That "whim" has not yet passed and the "curiosity" grows greater from year to year. The manufacturer of the "toy" finds it has become a fair rival of the printing press and that American projectors are in demand in every part of the civilized world. In the great capitals and in many of the most remote places on all continents, Power's projectors will be found helping to entertain and educate the peoples of those far lands. The export business of the Nicholas Power Company was an early development and it is stated that "over 50 per cent. of the Cinemas in Great Britain are equipped with Power's."

"Shore Acres" Going Big

Sixteen First-Run Theatres in Chicago Show Metro Production

"SHORE ACRES," the Metro special production featuring Alice Lake, played at sixteen Chicago first-run theatres in one day, a reproduction of the amusement page of the Chicago Daily Tribune of April 19 shows. This sheet, an exact duplication of the original page, was made up and issued by J. S. Grauman, branch manager of the Metro Exchange in Chicago.

The theatres where "Shore Acres" played in Chicago on the date mentioned were the Knickerbocker, the Wilson and the Madison Square, of the Lubiner and Trinz chain; the Covent Garden, of the same circuit; four of the Ascher Brothers' string; the Calo, the Frolic, the Metropolitan and the Crown; Balaban and Katz's Riviera; Ascher's Chateau; the Woodlawn; Schoenstandt's Atlantic; the People's; the Hamlin; the Marshall Square, and the Broadway Strand.

"Shore Acres," with a notable cast including besides Miss Lake, Edward Connelly, Joseph Kilgour, Frank Brownlee, and Margaret Mc-Wade was adapted to the screen by Arthur J. Zellner, directed by Rex Ingram and photographed by Stephen Norton

Appeal of "Humoresque"

The Pathos, Humor and Humaneness of Story Attracted Its Director

IN a statement just issued from the offices of the Cosmopolitan Productions, Frank Borzage responds to the favorable criticism which has greeted the first showing of the "Humoresque" and endeavors to place credit where credit is due. His statement follows:

"It's a great source of personal gratification to me that the critics have so kindly received 'Humoresque,' my first subject for Cosmopolitan Productions, but I feel that I was very fortunate in having the proper materials and conditions to work with and under, and I wish therefore to take this opportunity to give credit where credit is due and to explain a few things concerning 'Humoresque' and its filming.

"It came to me when I first read Fannie Hurst's story in Cosmopolitan Magazine that here was the story I had been looking for ever since I became a director. To me it represented the most wonderful of all human expressions—the expression of mother love which is the most dramatic, the most inspiring, and the most beautiful of all emotional themes. I saw immediately that 'Humoresque' was a story of universal understanding and appreciation, and it gripped me as I had never been gripped by a story before.

"What appealed most to me in 'Humoresque' was its infinite humaness, its deep pathos, and its rare rich humor. The wonderful mother who prayed for a genius son and was finally rewarded with one rang to me as the truest and most vital character in all fiction, a character that would live forever. Only recently I read a short article in one of the evening papers on motherhood and it quoted that age-old line: 'God couldn't be everywhere and therefore He made mothers.' I felt that way about 'Humoresque' when I read it the first time.

"There was this about Fannie Hurst's story that was exalting, inspiring to me and I knew that I must do it. In filming it, I tried to retain all the wonderful human touches, the fine characterization, the deft high and low lights of the story. Its appeal is tremendous because it deals with a subject that knows neither creed, color, race, language, or climate. It is universal.

"While I am personally much gratified to have been the director of 'Humoresque,' at the same time I feel that the result achieved could never have been accomplished without the splendid cooperation of the entire Cosmopolitan Productions organization."

"School Days" at Capitol

Larry Semon Comedy Shown at Famous Theatre in New York

"SCHOOL DAYS," the newest Vitagraph-Larry Semon comedy, was shown to the public for the first time at New York's Capitol Theatre, on May 9th. Managing Director Bowes booked it for that full week.

The comedy was screened for the Capitol Theatre staff previous to the public showing and as a result of the impression created, it received prominent space and position on the 24-sheet stand announcing the Capitol attractions for the week of May 9th. It was the only comedy on the Capitol bill for that week.

Ben H. Atwell, director of publicity for the Capitol made some special arrangements in connection with the week's showing of this comedy. He sent out personal invitations to every member of the staffs of the New York Evening Sun, the New York Telegram and the New York Telegraph, the three local newspapers on which Larry Semon worked as a cartoonist only a few years ago. On the occasion of the showing of a previous Larry Semon comedy at the Capitol, the members of the Evening Telegram staff were present, but as several of the scenes in "School Days" actually show Larry in the act of cartooning, Mr. Atwell gathered in all the boys who remembered the comedian as he used to wield the pencil. He called this special occasion "Larry Semon Fellowship Night."

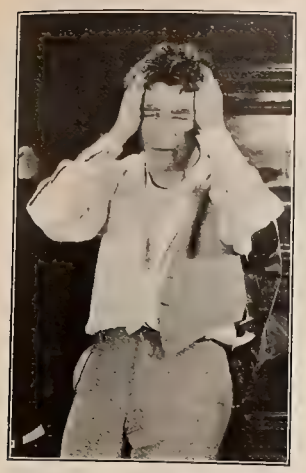
Goldwyn Buys Old Play

"The Concert," Ten Year Old Comedy, Purchased for Picturization

"WITH the purchase of 'The Concert,' the comedy of which Leo Deitrichstein made a tremendous success some years ago, the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation adds another well known play to its list of future productions. Recently "The Great Lover" was purchased for picturization by this company, and the addition of the former Deitrichstein success to the list of coming Goldwyn pictures is indicative of the kind of comedy that this company seeks to present on the screen.

"The Concert," in its play form, was an adaptation by Leo Deitrichstein from the German version of Herman Bahr. It was produced at the Belasco theatre on October 4, 1910, and, after running more than a season in New York, played for several years on the road. The play has since been produced by many stock companies throughout the country.

An interesting sidelight on "The Concert" may be seen in the personnel of the original cast. Supporting the star were Janet Beecher, Jane Grey, Catherine Proctor, Cora Witherspoon and Alice L. Pollock, who has since become well known as a playwright. The men in the cast were William Morris and John W. Cope.



In presenting "The Concert" on the screen much of the exposition carried in the dialogue of the play may be visualized, and the delightful tales related by the characters presented as comic situations. The Goldwyn company intends to present "The Concert" with as fine a cast as can be assembled, and no means will be spared to give the play an excellent interpretation as a motion picture.

Reels That Will Endure

Exploits of Sea-Raider Moewe Are Graphically Shown in Film Series

THE news reels, depicting the exploits of the German sea-raider, Moewe, which are issued by the International Film Service and released through the exchanges of the Universal Manufacturing Company, are destined to live as one of the greatest achievements in the annals of the motion-picture industry. The story that the camera caught from the deck of the sea-wolf as ship after ship was sent to the bottom of the ocean and which is now unfolded on the screen is one that stands unequalled for sensational situations and thrilling incidents. And the effect is only augmented, when one realizes that these same scenes are not merely rehearsed bits of play-acting but graphic records of actual occurrences.

As striking as are the scenes of the removal of passengers from sinking vessels, they are merely incidental to the astounding main scenes that unroll before the eyes. In one instance a torpedo is discharged. For a moment there is a straining suspense as the missile of death travels through the waves directly towards a huge steamship but a few hundred yards away. Then follows a terrific explosion as the torpedo reaches its mark, and slowly the monster vessel turns over on its side and in an unbelievably short time disappears from sight, leaving only a ripple on the surface of the sea.

Dooley's Five-Reeler Is Finished, Says Radin

Johnny Dooley's newest creation, "Skinning Skinners," a five-act farce comedy, has been completed and is ready for immediate release to state right buyers of the country through Radin Pictures, which company controls the world's distribution rights of the Dooley Comedies.

Dooley made his bow to screen fans some little time ago in a series of two-reel comedies and the instant success of these laugh producers, due to the personal efforts of the Ziegfeld Star and the insistent demand for a feature for longer length, prompted his managers to make the five part feature just completed.

"Purple Hieroglyph" is Bought for Williams

"The Purple Hieroglyph," a story of adventure on the Pacific Coast and an American romance shrouded in Oriental mystery has been purchased by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, as the next Earle Williams production to follow "The Master Stroke." Chester Bennett will direct the star in this feature, and is now finishing the script in collaboration with J. Grubb Alexander. Filming will soon start at Vitagraph's California studios. The story is by Will F. Jenkins and recently appeared in a popular magazine.

"The Heart Line" to be Adapted by Mullin

Eugene Mullin, former scenario editor of Vitagraph, Universal and Goldwyn, has associated himself with Arthur F. Beck, president of Gibraltar Pictures, and will signalize his new connection by adapting Gelett Burgess' "The Heart Line," production of which will begin shortly at the Robert Brunton studios, Los Angeles, recently leased by Gibraltar. "The Heart Line" pictorial rights were bought by Arthur F. Beck two months ago in a highly competitive market for $25,000.

Reception at New Fox Studio

Formal Opening of Big Building to Be Held May 24

THE date for the official opening of the William Fox studio and administration building on West 55th street, New York, is at last announced. Arrangements are now under way for throwing wide the doors on May 24th—an occasion which will be attended by an impressive ceremony with many notable guests present.

The building, which fronts on Tenth avenue, extending from 55th street to 56th street, has been completed to all outward appearance, since February 1st, when the entire Fox Film Corporation, with the exception of the New York Exchange offices, moved from its old quarters in West 46th street to the mammoth structure. Since that date all eastern business of the corporation has been transacted under its roof.

During this time, however, workmen have been steadily employed in completing those sections of the building which are devoted to the dark rooms, developing rooms, printing rooms and raw-stock vaults. The restaurant, also, has been delayed owing to the inability of the manufacturers to furnish suitable equipment.

These departments are now nearing completion and will be running on schedule for the official opening of the building, so that the visitors may see, first hand, the extent to which this concern has gone toward the development under a single roof of the perfect motion picture from the handling of the raw film to the finished prints distributed throughout the network of branch offices and exchanges located throughout the world.

In this building William Fox has achieved his greatest aim in linking up every department of his organization in proper relation to its neighbors and thus establishing the smoothest possible order of production. From the very accessible receiving and shipping department on the ground floor, opening directly upon the street, the arrangements have been so studied as to leave nothing to be desired.

With the perfection of equipment, including every latest modern improvement in the photographic branch of the business, Fox Film Corporation will be enabled to execute each phase of motion picture production within the walls of the building, and with a speed and precision hitherto impossible. There are many attractive features in this big structure, born in the brains of William Fox and the young architect, William Fried, who supervised construction from start to finish and who still is to be seen daily overseeing the finishing touches in decoration.

Even as the laying of the corner stone was an impressive ceremony, so will be the official opening of this mammoth picture plant. At the laying of the corner stone, Frank L. Dowling, president of the Borough of Manhattan, officiated, surrounded by a group of stage and screen stars and people prominent in the affairs of the city government. The Rev. Justin Corcoran and Rev. Meyer Kopfstein represented the sympathetic interest of the church world.

New Exchange System Ready

Educational to Open Offices Throughout Country in June

EDUCATIONAL FILMS CORPORATION announces that it expects to be serving the motion picture theatres of the entire country through its own exchanges by June 1st. These offices are said to afford the first national specialization in short subjects ever offered by a film organization. The entire effort of each office will be confined to Educational product and no picture longer than two reels will be handled.

Contracts have already been signed for the exchanges in Boston, Philadelphia, Washington, Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Louisville, Cleveland, Indianapolis, Chicago, Detroit, Minneapolis, Omaha, Los Angeles, San Francisco and Seattle. Announcements of the contracts for St. Louis, Kansas City, Denver and Salt Lake City are expected any day. One of the officials of the New York office has been sent to the southern territory to arrange for exchanges in Atlanta and either Dallas or New Orleans.

Educationals new exchange system marks something new in motion picture distribution in that local exhibitor interests own a portion of the stock in each office, though the control of every office is vested in the parent company. This system is expected to have the result of increasing the sales effort and assuring the exhibitor of the fullest cooperation, while the fact that Educational itself retains control assures the maintenance of exhibitor purchase opportunity. Each exchange will be under the direct supervision of the general sales management in New York and each will receive the entire exploitation and exhibitor aid service from the main office.

Some weeks ago Educational decided to discontinue its service through the independent exchanges which have been handling its releases and therefore the pictures that have accumulated in the meantime have not been placed on the market. The company will start distribution through its own service with what is claimed to be far the greatest number of new short subjects ever offered by any organizations. These prints will, of necessity, be new, yet at the same time exhibitors generally will have the benefit of the pre-release showings at leading New York theatres and the valuation of the various films as evidenced by the critics in the trade press.

"We feel that we have completed an epoch in our organization," said E. W. Hammons, vice president and general manager, in making the announcement. "When Educational began its activities it was generally regarded as an experiment though we were convinced that there was ample room for us before the company was organized. We have always looked forward to the day when we could have our own distributing organization, but we have had to wait until there was a volume of product that warranted the establishment of these offices. We first had to establish the merit of our own product and then to win for ourselves a position of unquestioned dominance in the short subject field so that other producers of one and two reel pictures would turn to us when we were able to offer suitable sales facilities.

"We have realized from the start that the only satisfactory method would be the establishment of our own exchanges and we have only waited until we acquired the bulk of product. That we have, and daily we are being offered pictures by producers of one and two reel subjects in every field. We are giving consideration to every one of these and we expect to still offer a distribution system for such short films as meet our quality standard. We have not hesitated to accept series that are seemingly in competition with pictures that we have distributed in the past, for the simple reason that we determined some months ago that this company, with its own exchanges in operation should be accepted by exhibitors everywhere as the one organization from which to seek quality short subjects. This will ever be our rule of conduct."

Educational will announce its releases next week. These include Bruce Scenics Beautiful, Outing-Chesters, Screenics, a series of forty foreign travel subjects, the Red Cross pictures, and a half dozen other scenic and travel pictures as well as a number of educational and novelty subjects. In the comedy field there will be two reel Chester, Torchy and Mermaid comedies and two other two reelers to be announced shortly. Contracts already signed assure five two reel comedies each month and it is possible that this will be increased, while one reel comedies will be added in short time.

METRO

Wanda Hawley, new Realart star, to be seen in "Miss Hobbs," in a pensive mood

Wanda Hawley Picture Has Been Completed

Camera work on "Miss Hobbs," Wanda Hawley's first production as a Realartist, has been completed at the Realart studios in Hollywood and the work of titling and cutting is now being done. The picture will be ready for release, as promised, early in June. The final scenes for the picture were taken at Carmel, Cal., one of the most famous historical shrines in America where Director Donald Crisp took the company for some exterior shots.

Metro Actress Famed as Broadway Beauty

Justine Johnstone, who plays opposite Taylor Holmes in "Nothing But Lies," the comedian producer's picturization of Aaron Hoffman's comedy, now being released by Metro, is said to be one of the foremost beauties of the stage and one of the most beautiful women in New York. It is said that never since the early days of Lillian Russell has an actress been so universally acclaimed as has Miss Johnstone.

Talmadge Sisters Back At 48th St. Studio

The Talmadge sisters have returned from Chicago and will resume work in the 48th Street studios without delay. Joseph M. Schenck has purchased "The Branded Woman" as Norma Talmadge's next picture and "Good References" for Constance. Albert Parker has been engaged to direct Norma, and R. William Neill has been signed up to direct Constance.

Vitagraph Star Making Picture in South

Although she only recently returned to New York from Savannah, Ga., where she made exterior scenes for "Bab's Candidate," Corinne Griffith, Vitagraph star, is back in the South once more. She is now making all the exterior and many interior scenes for "The Whisper Market," her next feature.

Summer Releases Are Named

Seven Pictures on First National Schedule

WITH production sources for next season guaranteed to new sub-franchise owners in Associated First National Pictures, Inc., by contracts on which stars and directors are now working, and which provide what exhibitor officials of the company term the "most advanced screen standards in feature picture annals," announcement is made this week by First National of the summer schedule of seven productions to be released as the prelude to the fall season.

The total of releases for the 1920-1921 period, to be made under the sub-franchise plan, will give exhibitor members productions from more than a dozen studios devoting their entire time and facilities to the making of First National attractions. This schedule is subject to increase by the acquisition of exhibition rights to independent special feature attractions which may be offered to Associated First National by producers other than those now affiliated with it.

Each studio organization controlled by the stars, directors and producers whose output will be available to franchise owners on the protective and defensive booking privileges now being assigned to independent exhibitors by Circuit officials, is arranging its activity to comply, as nearly as possible, with the releasing schedule formulated by the exhibitors. In no case will production units identified with Associated First National be obliged, by contract demands or release dates, to speed their work or stress the normal facilities of their staffs to meet the screen requirements of the franchise owners.

The first of the summer releases is "The Yellow Typhoon," an adaptation of the story by Harold McGrath, and starring Anita Stewart. This was released the first week in May as the initial offering for the so-called summer season. Following this will be "The Splendid Hazard," an Allan Dwan production, with a strong cast headed by Henry B. Walthall and presented by Mayflower. This, according to present plans, will be given its first run presentations on May 31st.

Constance Talmadge will have a summer production in the sixth of her series for First National. This will be a John Emerson-Anita Loos feature called "The Perfect Woman." It is intended to release this on June 28th.

To Norma Talmadge falls the distinction of starring in the only production the Circuit will offer during July. This will be "Yes or No!" and has been placed on the schedule for July 19th. August, when the fall season begins to get under way, will bring three features into the market. The first of these will be "Curtain," starring Katherine MacDonald. It is an adaptation of the story of the same title, written by Rita Weiman and published in the Saturday Evening Post. It is listed for August 2nd. On August 16th the first run houses will present the second King Vidor production for First National entitled "The Jack Knife Man," from the story of the same name by Ellis Parker Butler.

Another important release for the same month will be on August 30th, when the initial First National attraction from Charles Ray will be available to exhibitor members. This is the screen version of the stage classic, "Forty-Five Minutes from Broadway," which its author, George M. Cohan, declares has made the equivalent of five fortunes, and which, in screen form, will realize a few hundred more legacies of six figure proportions.

The schedules for September, October, November and December are expected to be completed as soon as stars and producers have had an opportunity to determine what will be a safe and reasonable production period for each of the stories obtained for fall and winter release.

Existing contracts pledge to the independent exhibitors who will hold subfranchises in Associated First National next fall productions from the following independent sources: Norma and Constance Talmadge, Charles Chaplin, Marshall Neilan, Katherine MacDonald, Charles Ray, Mack Sennett, Whitman Bennett, who is producing a series of four pictures starring Lionel Barrymore, Allan Dwan, Raoul Walsh, Sydney Franklin, Mr. and Mrs Carter De Haven, Mildred Harris Chaplin, Anita Stewart, King Vidor and Henry Lehrman.

Career of Fox Star Reviewed

Statement Recalls Past Work of New Star, Eileen Percy

THE elevation of Eileen Percy to stardom by William Fox is made the subject of statement just issued from the Fox headquarters. Miss Percy's career before the camera is traced with considerable detail and some of those features singled out which have had most to do with her success on the screen. The Fox statement follows:

"For nearly three years Miss Percy has been playing the leading female roles opposite the biggest male stars in pictures. She started in pictures as leading woman to Douglas Fairbanks, and did four features with that star; during which time she established herself as a welcome addition to the screen from the Broadway stage.

"Hers is a beauty of the sort sometimes referred to as peaches and cream. Her eyes are large, round, grey-blue and wide apart, denoting highly developed artistic sense and depth of feeling. It was her youthful beauty which gained for her in New York City the opportunity to play one of the principal roles in the famous Materlinck fairy tale "The Bluebird," which made its bow to the theatregoers of the metropolis at the Century theatre. Here and on the road, for a period of three years, the refreshing little Miss Percy played practically every child part in The Bluebird, including Tyltil and Myltil, the two child principals about whom the story is woven.

"From the Bluebird Miss Percy went into Elsie Janis' company, then playing "The Lady or the Slipper." Here she was a member of the pony ballet, and distinguished herself by her specialty dancing and singing.

"This experience stood the new Fox star in good stead during her early screen career; but it was her experience in both the musical comedy and the straight dramatic field that really trained her for the work she has done and which she now has before her in Fox productions.

"With the late Gaby Deslys, Miss Percy made a distinct hit in musical numbers, and her dancing is still remembered by Broadwayites who keep pace with the season's successes. Later she played the dope fiend with Mary Nash and Henry Hull in 'The Man Who Came Back'—this while she was engaged in the midnight show at the Follies.

"Harrison Fisher selected Eileen Percy for one of his famous Fisher Girl Series, and her beauty has adorned many magazines and periodicals, which have brought her admirers from the far corners of the globe. It was while she was appearing at the Century Roof that she was discovered by a well-known screen star and signed up for a series of film features.

"With the success she has achieved in the parts she has already assumed before the camera, there can be little doubt, in the minds of 'those who know,' as to the outcome of the decision by William Fox to make her a star.

"Besides appearing as leading woman in 'Wild and Wooly,' 'Down to Earth,' 'The Man From Painted Post,' and 'Reaching For the Moon,' opposite Fairbanks, she carried off high honors with Bert Lytell in 'Hitting the High Spots' and 'One-Thing-At-a Time O'Day.'

"Eileen Percy has already completed her first starring vehicle for William Fox. It is a screen adaptation of Arline Van Ness Hines' stage success 'Her Honor the Mayor.' This will be announced for release shortly. Already her next two plays have been secured by Fox. They are 'Myra Meets His Family,' a Saturday Evening Post story by F. Scott Fitzgerald, and 'Beware of the Bride' a novel by Edgar Franklin which will soon reach the fiction lovers through the pages of one of our most popular magazines. Surely a good start for such a charming new star as Eileen Percy."

Art Exhibit Praises F. P.-Lasky Inserts

When the American Institute of Graphic Arts opened its annual exhibition of fine printing, engraving and allied arts at the National Arts Club, New York City, on May 5, the trade paper insert advertisements published by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation were well represented.

Of the many advertisements offered to the judges for exhibition at this showing of the highest and most representative forms of printing art, three trade paper inserts issued by Famous Players for Paramount Artcraft Pictures advertising, were selected.

American Cinema Film Handled by Pioneer

Under the terms of a contract made this week between Walter F. Niebuhr, president of the American Cinema Corporation and M. H. Hoffman, general manager, of the Pioneer Feature Film Corporation, the latter corporation has acquired the sole distribution rights in the State of New York and northern New Jersey of the entire series of American Cinema Productions in the next twelve months. This includes immediate delivery of "The Inner Voice," starring E. K. Lincoln, "Stolen Moments," starring Marguerite Namara and "His Brother's Keeper," an all-star production, now being completed in the American Cinema Corporation's studio, under the direction of Wilfrid North.

Tracy Novel Near Ready

"Silent Barrier" Being Titled; Author Knighted by King George

"THE Silent Barrier," first picture by Sir Louis Tracy to be filmed under the Gibraltar banner by Louis Tracy Prouctions, Inc., will be ready for preview within a few days. It is now well advanced in the titling stage. The author was knighted by King George of England while the picture was in the process of production.

There are sixteen striking interior sets in "The Silent Barrier," four of these being of unusual beauty. The reception set, in which sixty persons are on the stage at once, is said by Director William Worthington, to be one of the finest interiors of recent film history. This scene alone cost $30,000 to stage and the picture so far has cost $130,000. It is a five-reel offering.

Director Worthington is now on his way to California where he is to direct Leah Baird's next picture play. He was accompanied on his journey by his assistant, William J. Rau, Robert S. Stevens, technical expert of the Gibraltar forces and Virgil Miller, staff cameraman.

"The Silent Barrier," includes Sheldon Lewis, Ada Rehan and Blanche Walsh, Gladys Hulette and Donald Cameron, who played the male lead in "East is West," and Corrine Barker.

Pathe Ads a Huge Success

Exhibitors Compliment Officials on Campaign for "The Third Eye"

THE Pathe branch offices have been highly complimented by exhibitors for the service they have rendered in connection with "The Third Eye," the fifteen episode serial which has been elected to succeed "Daredevil Jack" on Pathe's schedule.

Manager Stombaugh, of the Minneapolis Branch reports that the twenty-four sheet poster has made a big "hit" with the exhibitors in his territory. It is in three colors, showing a striking handling of red, yellow and blue. The paper, campaign books and other advance matter have been in the hands of exchanges for some time now and exhibitors who have already booked "The Third Eye" were supplied the means with which to open up their campaigns immediately, an item of high importance to the showman.

In addition to the extensive billboard advertising campaign mapped out for "The Third Eye," Pathe has made a large money appropriation for special newspaper advertising. The method to be adopted in distributing this newspaper advertising applies a co-operative scheme between the exhibitor proper and the exchanges.

George L. Sargent Will Direct Alice Joyce

George L. Sargent is Alice Joyce's new director at Vitagraph's Brooklyn studio. Mr. Sargent was engaged by Albert E. Smith to direct the production of "The Prey," to follow the Alice Joyce special production, "Dollars and the Woman," which will be released this month.

Bryant Washburn Seen in Farce Comedy

Bryant Washburn comes back to make things merry for motion picture patrons in the Paramount-Artcraft version of a famous old farce-comedy, "Mrs. Temple's Telegram," the release date of which is May 9. Washburn's current vehicle was booked for the present week at the Rialto theatre, New York. The authors of "Mrs. Temple's Telegram" were Frank Wyatt and William Morris, both of them actors as well as playwrights.

Mr. Washburn's role is that of Jack Temple.

Wanda Hawley, who has the role of Mrs. Temple, is featured, as is Walter Hiers in the role of Frank Fuller. Carmen Phillips plays the siren and clever character roles are interpreted by Sylvia Ashton, Leo White and Anne Schaefer. James Cruze directed the production.

Harry I. Day Resigns from Cosmopolitan

Harry I. Day, for the past year director of advertising and publicity for Cosmopolitan Productions, has tendered his resignation effective June 1st. It is understood he is associating himself in an executive capacity with a new combination, details of which will be announced later.

Day has handled some extensive advertising campaigns for Cosmopolitan Productions, among them the campaign for "The Miracle of Love," "The Cinema Murder," "April Folly," and "Humoresque."

American Film Wins in Central America

American films have wrested supremacy from French and Italian films in Central America and the northern part of South America, said Monroe Isen on the eve of sailing for Panama several days ago to resume his duties as manager of Universal's branch office in the Republic of Panama. Six months ago, he said, French and Italian films were all the rage and were shown almost to the exclusion of the standard American product.

Simplex Notes

DR. CHESTER C. MARSHALL, Director of the Division of Stereopticons, Motion Pictures and lectures of the Centenary Conservation Committee of the Methodist Episcopal Church, has just returned from the general conference scheduled at Des Moines, Iowa, from May 1 to 30 inclusive.

Dr. Marshall, who was recently referred to in the trade press as the "Militant Pastor of St. James Methodist Episcopal Church, New York," is, with Dr. Christian F. Reisner, one of the most prominent of active Methodist officials who advocate the use of the motion picture with the church and Sunday school activities.

It is highly significant of Dr. Marshall's insight into the industry, and also the Church requirements to note that he has just consummated a deal with Mr. E. M. Porter, General Manager of the Precision Machine Company, whereby the Methodist Centenary Committee was selected out of the church groups to handle the Simplex Projector for the Methodist organization.

Dr. Marshall praises the work being done by the two type "S" Simplexes installed in the Auditorium as well as the Simplex Incandescent Equipment installed in the Des Moines Y. M. C. A.

In the heart of Greenwich Village, tucked away in an unobtrusive building on Ninth street, is Paul & Joe's Italian Restaurant, where were gathered on Saturday night last, the Department Heads and Foremen of the Precision Machine Company, who are banded together for social purposes under the name of Simplex Engineers.

Plans for making this gathering a memorable one had been under way for some time, and the committee on arrangements, comprising L. F. Frappier, T. A. Healey, W. C. Francke, M. G. De Vries, T. L. Johnson and T. L. Lambert had worked valiantly arranging a program that would in every respect compare with the merit which the machines manufactured by this progressive organization, are generally credited with.

A real Italian dinner was served to the sixty-five people who sat down at the gaily decorated table, the head of which was occupied by the honor guests, comprising Mr. Everette M. Porter, General Manager of the Precision Machine Company; Mr. Joseph Hornstein, General Manager of the David P. Howells Co.; Mr. Everette L. Bragdon, Technical Editor Motion Picture News; Mr. Jacob Lourie, Associated Press; Mr. Thomas Healey, Purchasing Department, and Mr. William C. Francke, Toastmaster.

Conventionites Shown "The Yellow Typhoon"

At the recent convention of the First National Exhibitors in Chicago "The Yellow Typhoon," the Louis B. Mayer-First National release was shown to the exhibitors and exchange men, all of whom are reported to have received the picture most enthusiastically. Many claimed that it is the best picture in Anita Stewart's career.

"The Fortune Teller" Scores

NOT in vain did Robertson-Cole promise the exhibitors of America "the greatest picture to which it so far has put its name" in "The Fortune Teller," the Albert Capellani triumph, with Marjorie Rambeau as its star, if the New York press is to be believed.

Following on the heels of the unanimous applause which was given the Sir Ernest Shackleton South Polar picture, which opened on Broadway last week, come other flattering notices for the second Robertson-Cole picture. "The best thing which Marjorie Rambeau has so far done" is the verdict of the New York papers for "The Fortune Teller" at the opening of its engagement at the B. S. Moss's Broadway theatre.

The papers emphasize particularly the points which were stressed by Robertson-Cole in presenting the picture. "The Fortune Teller" is a production of the greatest human appeal, telling a story which relies upon its deep appeal to the heart for its effects. So, in this way, the general support which was given the picture by the press points out its future as a box office attraction, and gives to the man, seeking to book productions of the broadest appeal, the support of an unbiased force.

"The Fortune Teller," declared by the Famous French master director, Albert Capellani, to be the best picture he has made, is released by Robertson-Cole as the first of a smashing series of pictures destined to set a new standard for Robertson-Cole attractions, and to give an idea of the calibre which is in store for the exhibitor when the new contracts providing for a greater length of time, and a greater expenditure on each picture begin to yield productions.

Zasu Pitts in "The Heart of Twenty," a Robertson-Cole picture

The Evening Mail, a newspaper which pays especial attention to the new and meritorious things of the screen, led off its motion picture column, on the next day after the opening, with a very flattering review of "The Fortune Teller."

The Mail said:

"At the Broadway theatre, Marjorie Rambeau, who is at present starring in 'The Sign on the Door' at the Republic theatre, can be seen on the screen this week in the same role that she created on the stage in 'The Fortune Teller,' adapted to the 'celluloid' by Albert Capellani. As a stage offering, Princess Wah-Detka, a Cherokee Indian seeress, who recently appeared on the Ziegfeld Roof, answers all questions promptly and correctly."

The review then launches into a detailed comment on the fine points of the picture. The Indian princess mentioned was used as a special exploitation feature, and to heighten the interest the Broadway announced a "Psychic Week," with "The Fortune Teller" as the determining feature of the bill.

The Times welcomes "The Fortune Teller" to Broadway as follows:

"Marjorie Rambeau, after a considerable absence from the screen, returns to the fold at the Broadway this week in 'The Fortune Teller,' in which she was seen at the Republic theatre, about a year ago. It is a role which gives good opportunities to the actress."

The Sun and Herald hits exactly upon the point which Robertson-Cole has been emphasizing in announcing the picture, viz., that it is the best thing which Miss Rambeau has done on the screen. This old and conservative paper says:

"This week Moss's Broadway steeps itself in the psychic. Miss Marjorie Rambeau does some of her best screen work in 'The Fortune Teller,' transcribed to the screen by Albert Capellani from her play, and Princess Wah-letka has her band of correspondence spooks direct from the Ziegfeld Roof.

The Evening Post, another paper which falls into the more discriminating class, speaks of "The Fortune Teller" in this way:

"Marjorie Rambeau is seen this week at the Broadway theatre in her dramatic success, 'The Fortune Teller,' which lends itself well to the screen."

Blanche Sweet Popular Star

Statistics Prove Big Demand for Pathe's Star Series

STATISTICS compiled by Pathe Exchange, Inc., show that Blanche Sweet is a favorite actress in more than six thousand theatres in the United States and that the patrons of that number of theatres look forward to each new release as it appears. The growth of her popularity has been marked with each new release and the outlook for the next picture, "Simple Souls," indicates that it will play in more theatres than any other play in which the star has ever appeared.

"A Woman of Pleasure" and "Fighting Cressy," the first two Blanche Sweet productions released by Pathe are still booking in great strength in every territory. "The Deadlier Sex" is one of the fastest moving productions on the Pathe schedule, every exhibitor who played the first two pictures having asked for the third one for as early a date as possible.

In the preparation of the Blanche Sweet series it was determined to give the star unlimited time and unlimited scope in production in the making of each picture. It was strongly felt that the great popularity of Blanche Sweet would take her to the foremost place on the screen among all women stars if she was given productions of the right type. To eliminate all chance of poor pictures injuring the star it was decided to observe strictly the right of rejection and to keep from the market any picture which did not meet the rigid requirements of the standard set for her.

The wisdom of the policy adopted at that time is said to be shown in the demand now manifest for the Blanche Sweet pictures. Her own work and the distinctive merit of the pictures have created a demand which insures the complete success of "Simple Souls" even before its release date. The Pathe Reviewing Committee has passed on the picture and judging from the reports of the members "Simple Souls" does not require the prestige of the previous Blanche Sweet productions. Standing alone it ranks as one of the finest motion pictures released under the Pathe banner, according to committee reports.

"Simple Souls" is from the novel by John Hastings Turner and was especially selected for Miss Sweet. She is seen in the role of the English shop girl with a soul so simple that even marrying a Duke doesn't impress her or overburden her with awe. He is just another simple soul to her and the Duke himself is a regular fellow who knows he is a simple soul. But his relatives are sure they have a monopoly on all the blue blood in the world and thereby hangs the tale.

In a deliciously humorous way the two simple souls confound the aristocrats who worry about them and about the conventions. The picture is certain to find great favor in this country because of its exposure of the shams of aristocracy, but it also carries a splendid love story, and an appealingly sympathetic revelation of the sweetness of a girl's character.

The picture will be released on May 23rd and already a number of advance contracts have been received. Of course most of these contracts are from exhibitors who have played the previous productions but there are several who were delayed in getting in contracts on the others and who desire to be early on this latest one

"Riders of the Dawn" Released May 30

W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announces May 30 as the national release of "Riders of the Dawn," Benjamin B. Hampton's powerful picturization of Zane Grey's novel, "The Desert of Wheat." An attractive twenty-page campaign book has just been completed on the production, which enjoyed a tremendously successful premiere at the Strand theatre, New York, last week.

Canadian Co. Distributes Bonuses

At the annual meeting of the Canadian Photoplays, Ltd., of Calgary, Canada, on May 9, a cash bonus of $15,000 was voted to Nell Shipman, star of "Back to God's Country." David Hartford, director of the picture, received $8,000. This is in addition to the regular salaries already paid them. It was also resolved to continue operations with two of Ralph Connor's stories for First National.

American Cinema Making Two Pictures

American Cinema Corporation has two interesting screen productions now in the course of making. Marguerite Namara is the star of "Stolen Moments," a feature rapidly nearing completion under the direction of James Vincent and Wilfred North promises fine results with an excellent story and cast that includes Martha Mansfield and Albert L. Barrett. The temporary title is "His Brother's Keeper."

"Rio Grande" Has All Outdoor Requisites

"Rio Grande," the Edwin Carewe production of the stage play by Augustus Thomas has demonstrated within two weeks after the date of release that it is the type of virile Western picture of the great outdoors that exhibitors have been clamoring for. It is full of fight and action, romance and love, and is filled with live scenes taken along the border country and many contracts have already been signed.

Handbook on Films Issued

General Information in Booklet Published by Dept. of Interior

AN important step in the encouragement of the schools of the country to devote more attention to motion pictures has just been taken by the Bureau of Education of the Department of the Interior with the issuance of a booklet entitled "Motion Pictures and Motion Picture Equipment." It is a handbook of information that will be especially valuable to all of those who have no technical knowledge of motion picture exhibition, since it explains the technicalities in a popular manner. An interesting portion of the booklet is devoted to the nomenclature of industry. The booklet was written by Mr. Carl Anderson, now with Educational Films Corporation, during the period that he was serving with the Bureau of Education in association with F. W. Reynolds of the extension division of the University of Utah.

It is interesting to note that the booklet was prepared with the direct purpose of answering the hundreds of inquiries that were received by the bureau after a questionnaire seeking motion-picture information had been sent out. Mr. Anderson carefully compiled these inquiries and then set out to answer them, the result being that the booklet supplies practically all of the information that would be sought by one about to engage in the non-theatrical exhibition of motion pictures.

One of the first subjects is the difference between the standard and narrow width films, it being made clear that the film furnished by the section of visual instruction is standard and cannot be used in the odd-sized machines. Attention is also called to the different sorts of projectors, and schools which do not require the constant moving of machines are advised to install a standard professional machine, and those, using various rooms, the portable type. Explanations are given of the throw of picture, the adaptability of various currents explained, and many details of the actual projection of pictures given.

Realart Sets B'way Record

Twelve Broadway Showings in a Row Gives Realart Clean Sweep

THE record for Broadway runs now being established by Realart took a sudden spurt this week when three new productions were booked for big Rialto houses, jumping the total from nine in a row to twelve. As a result the month of May will see Realart paper plastered over the nearly White Way in quite a liberal fashion. The young lady in the swing atop the Hermitage Hotel building is scheduled to make a couple of complete loops in celebration of the event.

"Sinners," which was the star boarder at the Capitol theatre during the week of April 25th was listed in the Realart record books as Number Eight. A short time ago "The Stolen Kiss" was on the screen of the Rialto theatre for a week. It holds a place in history as the ninth rung in Realart's ladder of Broadway successes.

For a time the record remained there until this week when Realart introduced a new Mayflower special to Broadway exhibitors. After seeing it Edward Bowes, managing director of the Capitol theatre, called for a fountain pen and a contract and ordered it wrapped up and sent to his big playhouse.

"The Deep Purple," an R. A. Walsh production, presented by Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, occupied the Capitol during the week of May 2nd. It is an adaptation of the famous stage success of a decade ago by Paul Armstrong and Wilson Mizner.

Somebody tipped Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld off that "Miss Hobbs," Wanda Hawley's first Realart picture was to be a winner. He followed the tip up and took a contract for the production for the Rialto theatre during the week of June 6th. Realart's records went right on up another peg. A "Sold" tag was hung on the five reels of comedy and drama contained in "Nurse Marjorie," Mary Miles Minter's recent production, and orders were given to have them delivered at the stage entrance of either the Rialto or Rivoli theatres on May 3rd.

Manager of National Exchanges on Tour

Hunter Bennett, vice-president and general manager of National Exchanges, Inc., leaves New York next week on an extended trip embracing the principal exchange centers throughout the country. Mr. Bennett's trip is for the purpose of completing negotiations for franchises in National Exchanges, Inc., and study conditions on the ground first hand.

Mr. Bennett stated that his organization, which is receiving financial backing from the Johnson & Hopkins Company, intends to release a limited schedule of high-class productions which will be strongly exploited.

"The Harvest Moon" is Given Preview

A preview of "The Harvest Moon," the latest Augustus Thomas drama to be filmed by Deitrich-Beck, Inc., for Gibraltar Pictures, and starring Doris Kenyon, was given last Monday night at the Detroit theatre, Detroit, Mich., under novel conditions. The occasion developed into a sort of professional reunion, Miss Kenyon making a speech, after the showing, followed by Mr. Cumberland, who plays in the opposite role.

Tom Moore Will Star in Mystery Farce

Word is received from the Goldwyn studios at Culver City, California that the mystery farce, "Stop Thief!" soon will be placed in production with Tom Moore as the star. In this, as in "Officer 666," which he has just completed, Moore will be directed by Harry Beaumont. Although the cast for "Stop Thief" has not yet been selected, it is announced that Hazel Daly will be the star's leading woman.

In common with "Officer 666," "Stop Thief!" has the distinction of being one of the most successful plays ever staged by Cohan & Harris. It ran for a full year at the Gaiety theatre, New York, where it was first presented in the fall of 1913.

HAROLD LLOYD

in AN EASTERN WESTERNER

A TWO REEL COMEDY

Listen!

Harold Lloyd is a giant in filmdom to-day.

His comedies are generally billed bigger than the feature, because they pull bigger than the feature.

Just read a few of the comments on the last Lloyd comedy, "Haunted Spooks":

"One of the funniest and cleverest comedies yet registered."
—Morning Telegraph.

"A word of blessing for 'Haunted Spooks.' Hilarious enough to cause even a medium to cease for the time being to take ghosts seriously."—N. Y. Sun.

"Astonishingly fresh and diverting."—N. Y. Tribune.

"The audience roared. It's the funniest comedy of the season."
—N. Y. Evening Sun.

"Lloyd made a hit."—N. Y. Globe.

"Brightest spot on the Strand program this week. 'Haunted Spooks' brought down the house."—Wid's.

"Contains a flock of snikkers. An object lesson to comedy producers."—Variety.

"Brightest spot on the Rivoli program. Comedy in the real sense."—Variety.

"The man who discovered Harold Lloyd deserves a vote of thanks. If you never heard laughter come in gales you will when you see his latest comedy."
—Minneapolis Tribune.

" 'Haunted Spooks' attains the supreme heights of comedy. Not an inch of wasted film. Every scene counts as a laugh. The gags are startling, original and sidesplitting Lloyd is a big league comedian, his company is big league and whoever does the directing is big league."—Wid's.

The Reason Why

WHY does the RITCHEY LITHO. CORP. advertise when it is the busiest poster producing concern in the world, and when we are now working night and day to keep even with our orders? We feel that we owe it both to the buyer of posters and ourselves to advertise. Ours is an educational advertising campaign undertaken as a mutual protection against the mediocre poster. We wish to implant into the poster buyer's mind the highest possible standard, wherewith he will judge all posters. Then we will have achieved that purpose.

Few people stop to consider that advertising is one of the great arts—and that poster advertising is its highest and most complex development. Indeed it is so highly complex that it is not possible for the average business man to have an expert knowledge of the qualities of posters, although he realizes perfectly well the great importance of having good ones. It is that fact which enables a lot of lithographers, advertising agents and publicity men to put over a lot of stuff that is quite valueless. This is pure waste, and these advertisements are written in an effort to overcome that waste!

The ultimate result of this campaign will be to convince the buyer that there are just two ways of getting great posters. One way is by making a life long study of the subject—the other way is to insist upon having RITCHEY posters!

VOL. XXI MAY 15, 1920 No. XXI

Editorial and Otherwise

Why the Guarantee?

IN two cities, Baltimore and Spokane, exhibitor action that is almost of a concerted nature has blocked the course of percentage booking. Other sections, while not reporting definite action, give signs of a growing storm of opposition to percentage.

We can't say, after looking at many forms of contract on percentage, that we can blame exhibitors.

Percentage, in theory, means a gamble—a gamble in which both parties share. Percentage, in the show game, called for both parties to take a showman's gamble.

But there is little of the showman about most of the contracts we see—with their large guarantee, usually equal to or in excess of the amount an exhibitor would consider a fair rental for the production.

Percentage will not be hastened on such a basis.

Percentage must mean equity—else there will be no percentage.

The Right Idea

J. D. WILLIAMS saw deep into the seat of much of the exhibitors' troubles when he declared at Chicago, "Let your majority rule. Be good soldiers. Bury your personal whims and stand by your leaders as long as the majority votes them your leaders. If you don't like them, throw them out—if the majority feels the way you do."

Minority cantankerousness has been the rock on which national exhibitor organization has always foundered.

But there are two kinds of majorities in exhibitor bodies. There is the supposed majority created by credentials committees, steam rollers, convenient proxies, etc. There is the real, all-wool majority of theater-owning exhibitors, each having his say, and no one else having a word.

Mr. Williams points the way; let someone else bar the way to politics; and then—may the majority rule.

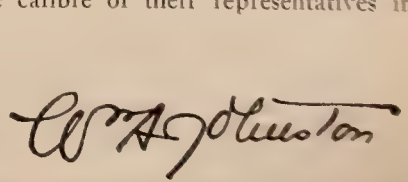
The Direct Route

EVERYTHING in the picture business is tending towards direct action. Now it is the Associated Producers who have decided, after months of propositions from various other organizations, to establish their own distributing system.

We can state the opinion of many others along with our own when we declare that they have made the first step right in selecting Oscar Price and Fred Warren to guide their distribution.

To a certain extent any group of distributors are controlling their own destinies when they establish their own exchanges. But only to an extent measured by the character and ability of the men they place at the helm.

The Big Six—there are hints that the figure may be increased—have taken the first hurdle in fine form.



Chicago's High-light

THE outstanding point of the Chicago convention of independent exhibitors was the evident and impressive earnestness of those present, the sincere desire for a real national organization.

Politics may have attempted to enter the scene, but the stay was short. And as the convention found its footing and gathered coherent shape, personalities and politics beat a hasty retreat.

No self-seeker could stand long against the exhibitors of the South, presenting facts and figures from their own experience to show the need of protective, national organization. No politician could stand unabashed before the sincere self-effacing attitude of such men as Sig Samuels and Willard Patterson, who called the convention, or of Frank Rembusch, who shouldered the burden of chairmanship.

If the Cleveland convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners Association profits by the addition of the energetic men who gathered in Chicago, if, out of the three days session in June, there emerges a solidified national organization—exhibitors will be grateful for the calibre of their representatives in Chicago.

STATE RIGHTS—EXPORT

Aywon Sells Rights on Rex Ray Westerns

Nathan Hirsh, president of Aywon Film Corporation, reports success in selling the rights to the series of five-reel Western dramas starring Rex Ray, which were made especially for the Aywon company.

Sol Lesser has purchased the California, Nevada and Arizona territory. Delaware, Maryland and the District of Columbia has been sold to The Empire Film Distributing Co., and The Lyric Film and Supply Co., of Terre Haute, has purchased the rights for Indiana, Utah, Colorado and New Mexico territory was sold to The Arrow Film Co., of Denver, while Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia are controlled by The Penn Film Service. The Dooley Film Exchange of Syracuse has bought the rights for upper New York State, while greater New York and Northern New Jersey territory will be controlled by Aywon.

New Officers Elected by Pioneer Film

A. E. Lefcourt has been elected to the presidency of the Pioneer Film Corporation. Mr. Lefcourt is one of the most successful figures in New York business and financial circles. M. H. Hoffman has been elected vice-president and still remains active directing head as general manager. The other officers elected recently were Louis Haas, secretary and treasurer, and Morris Rose, vice-president.

During the past year the number of exchanges handling the Pioneer product has increased from two in number to twenty and are to be found in every exchange center in the United States and Canada. The volume of business handled by the Pioneer organization for the month of April more than doubles that of any previous month in the history of the corporation.

"Empty Arms" Rights Go to Pioneer Film

After bidding among several New York State buyers, the film "Empty Arms" went to the Pioneer Feature Film Corporation, who have acquired the rights for New York State, including Greater New York and Northern New Jersey.

The Pioneer Film Corporation which is located at 130 West 46th street, New York, requests all managers in their territory to address them directly. At the present moment, scores of theatres are communicating with the Photoplay Libraries, Inc.

Merit Film Exchanges Open New Branches

In order to care for the growing volume of business received from Indiana and Wisconsin territories and to give satisfactory service to these exhibitors, Merit Film Exchanges, of Chicago, have opened branch offices at the Toy Building in Milwaukee, and at 122 West New York Street, Indianapolis, according to an announcement just made by D. Padorr, general manager. The Indianapolis office is under the management of W. W. Everett. The Milwaukee office is expected to be in operation shortly.

Kohn Plans More Comedies

Will Produce Series of Ten a Year to Fill Exhibitors' Demand

WITH a definite program already mapped out, Marion H. Kohn, head of the Marion H. Kohn Productions, Inc., announces that he will produce a series of ten comedies, costing $25,000 or more, each year in addition to his popular priced short subjects starring "Smiling Bill" Jones and Polly Moran.

"With the larger producing and distributing organizations breaking away from two-reel comedies and the larger two-reel producers making five-reel comedies, there is an appalling shortage of high-order comedies for the theatres in the larger cities," states Mr. Kohn, "and that shortage must be filled." With two of the largest programs without a single comedy release, and a third about to withdraw its last remaining short subject, I firmly believe that unless we independents make up this shortage there will be an awful howl, both from the exhibitors and from the patrons.

"I don't care to discuss why the large distributors are 'laying off' the short subject, but I can see the exhibitors angle and he wants comedies for his bill of fare and is willing to pay the price for the class of pictures his customers demand."

Rhea Mitchell, who is appearing in "The Great Physician," the seven-reel special feature produced by Screen Crafts

Lejaren a Hiller Takes Up Production Work

Lejaren a Hiller, illustrator and painter, whose work is familiar to magazine readers, is the latest knight of the brush and palette to turn his art "moviewards." His first production, "The Sleep of Cymba Roget," a seven reel drama of romance and intrigue, will be ready for a trade showing in a few weeks. This is the first picture of a series that Mr. Hiller will make under the general title of "Never Told Tales of a Studio." Helen Gardner will be featured in "The Sleep of Cymba Roget."

Falkner-Tyrol, Inc., to Produce Pictures

A new production corporation under the firm name of Falkner-Tyrol, Inc., has opened offices at 117 West 46th Street, New York. Fred W. Falkner is the president and general manager, and Jacques Tyrol is the secretary and treasurer. The company, which is incorporated for $200,000, plans to make pictures only of the special type which have had a long run on Broadway as legitimate plays. According to Mr. Tyrol, it is planned to make four pictures a year, each picture to have special exploitation and to be publicized with a heavy advertising campaign.

Arrow Film Company Moves Its Office

W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, has announced that his company has found it necessary to make another move. Larger quarters have been secured on the fourth floor of the Candler Building, 220 West Forty-second street, New York City, just below those formerly occupied.

Pearl White, the William Fox star who returns from abroad this week to begin production of a new feature for the Fox program under Charles Giblyn's direction

Variety and Splendor in Kosmik Serial

Lavish sets will be one of the features of "The Hope Diamond Mystery," a serial made for Kosmik Film, Inc. Several of the episodes are laid in India in the sixteenth century and the splendor of Hindu temples and Indian bazaars is said to have been faithfully reproduced.

The story, which was written by May Yohe, traces the sinister history of the Hope diamond, which causes death and sorrow to follow in its wake. There is plenty of variety of setting, for the serial opens in India, shifts to America, hence to aristocratic England, and from there to the high seas and a desert island, and finally returns to India in the sixteenth century.

May Yohe was a recent visitor at the studios in Hollywood where she met Director Stuart Patron and members of the company. She will herself appear in several episodes This is the first time George Kleine, president of Kosmik Films, has produced a serial since "Gloria's Romance," with Billie Burke as star.

Jean Paige, who will co-star with Joe Ryan in a new Vitagraph serial, "Hidden Dangers"

E. H. Kaufmann Opening Coast Offices

Eugene H. Kaufmann, manager of the accessory department of Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, arrived in Los Angeles last week. Mr. Kaufmann left New York last week for California to establish West Coast offices for Inter-Ocean, through which it proposes to handle the distribution of motion picture accessories in that territory; and which offices, it was stated, are to serve as depots to accelerate shipments of motion pictures and accessory products to the Far East.

Mr. Kaufmann advises that a suite of offices has already been obtained in the heart of the Los Angeles business district and that plans are already under way for the formal opening of this office. Mr. Kaufmann, it is understood, will proceed to San Francisco and Portland, shortly, where he will likewise open additional branches.

Foreign Sales Reported on Goldwyn's "Tarzan"

Arthur Ziehm, manager of foreign sales for Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, has just closed record-breaking deals for the foreign rights to "The Return of Tarzan," the picturization of Edgar Rice Burroughs' book, produced by Numa Pictures Corporation. Mr. Ziehm completed the negotiations with the foreign buyers a few days after the Goldwyn Corporation had signed contracts for the handling of the picture.

The countries in the first territorial group closed are India, Burma and Ceylon. Another contract covers South Africa, a third the Dutch East Indies, the Straits Settlements, the Federated Malay States and Siam and a fourth Porto Rico and Santo Domingo.

Jans Pictures Finishes "A Woman's Business"

The final touches have been applied to "A Woman's Business," the Jans Pictures, Inc., starring vehicle for Olive Tell, the direction of which was finished recently by B. A. Rolfe of the Jans organization. The picture will be released on June 1st. It is an adaptation of the novel "Nothing a Year," by Charles Belmont Davis.

Albert Boasberg Sells for Inter-Ocean

The sales department of Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, under the generalship of Gus Schlesinger, has been further augmented by the recent addition of Albert Boasberg, who has been promoted from the ranks. Mr. Boasberg was assistant manager of Inter-Ocean's Technical Film Department.

Eight-Year-Old Child Heads Own Company

Gloria Joy, known as "the sweetest girl in pictures," is now heading her own motion picture company, the Gloria Joy Productions, Inc. Although but an eight-year-old child is perfectly able to portray characters up to fifteen years of age with ease.

"Smiling Bill" Jones in the Marion H. Kohn comedy, "Harem Scarum"

Kohn Extends Production

Production Schedule to Include New Series of Ten Comedy Films

WITH a definite program already mapped out, Marion H. Kohn, head of the Marion H. Kohn Productions, Inc., announces that he will produce a series of ten comedies costing $25,000 or more each year, in addition to his popular priced short subjects, starring "Smiling Bill" Jones and Polly Moran.

"With the larger producing and distributing organizations breaking away from two-reel comedies and the larger two-reel producers making five-reel comedies, there is an appalling shortage of high-order comedies for the theatres in the larger cities," states Mr. Kohn, "and that shortage must be filled." "With two of the largest programs without a single comedy release, and a third about to withdraw its last remaining short subject, I firmly believe that unless we independents make up this shortage there will be an awful howl, both from the exhibitors and from the patrons. I don't care to discuss why the large distributors are 'laying off' the short subject, but I can see the exhibitor's angle, and he wants comedies for his bill of fare and is willing to pay the price for the class of pictures his customers demand.

"I talked with the foremost exhibitor in California on the short subject question, and he told me only last week that he is absolutely at the mercy of the short subject distributors, simply because there is a dearth of good films of this character and because he must give his patrons comedies along with features."

Screen Craft to Sign Stars

President Lawson to Visit New York and May Close Contracts

H. M. LAWSON, president and general-manager of Screen Crafts, Inc., one of the newest organization to enter the ranks of film producers, contemplates a trip to New York soon for the purpose of communicating with certain well known artists of the screen, whom he plans to bring back with him to his studios in Culver City, Cal. At the same time he will negotiate release contracts and discuss plans with New York headquarters of his company for the launching of a tremendous exploitation campaign for forthcoming Screen Crafts productions, now in the making at the company's studio.

At present Screen Crafts has two companies busily engaged in the production of plays for the screen, one being an all-star company headed by Bob McKim and Rhea Mitchell, which is making "The Great Physician," a seven-reel metaphysical story, under the direction of Chadwick Ayres, and the other headed by Bumps Adams, who is featured in a series of two-reel athletic comedies.

While no definite announcement is at present issued by President Lawson, it is thought he will offer contracts to a number of popular screen artists in the Eastern metropolis with whom it is known he has been in almost daily correspondence during the past few weeks. Mr. Lawson states, however, that it is the plan and purpose of his organization to make its studios one of the leading film camps on the West coast and four and possibly five companies will soon be engaged in production there, he declares.

"Great Physician" to be Ready In Ninety Days

"The Great Physician," a Screen Crafts picture, is to be the first of a series of three productions of the same general character to be made during the year.

Franklyn Farnum Will Be Starred in Series

With his return from the coast after a two weeks' conference with Colonel William N. Selig, Jack Weinberg, president of the Canyon Pictures Corporation announces that a deal has been consummated by which Colonel Selig will produce a series of six Franklyn Farnum features, five reels each. The deal involves $350,000 and production will be started May 24.

Mr. Farnum is at present working out the details of his first production, and has secured a well-known story title of which will be announced later. Each story will present this popular star in his famous western parts, but the locales will vary in the East and West, with Mr. Farnum equally able to portray either part.

Territory Selling For "Illiterate Digest"

Joe Brandt, Eastern representative of the Marion H. Kohn Productions, Inc., who, by special arrangement with the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, are producing the weekly novelty reel, "The Illiterate Digest," by Will Rogers, reports that the demand for this short subject is proving to be greater than all anticipation.

"The Illiterate Digest" features the clever quips and gags of the famous N. Y. Follies star and also shows him in action, performing the stunts which have made him famous.

National Film Studios Prepare For Action

There is a great change apparent in the studios of the National Film Corporation of America since C. A. Willat, the National's new general manager, assumed charge of the plant on the west coast. Mr. Willat, states a communication from the National studios, has "cleared decks for action," and within a fortnight, promises Mr. Willat, production on several new features, short subjects and a serial will be well under way. A total of eleven units will be busy at that time, according to the same news source.

Bennett Story Bought By Art-O-Graf Film

According to an announcement of Jay Casey, president and general manager of the Art-O-Graf Film Company, his company recently closed a deal whereby they obtain the picture rights to "Out of the Depths," a Robert Ames Bennett book. Edmund Cobb and Violet Mesereau will be featured and the production will be under the direction of Otis B. Thayer.

Dog To Be Starred In Unique Film Comedy

What is said to be the most unique comedy films on the screen will be the offering of the Unique Films, Inc., starring Braco, known as the dog "with the human brain." Preparations are under way to start production on the first of these series of two reel comedies and the shooting will begin about May 10th.

Pioneer Records Broken by "Jekyll and Hyde"

Pioneer's version of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde in which Sheldon Lewis plays the stellar roles has broken all previous records during the month of April. The contract department at the Pioneer home office in New York, has just finished their tabulation of the bookings played during April, which shows that in each of the twenty Pioneer exchanges throughout the country, "Jekyll and Hyde" outdid all the other released both in the number of showings as well as the gross receipts.

Film Specials Reports Sale of Comedies

Film Specials reports the sale of the entire foreign rights on their "Jolly Comedies to the M. P. Sales Agency, Ltd., of London, Eng. A great part of the Western territory in the United States has also been sold on these comedies.

Reelcraft Reports Sale Of Franey Comedies

The Reelcraft Pictures Corporation Sales Department reports a heavy sale of the one-reel series, featuring Billy Franey, now being produced at the Hollywood studio of Reelcraft, Release date has been set for May 17th in several of the territories.

Another Polly Moran Comedy is Ready

The second of the series of two-reel Polly Moran Comedies being produced by the Marion H. Kohn Productions, is now ready for release, according to an announcement from Joe Brandt, eastern representative of the company.

Big Return Business on "The River's End"

A high water mark in rebookings and return dates business is confidently anticipated by J. R. Grainger, in charge of sales for Marshall Neilan Productions, on "The River's End.

L. Hiller Likes "Mary's Attic"

States Righter Buys Interest in Five Reel Comedy

A SIGNIFICANT announcement this week in connection with the great comedy feature, "Up in Mary's Attic," which is being released by Fine Art Pictures, Inc., on the independent market, is the fact that L. L. Hiller has purchased a substantial interest in this big production. Mr. Hiller's judgment is another endorsement of the magnitude and huge possibilities for the independent buyer, with "Up in Mary's Attic."

"During all my experience in the state right field," says Mr. Hiller, "I have never seen a picture which contains the colossal box office possibilities of this great comedy feature, 'Up in Mary's Attic.' And I have been identified with some of the biggest productions in the field.

"'Up in Mary's Attic' aroused my enthusiasm from the very first. It contains every element of success and I feel, and am in a position to know, that it is the greatest comedy feature ever released. In fact, it is more than a comedy. It runs the gamut of every human emotion. It registers a big human appeal without the hackneyed triangle love affair. It brings forth genuine hearty laughter without the slapstick buffoonery that is becoming so tiresome to a public saturated with nonsense of this kind. It holds the interest from first to last without effort and the usual makeshifts.

"'Up in Mary's Attic' is the one big feature that the independent market has been waiting for. It is the greatest box office attraction I have ever seen, and linked with the huge advertising and exploitation campaign back of it, will prove one of the biggest successes ever released on the screen.

"Featured with charming Eva Novak is Harry Gribbon, the clever comedian who is being featured also in 'Down on the Farm.' The cast includes some of the most beautiful girls on the stage or screen, who are shown first as the students of a girl's seminary and later on the sunshine beaches of California. Wm. H. Watson is the director.

"There is an unforgettable heart interest in the many situations featuring one of the most precocious and appealing babies ever shown on the screen. Another element that brings out in even stronger relief the human appeal of this production is the clever acting of an almost human dog, who acts as nurse-maid to the baby, feeding it, rocking it to sleep and playing a lullaby for it on the phonograph. Even Minnie-Ha-Ha, the quaint old Indian, does some of the best work of her motion picture career.

"The lack of just such big box office successes as 'Up in Mary's Attic' is perhaps one of the reasons why the independent market has always been looked upon as more or less spasmodic. It has its periods of dull depressions, but when a really great production comes into the field the possibilities are unlimited. The independent producer does not slip his picture over cold for the exchangeman and exhibitor to do the best he can with it. 'Up in Mary's Attic' has back of it one of the greatest publicity and exploitation campaigns ever tied up with a picture. Every possible advertising accessory is being furnished the exchangeman. In cases where the exchange has no exploitation man to help put the picture over locally. Fine Art Pictures are prepared to send their own representatives to tie up locally the exploitation campaign which they have outlined for the exchanges.

"I know and feel convinced that 'Up in Mary's Attic' is one of those great features that the independent exchangeman and exhibitor will not soon forget, one of those big productions that make history in the state rights field and establish a precedent whose reputation sets a new standard in motion picture history."

Reelcraft Expands Its Facilities

THE demand for Reelcraft short subjects exceeds the present supply, according to the announcemenut of R. C. Cropper, president of the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation, who has just returned to New York after a three weeks' trip visiting the different Reelcraft Exchanges and their allied distributors in the eastern and central States. The Standard Film Service of Cleveland, Cincinnati, and Detroit; the S. & S. Film & Supply Company, of Pittsburg; the Dooley Exchanges, Inc., of Buffalo and Syracuse; the R. D. Marson Attractions of Boston, all distributors of Reelcraft releases, and the managers of the Reelcraft branches in New York, Chicago, Milwaukee, Indianapolis and Minneapolis, report an unprecedented number of bookings of their short subjects.

During convention week in Chicago, a conference of Reelcraft branch managers was held at the Chicago office. Managers Carl Harthill, of the Chicago branch; George Wilson, of the Indianapolis branch; Larry Stiles, of the Milwaukee branch, Harry Muir, of the Minneapolis branch; Julius Singer, of the New York branch, and Frederick J. Ireland in Charge of Productions at the Chicago Studio were present with President R. C. Cropper, at which time many important matters concerning Reelcraft distribution were considered. The future plans of the producing department were outlined to the managers.

Discussion relative to the coming series of educational pictures to be made by Reelcraft brought forth many interesting facts, not generally known. It appears from facts offered, that the United States Department of Agriculture is one of the largest producers of interesting educational subjects in the United States, not confining the subjects to one and two reels, but owning at least one eight-reel feature picturizing "Cotton," from the seed to the finished product and all of the by-products of the cotton plant. Over a hundred subjects have been filmed, ranging from a one-reel educational, titled "Why Eat Cottage Cheese," to a valuable photographic illustration of how to make hens lay more eggs. Moreover, these educationals are produced in such a manner as to be not only instructive but photographically interesting as well. Reelcraft plans its Educationals to be along these same interesting lines.

Increased production at the West Coast Studio has compelled Studio Manager Nat Spitzer to build additional stages to accommodate Reelcraft producing companies. Three companies are working at the Hollywood plant, and provision is being made for another producing unit. Texas Guinan is busy making a series of two-reel Western dramas under the direction of Jay Hunt. Billy Franey, under the direction of George Jeske is producing a series of one-reel comedies, and has been working nights and Sundays endeavoring to have several productions completed before May 17th, which has been set for the first release. Milburn Moranti is at work on a series of two-reel comedies of a farcical nature, requiring an exceptionally large number of sets. Billy West is producing his series of two comedies at the Francis Ford studio, in Hollywood.

Production at the Chicago Studio is also going full speed, where Alice Howell is producing her series of two-reel comedies. Reelcraft officials spent considerable time at the Chicago Studio, preparing room for an additional production unit. The out-of-town managers were kept busy entertaining Exhibitors from their local territories, showing them around the studio while Alice Howell was making her "Cinderella Cinders" production. The projection room was also running overtime screening the coming releases

Master Films will soon offer another "Torchy" comedy in which Johnny Hines is starred

News Notes from the West Coast

By J. C. JESSEN

ROBERTSON-COLE

THERE is but one point if similarity in the four Robertson-Cole productions, and that is the fact that the stars in all of these—Sessue Hayakawa, Dustin Farnum, Edith Storey and Bessie Barriscale - all play dual role parts.

Sessue Hayakawa this week worked in the final scenes for his sixteenth and last production under the original contract, which is titled "An Arabian Knight." This is a story of adventure in Egypt, directed by Charles Swickard, which has a big cast including Lillian Hall, Jean Acker, Marie Pavis, Elaine Inniscourt, Harvey Clark, Fred Jones, Roy Coulson and Thomas Bates. Mr. Hayakawa departed for New York this week, his first trip east in five years. While in the east he will spend several days at Philadelphia where he will make personal appearances at first run theatres showing his productions.

Upon Hayakawa's return to Los Angeles, work will be started on the very well known play by Francis Powers, "The First Born." This is a Chinese story placed under option a long time ago, as the result of many requests from picture lovers to see Hayakawa in this production. It is to be made as a big special, as well as all of the future Hayakawa subjects, this star to work in but four or five productions each year.

Colin Campbell is making the final scenes for the initial Robertson-Cole Dustin Farnum production, "Big Happiness," which is an adaptation from the story of the English author known as "Pan." Supporting Farnum in this dual role play are Kathryn Adams, Frederick Malatesta, Violet Schram, William Brown, and Aggie Herring. As soon as the subject is edited, Farnum, Director Campbell and a company will go to the lumber country for exteriors of a production adapted from the novel, "The Trail of The Axe."

The initial Robertson-Cole release starring Edith Storey is now completely edited, and it is expected will be released shortly. The picture is titled, "Moon Madness," and is from the original photoplay by J. Grubb Alexander. Colin Campbell directed this production, and the cast is one made up of exceptionally well known people, some of the players being Wallace MacDonald, Josef Swickard, Sam de Grasse, William Courtley, Frederick Starr, Little Frankie Lee and Irene Hunt. Continuity will be ready in a few days for the filming of "The Beach of Dreams," which is adapted from the novel of that title written by H. DeVere Stackpole.

Bessie Barriscale is to be starred in bigger productions that will be of the nature of specials, and the first of these is at present known as "'Life's Twist," being an adaptation from the magazine story of that name written for the screen by Harvey Gates. Wm. Christy Cabanne is directing this film, and Walter McGrail is the leading man. King Baggot has an important role, and Claire DuBray is the feminine heavy. William V. Mong plays a leading character role, and Truly Shattuck and Martha Mannon make up the cast.

The final scenes have been taken for the third Lew Cody, "The Mischief Man," by Elmer Forst, directed by James W. Horne. Betty Blythe, Lillian Rambeau, Elinor Fair, Dorothy Wallace, Cleo Ridgley, William Quinn, J. Barney Sherry and Lloyd Hamilton make up the cast.

Plans are now being made for the first Pauline Frederick Robertson-Cole special, and these provide that the star shall have her own individual studio, and work will be started in the near future, or as soon as scenario can be prepared and working organization established.

Otis Skinner is to come to the coast early in June to work in his Robertson-Cole production adapted from his most famous stage play, "Kismet." No details concerning the Skinner production have been worked out.

The Christie Film Company have contracted to produce a series of "Arsen Lupin" stories for Robertson-Cole which will feature Wedgewood Nowell in the title role. Script for the first of this series is now being prepared, and will be titled, "813." Scott Sidney will direct the making of this production.

The Christie Company is giving the "Chick" Sales picture, "The Smart Alec," the final editing, and it will be shipped east this week. Plans at this studio provide for the filming of "So Long Letty." Work will be started in about two weeks.

UNIVERSAL

BEFORE his departure for New York, President Carl Laemmle gave his official O. K. to a production schedule for Universal City that will keep this producing plant busy for the next six weeks. Additional plans will be O. K.'d by Mr. Laemmle from New York prior to July 6th, on which date he will sail for a trip of several months in Europe. Mr. Laemmle will be accompanied by his family and several others, the party numbering fifteen in all. Mr. Laemmle will investigate conditions on the continent and British Isles, giving particular attention to the latter with respect to the feasibility of the Universal establishing a producing studio in London. Mr. Laemmle also expects to make contracts with a number of European authors for screen rights on their stories. Irving Thalberg, secretary to President Laemmle, will remain in Los Angeles to represent the president on the advisory board of the producing plant.

The productions now in the making, which will take the time of the Universal producing staff for the next six weeks are, "Marama" being directed by Norman Dawn and starring Edith Roberts in a South Sea Island story by Ralph Stock; "The Red Lane," being directed by Lynn Reynolds from the Holman Day Canadian border story; "The Girl in the Rain," directed by Rollin Sturgeon and starring Ann Cornwall; "Fightin' Job," by H. H. Van Loan, starring Harry Carey under the direction of Reeves Eason, and the Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran comedy, "La La Lucille," from the musical comedy by Fred Jackson.

Carmel Myers, who was featured in a number of Universal subjects and who has since been playing in musical comedy in New York, has been placed under contract by Universal, and is returning to the film stage some time this month. The first vehicle this star will work in is titled, "The Cat That Walked Alone," which is from a story by John Colton.

Two other stories have been purchased by Universal. One is "The Isle Life," by Stephen French Whitman, which is laid off the Italian coast on Mediterranean Isles, and the circus story, "Out of a Clear Sky." The latter will serve as a vehicle for Edith Roberts.

The Universal is to continue to give particular attention to short subjects and this week added the fifth company which will devote its attention to the making of two reel productions. The Universal recently purchased the series of stories by Paul Annixter known under the title of "Spike," and being the adventures of a western character. Leo D. Maloney, well known in films for the past five years, and who has played in several series and serials as leading man for Helen Holmes and Helen Gibson, has been placed under contract for six months, to play the name part in this series. Mack Wright, who has been directing two reel subjects for Universal, will be the director of the "Spike" Maloney Company.

"Hoot" Gibson, the Universal cowboy who has been featured in short subjects and serials, is to direct himself in forthcoming subjects, and began work this week on the first of this series which will be titled "The Fighting Terror."

Lee Kohlmer, the character actor and comedian of the speaking stage, who recently came to Los Angeles with a road show attraction, has been engaged by the Universal to play in a series of comedies, and is working under the direction of John Hohenbest in the filming of the first of this series which will be titled, "The Last Bottle."

Four other comedy companies are at work. Allen Curtis is making "A Hero 'N'everything," William H. Watson is producing a two reel Century lion comedy; James Davis is making a two reel comedy featuring "Brownie," the wonder dog, and F. C. Windemere is making a two reel comedy titled, "An Awful Skate."

NATIONAL

ANNOUNCEMENT is made this week by C. A. Willat, the new general manager of the National studios, that eleven companies will be at work at this plant within the next fortnight. In addition to a total of six short subject units, the serial company making "The Son of Tarzan," there will be feature companies put to work on big productions. At the present time the National has three short subject units working making Buddy Post comedies, Flannigan and Edwards comedies, and the serial, and three units are at work on Marion H. Kohn Productions, the list including Grace Cunard, Polly Moran and "Smiling" Bill Jones units.

The Story and the Star

SILAS BLACKBURN, an aged and wealthy recluse, resides with his ward, Katherine, and a butler. The man is possessed of a great fear, as if of impending danger, expression of which causes his ward to worry concerning his welfare.

On a dark and stormy night, Katherine comes to her foster father and finds him extremely nervous and irritable. He informs her that he is going to change his will, cutting off his ward and a grandson of whom he disapproves because the young man is dissolute. He accuses both Katherine and his grandson, Robert, of conspiring to secure his money. Katherine denies the accusation and defends Robert, although admitting that there is no longer a romance between them. The old man in anger orders her to her room. Katherine obeys but is unable to rest or sleep owing to a presentment that something is about to occur. She rises and goes down stairs, there to find that old Silas is about to retire in the abandoned room, so called because it is never used since three generations of the family have met death while sleeping there.

Katherine begs the old man not to spend the night in the room but he insists, giving as a reason that he is afraid to sleep elsewhere. Later, still restless, Katherine and the butler enter the abandoned room and find that the old man is dead, with a pin-like wound at the base of the skull, evidence that he has been murdered.

On the same night Robert, the grandson, is pursuing the path of pleasure in the rooms of an actress. He has been drinking heavily in spite of the protestations of a friend of the family, supposedly, Carlos Paredes. Parades, unable to persuade the boy to leave the actress and go to his uncle's home where he has had an appointment, departs, leaving the two people.

In the morning Robert comes to his senses in an abandoned farm house near his uncle's home. In the meantime a detective and the coroner, who happens to be a friend of Katherine's, have been called to the house to look into the mystery of the murder of old Silas. They are making their inquiry, the detective questioning Katherine sharply and inferring that Robert is the guilty person, when the boy, having recovered from his attack of aphasia, comes to the house.

He is questioned as to his whereabouts on the previous night and is unable to give an account of his actions. The supposed friend, Paredes, does not attempt to come to his aid. All the persons present, including Robert himself, are suspicious that the boy has had something to do with the murder of his grandfather, although the coroner is inclined to be charitable and suggest that the crime was committed during the attack of aphasia which Robert had experienced.

The detective continues his investigation and mystified as to how the murder was committed in the abandoned room, all doors having been securely locked, determines to sleep in the room. He retires and in the morning is found dead, having been killed in the same manner as was Silas Blackburn. A few days later, Silas Blackburn is buried and a new detective comes to attempt to unravel the mystery of the double murder. In the meantime Katherine has learned that Paredes is in communication with the actress who had detained Robert on the night of his uncle's murder, and learning of an appointment the two have, goes to the place where they are to meet, accusing both persons of knowing something concerning the murders, and expressing her conviction that Robert is innocent and her determination to prove that he is. In the hope of finding clues which will lead to the guilty party, Katherine begins an investigation of her own. She is seen by Robert skulking about through the forest, and while he keeps the knowledge to himself, begins to wonder if she was not concerned in the murders. That night Robert, in an attempt to learn how the murders have been committed in the abandoned room, announces that he will sleep there. He retires to the room but does not go to bed, sitting near a window through which the moonlight comes strongly enough so he can watch the bed in which the two men have come to their death. Late in the night, he sees a hand reach through the wall at the head of the bed and rushing to the spot grasps the arm. The member is that of Katherine, she having opened a secret slide door into the room from the hall. Robert accuses Katherine of having been instrumental in murdering his grandfather and the detective but she denies the acts and upbraids him for his lack of faith in her.

The following night old Silas is found sitting in his favorite chair in front of the fireplace. The old man refuses to explain where he has been and expressed anger at the inference that he had died. The coroner who had pronounced the two persons who had slept in the abandoned room dead, now proposes that the grave in which the remains of Silas Blackburn had been laid be opened. This is done and the casket is found to be empty. The mystery is deeper than ever.

Fate now takes a hand in unraveling the mystery. Mario, the actress, comes to the Blackburn home. At the sight of the girl, Silas draws a revolver from his clothing and shoots himself.

Explanations then are forthcoming from the butler, who is an old family servant. On the night of the story, a twin brother of Silas Blackburn's, from whom he had stolen a large sum of money while both were in South America, had come to the house and threatened to expose the old man. The butler had found the brothers quarreling. It was finally agreed that the brother should remain over night on the plea that a settlement could be agreed upon in the morning. The brother was shown to the abandoned room. While Silas was at the door after leaving his brother inside, Katherine had appeared and disarranged some plans the old man had. He had intended to murder his brother and hide the body, but after telling Katherine that he intended to sleep in the abandoned room himself was forced to let the body of his brother be mistaken for that of himself. He had gone away for a few days but had finally returned. Mario, the actress, was the daughter of Silas' brother. She had known that either her uncle or her father had been killed. She came to the Blackburn home to determine which one it was. Paredes proved to be a lover of Mario who was attempting to aid the girl's father to recover his property from old Silas. Robert and Katherine are reunited, Robert promising to mend his ways.

OLIVE TELL'S SUCCESSFUL CAREER

OLIVE TELL, the star of "Love Without Question," is no newcomer to the stage and screen having been recognized as an actress of rare dramatic talent for several years in spite of her youth.

Miss Tell was born in New York City, received her school education in France, began her dramatic training at Sargent's Dramatic School, later played with well-known dramatic stock companies, and won the way to stardom as a legitimate player in such productions as "Cousin Lucy," "The Intruder," "Romance" and "Under Pressure." She has had an extensive experience on the silver sheet, having been starred in productions by the Mutual and Metro forces, playing the leading roles in such well-known successes as "Her Sister," "The Unforseen" with Mutual and "To Hell With the Kaiser" and "Secret Strings" for Metro Pictures.

Miss Tell's beauty and her ability in emotional roles secured for her the engagement. That B. A. Rolfe, who directed the picture, and the Jan's Pictures Inc. made no mistake in their selection is evidenced by the real worth of "Love Without Question" as screen entertainment.

Miss Tell will appear in other pictures under the Jan's Pictures, Inc., management. Her popularity and ability is universally recognized.

LOBBY DISPLAYS

An effective lobby display, one easily constructed and inexpensive would be to build a room to represent that which is featured in the picture as the abandoned room from which the story gets it's title.

The walls of the room should be covered with some old fashioned, dull looking wall paper which can be purchased at a small price. A single door, preferably of old fashioned design and in colonial style provides entrance to the room. On the opposite side from the door a window with small panes of glass and disclosing the fact that they have not been cleaned in a long time should be erected. Old fashioned window curtains and a shade of dull blue dress the window. The door and window casing should be of the old fashioned type, with corner blocks and a moulding about the outside, or painted to represent this. The paint on the window, door and casing should be a yellow white. On one side of the room an old fashioned, turned post bed should be placed. One of the sort known as a "cord bed" in lieu of springs on which the bed clothing is placed would be best. A striped cotton tick, filled with straw can be placed on the ropes. For a coverlet an old fashioned patch work quilt should be secured. Near the window place a chair which will match the bed and general appearance of the room. A rag carpet can be used to advantage on the floor. On the table a tallow candle in one of the old time pewter candle sticks. Lay a pair of "snuffers" along side the candle. For further atmosphere such articles as the family album with red plush covers, a colored "turkey red" tablecloth for the stand, rag rugs, other hair cloth furniture such as a settee, a melodion, with old time sheet music lying about, and old pictures in black walnut frames can be used.

If you use a border for your wall paper, which should be done, select one which is wide enough to permit a painting of the title on it, extending on the three sides of the display you erect. If your wall paper looks too "new" it will be an easy matter to deaden the new appearance.

WINDOW DISPLAYS

The opportunity for a window display along the lines suggested for use in the lobby is particularly good in connection with furniture stores. The "abandoned room" atmosphere could be attempted on one side of the window and a modern up to date room in the other end. Appropriate sign cards for these two rooms would be: "Love without question depends on some material comforts. Which room do you think would best cultivate the grand passion?" "She abandoned this room to dwell in the other with love without question assured."

Another plan would be to construct a hall between the two rooms with a wax figure of a woman in the modern room in a position that would suggest that she was listening to something that had occurred in the abandoned room. In the abandoned room bed place the wax figure of a man whose face could be made up to represent the character of Silas Blackburn of the picture. Through a small slide door directly over his head have a wax hand suspended with a hat pin protruding. Use a sign which reads "Who killed Silas Blackburn?" That is the question of "Love Without Question," the photoplay feature playing at the ———— theatre."

The picture being an adaptation of C. Wadsworth Camp's popular mystery novel "The Abandoned Room" you will be able to arrange for window displays with bookstores in which your advertising will figure. Arrange as many of these as you can using stills from the picture and attractive sign cards as a basis of your portion of the display.

UTILIZE THE LIBRARIES

Some time before your opening date purchase a goodly number of copies of the novel and place them with the different libraries in your city. In your newspaper advertising announce that you have presented the books in order that every person who desires to read the novel before seeing the picture may have an opportunity to do so. Keep harping on this up to the time you open with the feature.

HOW TO STAGE A CONTEST

If you desire to hold a contest for which you can offer substantial prizes you are given an opportunity in the fact that this is a mystery story. Invite your patrons to turn scenario writers. Ask them to read the novel and then from the point where the second murder has been committed write an original solution of the mystery as to who is guilty, how the crimes could have been committed, with plausable reasons and motives, and give an outline of a new way to develop the plot from this point. State that there are a number of opportunities for explaining how the men could have been killed and the assailants escaped undetected, for logically telling how Silas Blackburn could apparently have been killed and buried and still remain alive. It might be well to print a synopsis of the story up to the point of the solution of the mystery and offer your prizes for a completion of the story in the way the various contestants think it might have been finished.

PROLOGUE SUGGESTIONS

For a prologue the scene from the picture where Robert has entered the abandoned room to attempt to learn how the murders with every probability of its proving interesting.

Seat your character playing Robert at the window. With lights down and a blue flood through the window showing "Robert" and striking across to the bed and the wall next to its head, open the slide door and have a woman reach through groping for something. Robert goes hastily but noislessly across the room and grasps the hand. They struggle a moment and then Robert attempts to hold the woman with one hand and open the door with the other. She wrenches away from him and runs. The person should be clothed in a black cloak and be heavily veiled. The audience does not see her face as she rushes by the door eluding Robert, who clutches at her garments but does not detain her. Robert exits in pursuit.

The room as shown in the picture as the "abandoned room" can be easily duplicated.

This scene may be staged prior to the screening or be cut in at the place it occurs in the film and used in place of the strip itself.

BALLYHOO SUGGESTION

A veiled woman with black flowing cloak walking mysteriously about the streets at night with no explanation as to the reason therefore, if played judiously would be almost sure of obtaining front page newspaper space provided it is not overdone. We would suggest that the "woman" keep on the darker streets move stealthily, walking occasionally in parks, vacant lots, etc., early in the evening just after it becomes dusk. If approached she should hurry away, but not run unless forced to do so. Just before you are ready to open your engagement allow the woman to be caught, by the right parties of course.

If you stand in pretty well you can no doubt frame it to write the news stories yourself, but if you don't, take a chance on the stunt being good for a "peeping Tom" article or two.

NEWSPAPER DISPLAYS

Those who go in for the "teaser" form of advertising have an exceptional subject in this mystery story. Varying styles of teasers may be used even the sterotyped, "Who Killed Silas Blackburn?" being good for this picture.

If you wished to use an illustration with your query, a figure holding a candle over a bed with the lights shining dimly on the figure of a man would be appropriate.

For straight selling displays we would suggest the use of a scene still showing the dead figure of Silas Blackburn lying on the floor with the other characters in the cast grouped about him. Play up the mystery part of the story and the novel from which it was adapted rather than Olive Tell or Jimmy Morrison unless these players are especially popular in your city. Your catch lines and selling talk should dwell on the mystery part of the story. Let your catch lines be introductory to your selling talk, calling attention to it, rather than trying to sell the picture, and in your selling talk mention the crimes which were committed, the fact that a number of people could be suspected. There is also a lead in the apparent existence of a ghost in Blackburn coming back into the picture after being supposedly dead. It might be well to inquire in not too blunt a manner if your patrons believe in ghosts, or a spiritual world, especially the latter since at this time there is considerable talk about the occult world, etc.

We would buy large space for all displays where a descriptive cut was used. For newspaper stories which might be put over in a tie-up there is the local haunted house and abandoned rooms which are good for articles if properly written. The "haunted room" stories will arouse interest and get your attraction attention in a lot of places which could not be reached by display advertising.

USE OF ACCESSORIES

The use of 24-sheet stands placed in good locations, especially where working girls pass is strongly recommended. Cut-outs from six and three sheets can be made into attractive window and lobby display aids. Slides, window cards, tack cards and heralds will be especially good for this picture.

PROGRAM READERS

Who killed Silas Blackburn, the wealthy old recluse who lived alone with his ward Katherine and the one family servant? That is the problem that is finally solved in "Love Without Question," the seven-reel special feature which has been booked for showing at this theatre beginning —— —— —. The old man retired in the "abondoned room" so called since three generations of Blackburns had met sudden death in it. In the morning he was found with a small wound at the base of his brain. Who could and who had reason to murder him? His grandson or beautiful ward, both of whom had been cut off in the drawing of his latest will? The old servant who might hold some secret grudge? Some unknown person who had planned revenge? The supposedly friend of the family whose past was a dark mystery? The actress who evidenced such an interest in the dissolute grandson? All these persons might have killed the old man as he slept. Some of them knew more than they were telling, that was evident. But who is the guilty person?

That is the story of "Love Without Question," an absorbing mystery picture adapted from C. Wadsworth Camps's popular novel, "The Abandoned Room."

The star of this picture is popular Olive Tell, and her support includes James Morrison, Ivo Davison and other well known players.

ADVANCE REVIEWS

"Love Without Question," a seven-reel mystery photodrama playing at the ———— —theatre for a ———.... days engagement proved to be an interesting and well produced picture, equal in merit to the best of feature pictures of its type. The plot revolves about the committing of two crimes and the solving of the mystery of who is guilty of the murders.

Olive Tell in the leading role appears to excellent advantage. She is given opportunity for some fine dramatic work the performance of which is faultless and also her beauty makes a fine impression. James Morrison, one of the best known leading men in pictures appears opposite Miss Tell. The balance of the cast is more than adequate. The picture is in seven reels, was produced by the Jans Pictures, Inc., with B. A. Rolfe directing. The production was adapted from C. Wadsworth Camp's well known novel, "The Abandoned Room."

Mystery stories usually make fine screen entertainment and "Love Without Question," a seven-reel drama from the studios of the Jans Pictures, Inc., with Olive Tell in the starring role, and the attraction at the ———— theatre, is no exception.

The picture is a well produced melodrama principally concerned in showing in a logical manner how two persons were mysteriously murdered in the "abandoned room" of the Blackburn home; why Silas Blackburn, after being supposedly dead and buried, is found sitting in his favorite arm chair, and the reason for the old man's committing suicide when an actress whom the audience does not know he had ever seen, calls on him.

The production has been adapted from C. Wadsworth Camp's well known novel, "The Abandoned Room." Miss Tell gives a wonderfully expressive performance as the heroine, and James Morrison is ideal in the role of the grandson and Miss Tell's lover. The balance of the cast is exceptionally capable and well balanced. B. A. Rolfe directed and is responsible for a fine continuity that builds well to the picture's climaxes. The production has suspense and action two of the prime requisites for success in a production of this type. It can be recommended to theatre goers who enjoy the mystery melodramatic picture.

Jans and His Big Plans

THE Jans Pictures, Inc., despite the fact that it began its career as a producing organization only last December, has already become a factor of power in the state rights field of the motion picture industry. Its first production to be released on the independent market, "Love Without Question," starring Olive Tell, has met with an unusual measure of success, it is stated; and a forthcoming release, titled "Madonnas and Men," with an all-star cast is expected to achieve even greater success. Regarding the latter picture, Herman F. Jans, president of the Jans Pictures Corporation, was very enthusiastic in describing the results that had been secured. He predicts that "Madonnas and Men" will prove one of the greatest hits of the season.

Herman F. Jans Fred C. Backer

The Jans Pictures organization began the actual work of producing on December 15, 1919. Since then it has completed four pictures, three of which have been starring vehicles for Olive Tell. The first, entitled "Love Without Question," was released March 13. The second, "The Woman's Business," is now in the cutting stage, and will be given a trade showing in the near future. The third, "Wings of Pride," is also awaiting the finishing touches. The last scenes for "Madonnas and Men" were taken this week, thus completing the fourth feature turned out by Jans Picture since its inception four months ago.

"Love Without Question" was given its first public showing on Wednesday morning, March 24, at the Strand theatre, New York. The trade-press reviews were uniformly favorable, and the unusually heavy bookings that have been registered since for this production further testify to favorable impression made upon the trade. Fred E. Backer, general sales manager, declares that within six weeks after the date of release this picture's territorial rights have been sold for the entire world, except for eleven per cent of the United States territory. "This," says Mr. Backer, "marks a new record for rapid selling of territorial rights on a state rights production."

The heavy exploitation put behind "Love Without Question" has done much to bring this picture before the public. The book has been syndicated and has appeared serially in some of the larger dailies in different cities of the country. The screen version is an adaptation of the novel, "The Abandoned Room," by C. Wadsworth Camp. The story is of the mystery type, centering around the murder of Silas Blackburn, a wealthy recluse. The consequences arising from the crime, imperiling the innocent along with the guilty, effectively sustain the interest throughout. Olive Tell plays the part of the adopted daughter of the recluse. James W. Morrison has the opposite role, taking the part of Robert Blackburn, son of the victim in the mysterious tragedy. The other members of the cast include Mario Marjaroni, Ivo Dawson, Charles Mackay, Gordon Hamilton, Peggy Parr, George S. Stevens and Floyd Buckley. B. A. Rolfe directed the production.

The second Olive Tell starring vehicle, "A Woman's Business," which is to be given its first showing in the near future, was adapted from Charles Belmont Davis' popular novel, "Nothing a Year." Besides Miss Tell, the following actors are included in the cast: Edmund Lowe, Donald Hall, Lucille Lee Stewart, Warner Richmond, Annette Bade and Stanley Walpole. Exploitation of special character is being planned for this second Olive Tell release. According to a recent statement from the Jans Pictures headquarters, much is to be made of the title. It is stated that the elaborate press-book in preparation will explain carefully various ways in which the title can be used attractively. Special attention, says the Jans statement, will be given to the matter of tie-ups with merchants, organizations and clubs. The production is said to contain unusual possibilities for co-operative campaigns with local shops dealing in millinery, lingerie and other women's garments.

Concerning the third of Olive Tell's series, "Wings of Pride," no formal statement as to the story or cast has been issued by the Jans Pictures as yet, except that work on the production has been practically completed. "Madonnas and Men" is described as being "a tremendous epic of womanhood and the age-old conflict of the sexes." The story is by Carey Wilson and Edmund Goulding, and the continuity was written by Violet Clark. The picture depicts the parallelism of ancient and modern phases of life in their treatment of womanhood. Rome of the Caesars with all its pomp and cruelty is presented in the opening scenes, and the story next takes us up to our own day and unfolds for us the typical night-life of a great American city. The opportunity for massive sets and gorgeous scenic effects —the scenes in the amphitheatre, the lion's den, the emperor's palace, the cabaret views—are said to have been taken advantage of to the fullest extent, neither effort or money being limited, it is said, to secure spectacles of power and beauty. The result, according to the Jans officials, is a picture of such lavish production that it is bound to prove a sensation. About ten weeks were occupied in actually "shooting" "Madonnas and Men."

The cast of "Madonnas and Men" is of an all-star character, the aim being to present a well-balanced array of dramatic talent rather than to concentrate attention on one or two members. Edmond Lowe, who has the role opposite Leonora Ulric in the Belasco success, "The Son-Daughter," plays the part of the emperor's son, rebelling against the cruelty and licentiousness of the era, and later assumes the role of a modern financier's son in which he again combats the present-day forms of moral degradation. Evans Burrough Fontaine is also cast for an important part. Miss Fontaine has already won much favor by her part in Ed Wynn's Carnival. Raye Dean is cast in the role of the victim of a half-demented millionaire, who is loved and saved by the financier's son, played, as explained previously, by Mr. Lowe. Miss Dean has been playing an ingenue role in "Friendly Enemies." Fair Binney, sister of Constance Binney, Anders Randolf and Gustav Von Seiffertitz are also included in the cast.

With the completion of "Madonnas and Men," the final scenes of which were taken last Sunday, the Jans Pictures Corporation will cease production activities for about six weeks. This period of inactivity will be for the purpose of allowing the releasing program for the pictures already finished to catch up with the production. Speaking of release dates and a set production schedule, Mr. Jans declared himself opposed to both these practices. He said that he did not intend to establish any arbitrary dates for the release of his pictures and then compel his producing forces to rush the production so as to have the picture ready upon the date agreed. "It is my plan," said Mr. Jans, "to spend all the time necessary upon a single picture to make it a perfect production. I am limiting myself to no set schedule for the year. I find that the market wants big spectacular features, and I shall supply this demand, taking all the time required to perfect each picture in all its places. We are under no contract to furnish future productions at a definite rate. We will present our pictures to the exhibitors, note their effect and regulate our producing activities and policies accordingly."

The Jans Pictures, Inc., have been producing at the old Peerless Studios at Fort Lee, N. J., where B. A. Rolfe directed the three Olive Tell's vehicles as well as "Madonnas and Men." Mr. Rolfe has been actively in charge of all the producing activities for the Jans Pictures at Fort Lee.

Mr. Jans recently toured all the Western key cities in behalf of the productions to be released by his concern. He returned to New York about three weeks ago, having secured many contracts for the current Jans release, "Love Without Question," and the assurance that his second release would be booked as widely as the first. Fred Backer also toured the Southern key cities in the interests of the Jans pictures, and upon his return reported satisfactory negotiations completed for both "Love Without Question" and "A Woman's Business." The president of the Jans pictures was especially enthusiastic over the heavy bookings for his first release and the rapidity with which territories had been sold on this production. He further declared that practically all the buyers of "Love Without Question" had arranged to take the next release, "A Woman's Business."

Mr. Jans also stated that his organization held options on several big stories. This announcement led Mr. Jans to speak of the relative values of story, star, cast and production in the making of a successful picture. Mr. Jans expressed himself with a note of earnestness and finality on this topic. He said:

"I believe first of all in an interesting story, backed by ample production and interpreted by a cast showing a well-balanced array of talent rather than a single figure to be singled out for special notice. A good story to begin with, and we have already opened negotiations for several big stories. And spectacular production. The market wants that type of picture, and we are going to specialize in them to supply the demand. As for the cast, I believe in having actors and actresses that are known for their ability, that have real talent and are good types. That is the sort of cast that we intend to play in our pictures. There will be no featured favorite. I do not believe in the star system. The biggest successes of the past year like 'The Miracle Man' have been of the all-star cast variety, and I intend to play the all-star cast rather than the single star in all of my future productions."

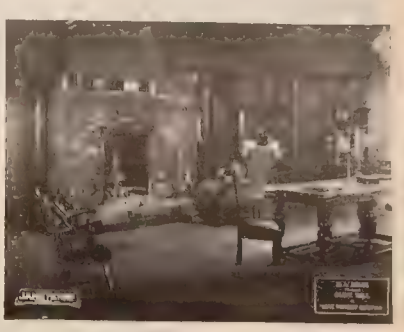
Is it passion that makes a woman Love Without Question

"Love Without Question"

THE name of Olive Tell is known the country over as that of a real artiste. The fame of B. A. Rolfe as a director is known wherever motion pictures are shown as that of a producer of reel successes. C Wadsworth Camp's great novel "The Abandoned Room" has been read wherever books are sold.

SUCH advance advertising is of untold value to the exhibitor.



AN elaborately produced feature photo-drama made with the idea of providing exhibitors with an extraordinary attraction. It provides the theatre owner with a super-feature, a real special attraction.

Exchanges Which Handle "Love Without Question"

Top row—M. J. Frisch, manager Greater Productions Company, Des Moines, Iowa; Ben Blumenthal, president Export and Import Film Company, New York; Harry H. Green, treasurer Royal Pictures, Inc., Philadelphia; W. G. Underwood, president Specialty Film Company, Dallas, Texas. Center—Sam Zierler, president Commonwealth Film Corporation, New York, and George C. Easter, president Baltimore State Right Company, Baltimore, Md.

Bottom row—B. L. Hadfield, general manager Wisconsin Film Corporation, Milwaukee; Leon D. Netter, president Masterpiece Pictures Company, Cleveland; Maurice M. Broskie, general manager N. J. Rolfe Film Company, New York; Jay J. Allen, secretary and treasurer Monarch Film Company, Ltd., Toronto, Canada

Royal Pictures, Inc., of 1220 Vine St., Philadelphia, Pa., controlling east Pennsylvania and southern New Jersey, is under the direction of J. Emanuel, David Segal and Harry Green. Mr. Green is a prominent exhibitor and controls a circuit of theatres in eastern Pennsylvania.

Jules and J. J. Allen, of Toronto, who control the Monarch Film Co., Ltd., throughout Canada, have purchased the entire series of Olive Tell productions.

Commonwealth Film Corp., of 1,600 Broadway, N. Y. C., is controlled by Sam Zeirler, president, and their territory consists of the entire State of New York. He started in business with the Equity Picture, featuring Clara Kimball Young, and handles nothing but big productions. Minter, United Amusement, Detroit, Michigan, with James M. Minter as president, witnessed the screening of the picture in York and immediately purchased it for the State of Michigan.

Greater Stars Production, Inc., with Floyd Brockwell and Clyde Elliott control Illinois and Indiana. They are two energetic exchange men, and are associated with L. & T. who are the leading exhibitors of Chicago. They expect to release this production on or about May 16, and already have several downtown runs booked.

Masterpiece Pictures Co., control the territory of Ohio and Kentucky, and have as their president Leon D. Nette. They have an exchange in the Standard theatre building, of Cleveland; also the Film Exchange building, of Cincinnati. Their first runs in Toledo, Cleveland, Akron and Cincinnati are already signed up.

Greater Productions Company, located at 100 E. Locust street, Des Moines, Iowa, controls the States of Iowa and Nebraska. N. J. Frisch is manager. It is a new company, sanctioned by A. H. Blank, of the Blank Enterprises. Their first runs have been obtained in downtown houses of both Des Moines and Omaha.

Wisconsin Film Corp., controls both this exchange located in the Toy building, Milwaukee, as well as the First Film Co., of Minneapolis. They handle nothing but big productions, which include Equity's Clara Kimball Young Series. When H. F. Jans, president of the Jans Pictures, Inc., and F. E. Backer, general sales manager, visited Chicago they telephoned B. L. Hadfield, general manager of the company to come to Chicago in order to witness the screening. When he arrived at the Greater Stars Productions, Inc., Chicago office at three o'clock, he signed the contracts and was able to make the five o'clock train back to Milwaukee without any trouble. We claim this to be a record sale.

N. J. Rolfe Film Co., of 729 Seventh Ave., controls northern New Jersey. M. M. Broskie, general manager of the exchange, has already booked his first runs in a number of cities throughout New Jersey, which includes the Fabian Circuit, who control the First Nat. for New Jersey, as well as Proctor's and the Goodwin theatre of Newark, and it looks as if they are going to break all records of their exchange with this picture.

First National Exhibitors Exchange, of 412 Ferry street, Pittsburgh, Pa., control western Pennsylvania and West Virginia. When Mr. Jans, president of Jans Pictures, Inc., and F. E. Backer, general sales manager, got into Pittsburgh to screen their production for Jos. Skirbool, general branch manager of the above company, it was ten o'clock, and at twelve o'clock they had signed contracts and were on a train to Cleveland.

Hatch Photo Play Service, 42 Melrose street, Boston, Mass., controls the New England States. Chas. L. Hatch is president and a prominent exhibitor in Boston. He visited New York with his general manager, H. M. Davis and John H. Foy, manager of the Hatch theatre, and after witnessing the screening of "Love Without Question" immediately bought same for their territory.

Specialty Film Co., Inc., 107 S. St. Paul street, Dallas, Texas, controls Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas. W. G. Underwood is president and is one of the hustling exchange men of Texas. After witnessing the screening of "Love Without Question" in New York, Mr. Underwood immediately booked the series of Olive Tell productions, and has been successful in placing the picture in a number of houses throughout the territory controlled by the S. A. Lynch Ent.

Export & Import Film Co., Inc., 729 Seventh Ave., N. Y. C., control the foreign rights exclusive of Canada on the Olive Tell series. They have already sold a number of countries the series. They have also secured the foreign rights on "Madonnas and Men," the super special being made by the Jans Pictures, Inc., Benjamin Blumenthal is president and has associated with him Mr. Auerbach.

Baltimore State Rights Film Co., Inc., controls the territory of Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia. Geo. C. Easter is president of the Exchange and is one of the young energetic hustling exchange men of the South. They own their own building at No. 420 E. Lexington street, Baltimore, Md., which is the only up to date building in the territory, and they rent offices to all the prominent exchanges.

duction is now under way by Director Harry Revier. The part of "Jack," the son of Tarzan, will be taken by K. C. Searle, recently seen in DeMille's "Male and Female." P. Dempsey Tabler will be seen as Tarzan, the father of Jack, and Karla Schram, who played the role of Jane Porter in "The Return of Tarzan," has been cast for the same part in the serial. Kenneth Nordyke will be seen as Jack at the age of fifteen, and the girl role will be taken by May Garaci for the child, and Kathleen Kay will play the role in later sequences when the girl reaches the age of twenty. Howard Johnson, Louis King, H. W. Kearley, Eddie DeComa and Jack Rose make up the cast.

Robin Williamson is directing the seventh "Smiling" Bill Jones comedy for Marion H. Kohn Productions. In this Jones will be seen as a ladies' tailor who falls for the wiles of his customers. The story was written by Harry Wulze.

The production of the two reel Polly Moran slapstick titled "Pearls in Peril" is nearing completion, and will be the last of this character of pictures to be made, as Miss Moran is to return to the "Sheriff Nell" role. The present subject is from the pen of L. V. Jefferson, and was directed by Ward Hayes.

Harvey Gates has been engaged to write a two reel western comedy drama for Grace Cunard which will be put in production shortly.

According to announcement made by Marion H. Kohn, practically all of the territory for the "Illiterate Digest," by Will Rogers, has been sold.

Mary Pickford and company take a rest between scenes of "Suds," her forthcoming United Artist release

VITAGRAPH

THE extreme activities at the Vitagraph plant have made necessary the addition of a night shift of all technical departments, which working scheme was inaugurated this week. This plan means that delays caused by producing units waiting for settings or properties will be obviated in the future, and much of the noisy work heretofore carried on during the day, can now be done at night, thus preventing annoyance to the companies and adding efficiency to all producing units.

Vola Vale has been selected as leading woman for Earle Williams for "The Purple Hieroglyph," and the story was put in production this week under the direction of Chester Bennett.

The Tom Terris Company filming "The Girl Out of the Sky," adapted from a Gouverneur Morris story, has returned to the studio for interior scenes after filming hydroplane, and many of the exterior scenes at Laguna Beach and Catalina Islands. This special production will require at least another month's work at the studio. Wallace MacDonald and Marguerite De La Motteee are the principals.

Six massive settings covering ten acres of ground are being used by William Duncan in the final episode of "The Silent Avenger" serial. The largest of these is a railroad tunnel 600 feet in length which had to be constructed above ground that it would serve for photographing.

Stephen Smith, Jr., chief camera man of the Vitagraph plant, has worked out some new lighting and double exposure effects which will show bolts of lightning at the tips of a man's finger sustained for long periods instead of short flashes. Other effects show how minute dots on the film, invisible to the eye, are located. These effects will be used in the Joe Ryan-Jean Paige serial which is spoken of as having a triple X-ray plot.

The Antonio Moreno Company, including Pauline Curley as leading woman, and directed by Webster Cullison, is now working at San Pedro making airplane scenes after a week at Catalina Islands.

"The Stage Hand" is the title selected for the next Semon comedy now in the making, and at the present time the company is working on a complete theatre stage at the studio built to fit the needs of this story, which shows the life and happenings in a three-a-day burlesque vaudeville house.

James Aubrey has been placed under contract for another year by Vitagraph and will continue as featured comedian in Big V Comdies. Jess Robbins is directing Aubrey at the present time.

BRUNTON

THE work of keeping apace with the twelve production units working at the Robert Brunton studios, is proving a strenuous task which requires a constant improvement for the big plant which now has equipment of every kind necessary for the successful and economic production work of twelve filming units. Plans made during the past week, which are now being carried out, provide for increasing the capacity of the Brunton lumber mill to double its present output. This will enable more speedy construction of settings and all wooden properties.

Early this week the foundation was laid for the fourth office building, which in size will be the same as the three previously built. Each of these has ample space, rooms and furnishings for the executive staffs of twelve producing units. Another improvement completed is a new concrete garage, additional scene docks and other minor improvements.

The last Robert Brunton production, starring J. Warren Kerrigan, title "The Coast of Opportunity," was finished this week by Director Ernest Warde for W. W. Hodkinson distribution. The story is adapted from the Paige Phillips novel, and has a Mexican locale. Fritzi Brunette plays the lead opposite Kerrigan. With the completion of this subject Kerrigan completes his contract for ten productions with Robert Brunton.

Two Mayflower organizations are at work. Sidney Franklin is making the final scenes for the Sylvia Breamer subject titled "Athalie," adapted from the Robert W. Chambers novel, and Alan Dwan has put his last Mayflower picture in production. Mary Thurman is to be featured in the latter. Other members of the cast will be selected during the week, and production is to be started in a few days.

Final editing of "The Scoffer," made by Alan Dwan and featuring Mary Thurman and James Kirkwood, has been completed, and negative and positive prints were shipped to New York this week.

The East Indian picture, "The Palace of Darkened Windows," which is to be a special for the National Picture Theatres, is being finished this week by Director Henry Kolker. The cast for this includes Claire Anderson, Arthur Carewe, Jay Balesco, Nicholous Duneau, Gerald Praing, Christine Mayo, Virginia True Boardman and Virginia Colwell.

Production work is continuing on the Olive Thomas production, "Jennie," and the subject starring Owen Moore, "Stop That Man."

Selznick Production Manager Harry Rapp gave a showing for members of "The Invisible Divorce" cast, the Selznick producing organization and their friends at the Windsor theatre, Los Angeles, Friday, April 30th, preceding the shipment of this production to New York.

METRO

FOLLOWING the completion of the final scenes for "The Price of Redemption," being made this week, Bert Lytell will leave for New York, where he expects to work in several productions at the eastern Metro studios, and it is very probable that this Metro star will appear in one or more Broadway productions produced by the Metro Company on the stage in connection with film productions of the same play. No definite decision has been reached on this plan, but it was talked over at length by Marcus Loew, President Richard Rowland and Lytell when the two executives were on the coast recently.

Following the completion of the Winchell Smith production, "The Sap-Head," Herbert Blache will go to New York to produce for Metro.

Plans now provide that the Winchell Smith production, which is featuring Buster Keaton, will be completed within a week, and work will then be started on the first Metro comedy featuring Keaton. Director Eddie Cline is now at work preparing script and settings and will give his personal attention to the direction of this first Keaton picture.

Work was started May 6th on the filming of the third Drury Lane melodrama, "Hearts Are Trumps," under the direction of Rex Ingram. The working script for this was written by June Mathis, and the cast selected includes Francelia Billington, Winter Hall, Frank Brownlee, Joseph Kilgour, Normand Kennedy, Howard Crampton and Edward Connelly.

Marc Robbins has been added to the Screen Classics scenario department following similar affiliation with the west coast Fox studio and seven years' identification with the film industry, for the first few years as an actor.

Elliott Clawson has completed the producing script for a northwestern story titled "Big Game," which is to be produced with an all star cast.

The Alice Lake Company, being directed by Edmund Mortimer, is again at the studio working on interior scenes for "The Misfit Wife" from the Hearn play, "The Outsider," following a week on locations in the Santa Monica mountains.

The Shurtleff-Metro company, filming the Jack London story, "The Mutiny," is back at the studio after two weeks aboard ship between San Francisco and Los Angeles. Edward Sloman is directing.

The opening scenes for Nazimova's next film, "Billions," have been taken and practically all scenes for the subject have been photographed. The delay in taking the few opening scenes was occasioned because of the massive settings required for this. These are laid in a fictitious city of a fictitious Slavic nation and have a pre-war atmosphere. It was necessary to build several blocks of street scenes, and so accurate have been the details that many who have viewed the rushes were surprised to know that the scenes were taken at the Metro plant, they thinking some of the atmosphere scenes might have been taken in a Slavic city. The picture is said to have a swiftly moving action with many comedy touches. Throughout simplicity has been the keynote, and it is believed a plot has been conceived which the theatre patrons will not anticipate the sequences of.

GOLDWYN

THE picturesque Inceville ranch is serving as an exterior location for the visionary section of the Mary Roberts Rinehart story, "Empire Builders," where the Goldwyn Company has erected a village which will be populated by Aborigines which will serve to make that section of "Empire Builders" described in the book as the island where an empire is founded. F. Mason Hopper, who is directing this picture, will have several hundred extra people in these scenes.

Director Harry Beaumont has finished the filming of the Tom Moore "Officer 666" production, and plans to start the making of "Stop Thief!" adapted from the stage play early next week. Hazel Deely, known as "the honey girl of the screen," who played the part of "Honey" in the Bryant Washburn Skinner pictures for Essanay, has been engaged to play opposite Moore in this picture. The remainder of the cast has not been named.

The Mabel Normand Company, directed by Victor Schertzinger, is at San Francisco making bay, dock and ocean scenes, and Director Al Green is leaving this week with the Jack Pickford Company for a number of scenes for "The Man Who Had Everything." The parking ordinance recently enforced in Los Angeles has caused a change in the appearance of Los Angeles streets, and as the script calls for a great number of automobiles the Goldwyn Company decided to send the troupe to San Francisco for these pictures.

The Goldwyn Company has leased a schooner for making the sea scenes of the Ben Aimes Williams story, "The Black Pawl," which will feature Russell Simpson in the title role.

Vice-President Abraham Lehr, who serves as general manager of the Goldwyn producing studios, left for New York May 7th on a short business trip.

F. P.-LASKY

ANNOUNCEMENT of a number of productions that are shortly to be made at the Famous Players-Lasky studio was made this week, and concerns the activities of four of the directors.

Roscoe Arbuckle, who is now working in the final scenes for "The Life of the Party," under the direction of Joseph Henebery, is next to play in "The Traveling Salesman."

The Cinthia Stockley play, "Rosanne Ozanne," has been adapted for the screen by Mary H. O'Connor, and will be directed by Tom Forman as a starring vehicle for Ethel Clayton. Miss Clayton is now working in "The City Sparrow," under the direction of Sam Wood, with a cast that includes Walter Hiers, Clyde Fillmore, Lillian Leighton, Sylvia Ashton, Robert Brougher and others.

The Cosmo Hamilton story, "His Friend and His Wife," is to be the next play filmed by William C. De Mille. Mr. DeMille is now making the final scenes for "Conrad in Quest of His Youth," and this week marked the introduction of the two leading women, Kathleen Williams and Margaret Loomis, in this production. Tom Meighan, who is playing the name role in this production, will leave for New York as soon as William D. Taylor is making the final scenes for "The Boy," and everything will be in readiness for the filming of "The Furnace," by Pan, which has been adapted for the screen by Julia Crawford Ivers.

Elmer Harris has the continuity ready for "The Old Homestead," which is to be filmed by George Melford, and production work will be started as soon as Milton Sills, who is now ill, recovers suciently to resume work.

Cecil B. DeMille is expected home from a short business trip to New York, at which time his recently made production will be ready for final review. The title, "Something to Think About,' is to be the permanent name of this production.

J. D. HAMPTON

PAUL SCARDON has been engaged by Jesse D. Hampton to direct a series of features starring Blanche Sweet, and the first of these will be the Kenneth B. Clark story, "Port o' Caprice." Following this the Marah Ellis Ryan, "The Girl Montana" will be filmed. The first Scardon directed picture will have Albert Roscoe as leading man, and one of the important character parts will be taken by Edwin Stevens. Director Scardon is one of the oldest of the film industry, he having become a director in 1913, following twenty years as an actor on the speaking stage. His most recent work was with the Goldwyn Company.

Henry King is to be seen in the Blanche Sweet subject, "Leona Goes a Hunting," which has just been completed, as leading man, and, in addition to working before the camera, he served as director and hydroplane pilot during the making of this film. Many of the scenes for the subject are taken in a hydroplane, and script requires that King, the leading man, steer the naval ship. King will be remembered as featured leading man in many films made by the Lubin and other companies in the years of 1913, 1914 and 1915, but for the past three years he has been given all of his time to the direction of films. Other players in the subject are Jay Belasco, Frank Leigh, Tom Jefferson, Mayme Kelso, Harry Lorraine and Jean Acker.

Another Jesse D. Hampton unit producing the Robert Thornby special subject is working aboard ship between San Francisco and Los Angeles for the sea scenes of the Frederick Isham story of San Francisco and the sea, titled "Half a Chance." Lillian Hall is playing opposite Mahlon Hamilton in this, and other important players are Sidney Ainsworth, John Gough and little Mary MacAllister.

Ex-Governor's Daughter to Write Continuity

Ethel Gillette, daughter of ex-Governor James N. Gillette of California, has been added to the continuity staff of the Anita Stewart Productions and Chaplin-Mayer Pictures Company.

Maurice Campbell to Direct for Famous

Maurice Campbell, well-known as a stage producer, has been engaged by Famous Players-Lasky as a director. The following statement, regarding the new director, has been issued by Famous Players:

"Although the new director has had over twenty years of stage experience, he felt that he needed a thorough grounding in motion picture technique before entering actively into the work. He has spent the last six months as assistant to Cecil B. De Mille, Donald Crisp, and other well-known film makers, learning the business from the ground up. Combined with his acknowledged understanding of dramatic values, Major Campbell's new practical training makes him ready for production of motion pictures."

Maurice Campbell has been assigned to produce "Burglar Proof," a new Paramount-Artcraft comedy, featuring Bryant Washburn.

Hundreds of Extras In Metro Battle Scenes

With members of his company and more than 800 extra people, Bert Lytell is at Chatsworth, Cal., where scenes for the mammoth battle spectacle of "The Price of Redemption" are being filmed. The mountainous region about Chatsworth offers an ideal location for the battle scenes for Mr. Lytell's new Metro special production.

"Bill" Rogers in his newest Goldwyn picture, "Jes' Call Me Jim"

Harley Knoles and the Dorothy Dalton company have returned after a three-weeks' trip to Charleston, S. C., where the company have been working on "locations" for the forthcoming production, titled "This Woman—This Man" to be released by Famous Players-Lasky. Exquisite shots of the famous Magnolia Gardens have been secured, it is stated, despite almost continuous rainy weather. An accident scene is to be taken in New York, and this will mark the completion of the picture.

Lobby and Two Auditorium Views of the Regent, Flint, Michigan

The Regent Theatre, Flint, Michigan

Located in the Automobile District

An Attractive Theatre of Spanish Design

IN Flint, Mich., there has just been opened a picture playhouse that is the show place of that fast growing automobile town. It is W. S. Butterfield's Regent theatre, a roomy, commodious and artistic amusement place seating 1,800.

Already controlling four downtown theatres, Mr. Butterfield in selecting the site for the Regent decided to build on North Saginaw street and Louisa, eight blocks north of the principal business intersection of the city. Although on the route to the immense Buick plant to the casual observer it seemed an odd location for a first run Paramount-First National house in a city of 90,000. Business, however, since the theatre's opening, March 10, has been extremely big.

The Regent theatre represents a total investment of approximately $200,000. John Eberson, of Chicago, who is now building the half-million-dollar Butterfield theatre at Lansing, Mich., was the architect in charge of the Flint Regent.

The auditorium is 80 feet in width by 170 deep, will seat 1,600 on the main floor. A mezzanine floor approached by marble stairways from the centre of the foyer, will seat 200. Here brass railings divide individual loges, each with a seating capacity of eight persons.

The architect employed the Andalusian Spanish motif in construction and interior decorations. As a result there are bright trimmings about the proscenium arch, the latter being supported by marble columns of warm coloring. The foyer represents the sunny walk of a typical Spanish patio. The adobe effect is further heightened by wide spreading archways. A gaily colored fountain is half hidden in a slight recess in the centre of the foyer. Amber and blue lights in fixtures of artistic design soften the many colors so that they blend into a harmonious whole.

The lobby, 60 by 22, is finished in marble, tile and walnut, with upper portion of the walls and ceiling in keeping with the interior decorations. Twenty candelabra, containing from three to six lights each are used for lobby illumination. Exceptionally adequate provisions were made for advance display and it is possible to place ten complete sets of photos of coming attractions in the racks along the side walls.

The projection room is located in the rear of the mezzanine floor. It is 14x20 in size and has both outside and roof ventilation. It is completely equipped with Powers machines, spot light and all accessories. The Herter Trans Verter used is the largest that has been made by that company and the projection is said to be equal to any in the country. To provide for any emergency an additional transverter, slightly smaller in size, was purchased. In the event of any accident to the large machine the current can be cut over to the smaller and the show proceed without delay. The projection distance is 160 feet at almost direct angle. A Minuse screen 17½ feet by 22½ feet gives a picture somewhat larger than is ordinarily shown.

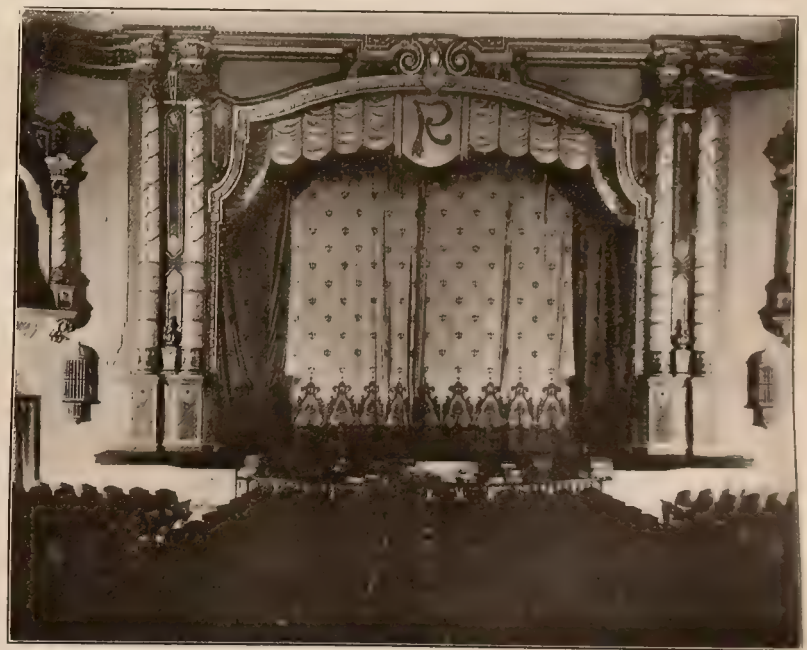
Architect	John Eberson

The blower system is utilized for both heating and cooling. Located, as it is on a corner, the Regent is ideally equipped with exits. Ten double doors at the rear, front and on the street side permit the emptying of the house in a very short space of time.

The box office at the front of the lobby is equipped with a National Ticket Registering machine. Intercommunicating phones connect all departments of the playhouse.



An ornate and effective electric sign manufactured by Shumate and Chanopal, Lima, Ohio, is employed. Almost two thousand colored lamps are used in the permanent portion of the sign. Below this is a four line, interchangeable letter, attraction announcement space. The sign is by far the largest in Flint.

Flood lights set on ornamental standards are located at the right and left of the orchestra pit. These lights and the spot lamp are utilized during the orchestral overture, harp specialties and other musical interludes.

Special attention is given to the playing of pictures by an orchestra of eighteen. Every detail of the feature, comedy and news weekly is carefully rehearsed in advance. As a result the opening performances are almost as well handled as the closing.

John Prescott is resident manager of the theatre. Mr. Prescott is a showman of many years' experience. In the early days of the picture industry he directed one-reel westerns, has had charge of stock companies in several large cities and been company manager of such well known stars as Robert Edeson and Elsie Ferguson. Edward C. Beatty, general manager of the Butterfield circuit, attends to all booking. Arthur A. Frudenfeld the circuit's general press representative is in charge of exploitation.

W. S. Butterfield now controls twenty theatres, all of them with one exception—the Regent, Lima, Ohio—being located in the State of Michigan.

The Latest in Light Control for Motion Picture Studios

Remote Control System as Installed at International Proves Success

ABOUT a year ago the International Film Company took over an old dance hall at 128th street and Second avenue, New York City, for a studio. The building was without electrical facilities and incoming power lines. But this instead of being a handicap proved to be the nucleus for a wonderfully complete lighting system, equal to or better than that of any studio then existing.

The International studio is 200 feet long and 60 feet wide with an unusually high roof. Its physical characteristics made it especially suitable as a housing for a studio.

When the studio was first taken over, Mr. William Sistrum was placed in charge of the structure. He is known to practically every studio man in the country. He it was who worked out the technical equipment for Universal City when that institution because of its extensiveness was known as one of the world's wonders. He is the type of man who is never content with the present development of an idea or satisfied with the temporary success of a device. He is continually looking ahead in an endeavor to better things, to produce results more efficiently and to further the progress of the art and industry. His characteristics were a fortunate asset in the case of the International, since it was through him that the improvements in studio lighting were brought about.

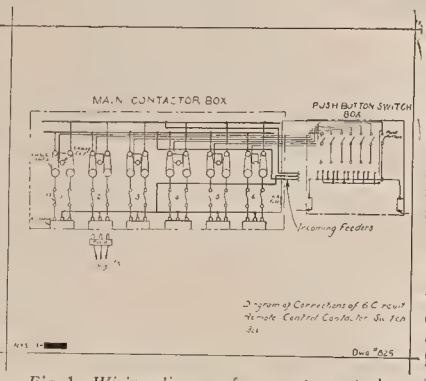

Fig. 1—Wiring diagram for remote control

At about that time there came to Mr. Sistrum's notice an account of an advanced method of studio lighting control worked out by Mr. H. E. O'Brien, studio expert for the Westinghouse Company on the west coast. Through its principles of action it was called "the remote control system."

To those who are not acquainted with studios and their equipment a few words about the older control systems may with advantage be added.

Probably, if traced far enough back, it would be found that the first studio electrician was an old theatrical stage electrician. He thought and talked in terms of "stage cable." When a new light unit or a bank of lights were needed, a few feet of stage cable was laid from the switchboard or from a stage outlet to the light or lights. A switch on the main switchboard controlled the unit. This was the stage method. So, when the first studio was set up and illuminated it was only natural that similar methods should be used.

Up to within a year, practically all studios have used an adaptation of these methods. Cables were strung or laid from wall pockets to spider box and then to the lights. Wall pockets were controlled through the main switchboards. Normally, this meant an annunciator system with a man at main switchboard or a man at every light.

Such a system, while not seeming so in print, was in reality a cumbersome and unflexible affair. William Sistrum recognized this and strove to improve upon it. The remote control system proved to be the solution. Under this system it is possible for one man standing at one spot to control any and every light on any set. Generally this is done by an electrician, seated beside the director, and having a control station within reach.

Jack Kelley, studio electrician at the International also contributed a number of important features that have been worked into the whole and have helped to make the operation a success.

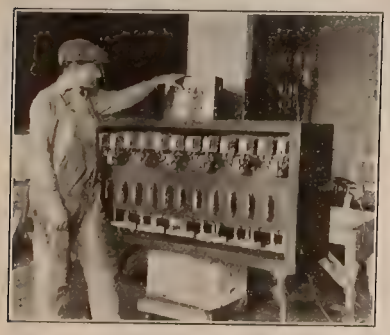

Fig. 3—6 unit contactor box (below) and push button station (above)

Method of operation at the International:

The three-wire Edison circuit comes into the main switchboard which is located on the gallery. On this switchboard is provided a main line switch and a feeder switch for each remote control box, the latter properly safeguarded by fuses.

From this point, the feeders, instead of running down walls to a studio floor switchboard, are supported on overhead bridge work. Each feeder in its conduit stretches from its switch along this bridge work to the contactor box. These boxes have been so arranged about the studio that one or more is easily accessible to every stage wherever they may be placed. At the International Studio the contactor boxes have been symmetrically staggered on either side of the center line of the building, thus covering the studio floor space in all directions.

The contactor box might well be called the heart of the remote control system, for it is here that all connections are made and broken, and being located in an inaccessible place it is imperative that the contactors work on and off with but occasional inspection and adjustment.

Leading fro meach contactor box is a seven conductor flexible cable. This cable drops down to the portable push button station managed by the electrician seated at the director's elbow. From this push button station or series of stations (since all may be connected together) any light or combinations of lights can be controlled by one or more of the push buttons.

Main Switchboard:

This is a standard incoming feeder board located out of the way in a room off the balcony.

Contactor Box:

This is shown diagrammatically in Figs. 1 and 2, and photographically in Fig. 3. At the top are the contactors and directly below them the fuses protecting each set. Each two-pole contactor handles a Kliegl six-way spider box with a total capacity of 250 amperes. Kliegl three-point receptacles and plugs are at the bottom of the contactor box.

The boxes themselves are constructed of ten gage sheet iron with removable top or back according to its location. Either two piece or single piece front doors are provided for purpose of inspection.

The contactors are rated for continuous duty. They are light in weight with self-wiping contact faces.

Tracing out the various circuits in Fig. 1 will show how it is possible to control either one contactor or the entire number of contactors. The single contactors are actuated by any one of the push buttons and after these have been brought into play the whole may be controlled by the master button at the right hand side of the push button station.

Push Button Station:

The push-button station is a small box of sheet metal with a top consisting of a common brass gang plate having openings for thirteen push button switches. There are seven push buttons on the top row and six in the bottom. The Station is carried about by means of a handle at one side.

The push buttons on the top row are numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and "M," the latter standing for "Master." These buttons are the ordinary house type with simple "on" and "off" registrations.

The buttons in the lower row differ in that they are the three way type.

By studying the diagram, Fig. 1, it will be seen that one side of each of the "on" and "off" buttons is connected to binding posts on the outside of the box. These binding posts are numbered to correspond with the push button numbers. The remaining side runs to the middle point of the three way buttons in the lower row.

There are still two points on the three-way switches to be accounted for. One of these points, it will be seen, goes via a common wire to the "off" side of the "Master" button, while the other side connects to a common wire leading to the other side of the same "Master" button.

This method of remote control has had a lengthy try-out at the International studio with complete success. It is probable that several of the studios now under construction by other producing companies will employ the same method to control their lighting effects.

Sixteenth Anniversary of "House of Swaab" Observed Recently

Has Grown From Small Affair to Largest in Pennsylvania

THIS is Mark Swaab's anniversary. For 16 years he has been in the supply business and all of that time in Philadelphia. He is one of the pioneers in the equipment and of the industry. Back in 1904 he first started in business for himself when he opened a store at 338 Spruce Street. The store was a converted dwelling with the show windows made from the front windows of the house. Packing boxes were used for shelves and everything else in the establishment was on the same order. The store took up the first floor while Mr. Swaab and his family took over the second floor as their apartments.

What surprised most of Mr. Swaab's friends was that he started the business with practically no capital and consequently they expected that it would be a matter of but a few weeks or months when a failure could be expected. But Swaab had something else in mind. He believed that if he gave his customers a fair deal all round and treated them in a human manner they would reciprocate by coming back for additional orders. This policy worked out to perfection. Instead of failing, the business grew rapidly and almost before the founder realized it he was forced to seek new quarters with more floor space. This was about the time that the film industry was getting under way and his business reflected in its sales the expanding industry.

He moved to North Eighth Street, where he combined a picture exchange with a supply house. Then realizing further the size of the industry confronting him he organized the Interstate Film Company, which is still in existence and known as one of the leading exchanges in Philadelphia.

The supply business was now well on its way to success, and even though Swaab plied his ability now and then to outside affairs it continued to grow and keep in step with the industry. As a result he again found it necessary to seek new and larger quarters. This time the moving vans took him to 1327 Vine Street, where he has since been located.

Several of the illustrations show the exterior and interior of his present place of business. Although not pretentious in size when compared to a department store layout, nevertheless the amount of business done over these counters mounts up to a respectable figure. Mr. Swaab still sticks to his original policy of treating every customer in such a way that he

The House of Lewis M. Swaab has kept pace with the rapid growth of the motion picture industry for over 16 years—a record to be proud of.

Sixteen years of successful business dealings, constantly on the lookout for better equipment—Equipment to improve the picture—Equipment to bring added profits to the Exhibitor.

This alertness has caused the name of "Swaab" to be considered as a symbol of perfection. To say that Swaab handles the product is to say that the product must be good. This prestige has spread from the buying Exhibitor to the manufacturer of equipment.

Manufacturers recognize the prestige of Swaab. For that reason we are given the first opportunity of adding to our line their latest developments. This preference permits us to select the highest class theatre merchandise on the market.

Exhibitors are saved the annoyance of shopping around for their equipment. They know the House of Swaab carries all the latest developments that are of high quality and mechanically perfect. They know that we stand behind everything sold. They know, too, that the House of Swaab stands for satisfaction and Service at all times.

At the present time Swaab is distributor for a number of world-known makes of equipment. Included in the list is the Simplex Projector, Superlite Screens, Electra and Speer Carbons, Lightning Coin Changer and Fort Wayne Compensares.

Where Swaab opened his first supply store in 1904

Associated with Mr. Swaab is his son, Mark Swaab, and on whom much of the active management of the supply house has fallen, since the elder Swaab spends as much time as possible on the road amongst the trade.

An interesting fact concerning the "House of Swaab" is that the first establishment at 338 Spruce Street was in the same house where the song "Hail Columbia" was written by Joseph Hopkinson, its author.

THEATRE NOTES

C. Y. Yeaker, manager of the Fulton Opera House of Lancaster, Pa., has decided to adopt the policy of playing pictures the first half of each week hereafter.

C. A. White, proprietor of White's theatre, Frackville, Pa., was in Philadelphia last week, calling on the different exchanges.

It is understood that an 1800-seat theatre will be erected in Collinswood, N. J., and that work will be commenced at once. It is also reported that another large theatre will be built in Chester, Pa., at no distant date. Full particulars will be given later.

Floyd Hopkins, the Wilmer & Vincent manager at Harrisburg, states that the firm has purchased the garage building on 13th Street near Dairy 81, which formerly was a movie and that the place will be remodeled and opened in early summer as a classy neighborhood theatre.

Manager Lynch of the Hippodrome, Williamsport, Pa., will carry out alterations this summer which will increase the seating capacity of the theatre considerably.

The Family theatre of Milton, Pa., will soon close for alterations and improvements.

Jake Krause of the Grand theatre, Ephrata, Pa., has bought out his partner and is now the sole owner of the theatre.

Lou Brennerman of the American theatre, Pottsville, Pa., has installed a new $18,000 Hope Jones Organ.

E. G. Ryan of the Peoples theatre, Georgetown, Del., will close the first of May and tear down the old building and erect a 600-seat house on the site. Theatre to be 33 feet by 88 feet. He was in Phil-

The Herity Brothers, who are erecting a moving picture theatre at 345 North 6th Street, Allentown, Pa., state that a pipe organ will be installed in the theatre when completed but thus far are undecided as to what make will be installed. Work is being pushed rapidly but it will take several weeks to complete the job.

Under the able management of Dr. Stuckert the business in the New Strand Theatre at Allentown has increased to such an extent the theatre will be enlarged, giving an additional seating capacity of 400 chairs.

A pipe organ will be installed in the National Theater in Wilmington, Del. This is a modern theatre, built especially for the colored people, and is owned and controlled by colored people, there being about 1200 colored people in the city.

B. Lubin, of the Lubin Amusement Co., of Vineland, N. J., reports that their Grand Opera House which is being erected for road shows and movies will be completed and ready to open in about two months.

Mr. Lubin was in Philadelphia March 29th and stated plans were being drawn for a 1000-seat theatre which they will call "Globe." Work will start on this theatre at an early date. The Opera House will seat 1500.

W. A. Cohn, manager of the Lincoln Theatre, 20th Street and Jefferson Avenue, Newport News, Va., was in Philadelphia on the 29th of March looking after a new stage setting and other equipment for the theatre which was destroyed by fire on March 15th. The fire originated in a junk shop adjoining the theatre and destroyed a part of the roof and stage of the theatre. It occurred at 8 o'clock in the evening and the theatre was filled with people. On account of numerous exits the theatre was emptied in a very few minutes without accident or any undue excitement.

Development of the Mazda Lamp for Projection Purposes

A Series of Interest to All Projectionists

This is the fourth installment of an exhaustive article on the Mazda Lamp and its application to Projection. The author is H. Freeman Barnes, which is proof enough that the data is authoritative.

With Mazda lamp projection several new ideas must be incorporated in the housings.

First, the housings must have sufficient ventilation to insure the lamp against over-heating. Over-heating of the Mazda lamp is a serious proposition. The bulb, which is made of glass, cannot stand an indefinitely high temperature. The housing chosen should be scientifically designed to provide for adequate ventilation.

Sufficient ventilation also keeps a mirror cool. It might be noted here that mirrors will, as they are continually used, depreciate in reflecting value. The rate of depreciation is dependent to a large extent upon the temperature of the mirror. A large mirror, therefore, while not reflecting any more light than a smaller one, will run cooler and stand up better in service. Where proper ventilation is supplied or a 5 inch diameter mirror is adequate.

The larger the mirror the larger the radiating surface and consequently the cooler it will run. A small mirror must reflect just as much light and just as much heat as a large one. But with a smaller surface the heat cannot be radiated as rapidly.

Second, means must be provided for the quick replacement of lamps should one burn out while the picture is being projected. With an arc the length of the carbon tells the projectionist how long his light will last. The Mazda lamp, however, may not give a full indication of when it is about to fail, and, therefore, means must be provided for the quick substitution of a new lamp.

Means also must be provided for the ready adjustment of both mirror and lamp. Since Mazda projective requires accurate work the adjustment must be quite fine. In some housings adjustment of the lamp must be made in the housings after the lamp is inserted. A device recently introduced, however, enables the lamp to be prepared, and accurately adjusted outside of the housing and thus is in readiness for instant insertion should the need arise.

The matter of current control apparatus for Mazda lamps is of the utmost importance. Good lamp performance demands a control which will not allow the lamp to be injured by overamperage. Several devices are on the market which answer this purpose. An ammeter is supplied to enable the projectionist to know when his lamp is at correct amperage.

Mazda lamps operate equally well on d. c. or a. c. With a. c., however, the control apparatus is greatly simplified and therefore Mazda projection is best adapted to theatres where the current supply is a. c.

Regulators are made both for 25 and 60 cycles. (Cycles refer to the number of alternations per second of the alternating current) 60 cycles is most common. They are also made for both 110 and 220 volts.

Fig. 10—A lamp setter, lamp socket and 900 watt motion picture lamp. This lamp socket does not embody a screw but works on the ball and socket principle. When the lamp is accurately centered for height, lateral and forms adjustment, the ball and socket joint is clamped, thus holding the lamp rigidly in place. By the aid of this device a considerable number of lamps can be accurately adjusted during spare moments ready for instant insertion in housing

ALTERNATING currents are controlled very simply, since the transformer principle is used. A transformer enables the voltage to be stepped up or down with very little loss of power. On D. C. to step the voltage down the usual method is to place a resistance in series.

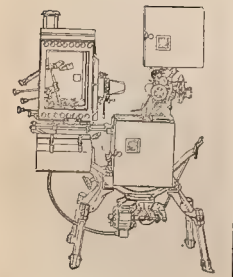
For instance, to get 900 watts or 30 amperes at 30 volts from 110 volts A C. requires with the A. C. regulators or transformer, a loss of only 90 watts. On D. C. however, where a straight resistance is used, to obtain 30 volts (.30 amperes) i. e., 900 watts, 2,400 watts must be wasted in the resistance.

On D. C. for efficient operation a motor generator set to change the current from direct to alternating, is best practice.

The alternating current thus developed is readily controlled by an efficient A. C. regulator.

When straight resistance is used, the reduction in current consumption over an arc projector is not great.

ACCESSORIES TO GOOD PROJECTION



To enable Mazda projection to be used for long throws and the larger pictures, a reflecting type screen is recommended. The Mazda lamp with its soft light is peculiarly adapted for use with such type of screens—that throw a large amount of the projected light back—instead of spreading it after the manner of a muslin sheet. A reflecting type screen is coming more and more into use where first class projection is desired.

Gentlemen:

Your #6B Power's Projection Machine which is in constant use in our Projection Room, has given every satisfaction, and you may safely depend upon the continuance of our business.

Thanking you, and assuring you of our co-operation, we are,

Yours faithfully,

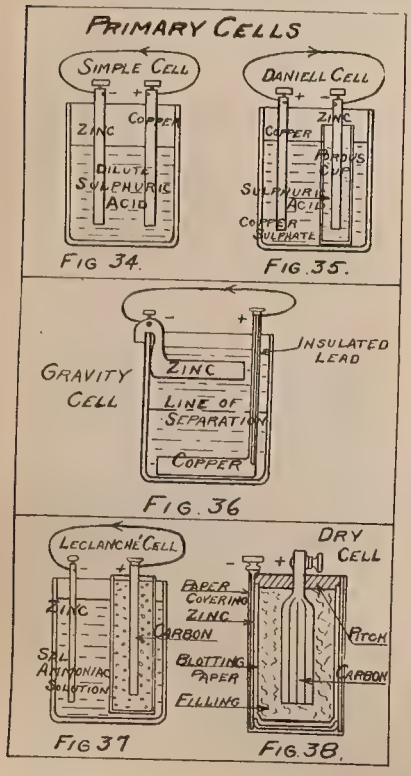
Primary Batteries



A PRIMARY battery or cell is a device for the direct transformation of chemical energy into electrical energy, and consists essentially of dissimiliar plates in a solution which acts more readily on one than on the other. A difference of potential is found between two such plates so that if they are joined by a wire an electric current will flow in this wire. The magnitude of the e. m. f. set up is dependent on the material used for the plates and the electrolyte, and for a certain combination of plates is dependent on their area.

A simple cell may be made up as shown in Fig. 34 by placing a plate of copper and a zinc rod in a dilute solution of sulphuric acid and connecting the terminals of these two metals with a wire. The current in the wire or the external circuit flows from the copper to the zinc and in the solution from the zinc to the copper. When an electric current flows, bubbles of hydrogen are formed on the immersed part of the copper plate, and the zinc rod wears away forming zinc sulphate with the solution.

The term battery is usually applied to an assembly of identical units in series, while the word cell denotes a single unit as assembled for the production of electrical energy.

A primary cell differs from a storage battery in that the chemically reacting parts require renewal, while in the case of the storage battery the chemical condition after a partial or complete discharge may be restored by reversing the current flow, i. e. placing the battery on charge.

The separate parts going to make up a primary cell are: the containing jar, electrodes with suitable connections and an electrolytic solution

Correct answers to questions of April 17 issue:

14. 4.85 ohms.
15. Yes, by the separate sections becoming bent together or grounded.
16. 110 ohms.
17. 2 amperes.
18. 1 ohm, 110 amps.
19. 3 amperes, 36.6 ohms.

either as a liquid or saturated into some absorbing material. In some types of cells the two electrodes are in different electrolytes which are separated by a porous cup.

Primary cells may be classified as wet batteries, dry batteries, and standard cells.

The wet battery was generally used at one time for laboratory testing, telephone, bells, and other devices requiring a small amount of energy. However in recent years the dry cell and small storage battery has largely supplanted its use.

A battery consists essentially of two metallic conductors dipped in an electrolyte. Copper or carbon is commonly used for the positive pole and zinc for the negative pole. The electrolyte may be sulphuric or nitric acid, sal-ammoniac or other salt.

On closed circuit i. e. when current is flowing the battery has a smaller e. m. f. or potential difference than an open circuit because of the internal resistance, the polarization, and the exhaustion of the battery. If E is the open circuit e. m. f and V the potential difference when the current I is flowing, then the internal resistance of the cell may be computed from the formula $r = (E-V)/I$. The value of E should be obtained by opening the circuit and measuring the e. m. f. across the terminals because of the polarization effect of the battery.

Daniell cell—This cell is shown by Fig. 35 and makes use of a porous cup to separate the liquids surrounding the electrodes. Copper sulphate is placed in the container in which the positive copper electrode is dipped. A porous cup containing the negative zinc electrode dipped in dilute sulphuric acid is also placed in the container. The e. m. f. of such a cell is between 1.07 and 1.14 which falls to a practically constant voltage of 1.1 when a current is flowing.
